"If you go inside of a house on the Internet, you can look at it from all different angles and even go up the stairs. Real estate agents use this to allow potential buyers to look at a home from across the country," Loehr said.

Ultimate Fakebook leads Internet band contest

PHIL KELLUM
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan band Ultimate Fakebook is competing in the Mentos Freshmaker Tour for a chance to play a show March 28 in Denver that will be broadcast on the Internet.

Bands for the Internet performance are chosen by the number of votes each band receives at the Mentos World Wide Web site.

The last day to vote is Friday. As of last week, Ultimate Fakebook was leading all eight bands in the contest. The top four bands will play the show in Denver.

The concert possibly could be seen by millions of Web surfers.

Ultimate Fakebook drummer Eric Melin said, "It's important to us because it's just a lot of exposure."

Interested fans can cast their votes at the Mentos Freshmaker Tour Web site at www.mentos.com.

Melin said it would be great if they got the chance to play in Denver.

"I'm just excited to play," he said. "I've never played live on the Internet before."

Vote for Ultimate Fakebook on the Mentos home page.

RAVE REVIEWS

From package to production, Braid gets job done.

PHIL KELLUM
Kansas State Collegian

This is by far the best packaging I have ever seen for a seven-inch single. It's packaged like a letter, with a postmarked stamp on the outside, and inside with the record is a sealed envelope containing a postcard, poem and lyrics from both bands. It's incredibly cool.

Braid takes up its side with "Forever Got Shorter," a great, driving emo song like the band is famous for. It's melodic and slightly poppy.

The arrangements are complex yet simple, and it's got great stop-start rhythms.

The guitars are delicate yet distorted, and the drum fills are great.

It sounds like a love song. This is a great song.

Flip it over and you get Kansas City, Mo.'s, own Get Up Kids with a song titled "I'm A Loner Dotti ... A Rebel." If you know your movie trivia, you'll know that comes from "Pee Wee's Big Adventure."

This song is about as poppy as it gets. The Get Up Kids can do no wrong. This is a great slab of driving and melodic emo.

The breakdowns are especially cool with their jerky rhythms and somewhat dissonant sound. This is wonderful.

Five stars easily. A must-have.

'Wade in the Water' only highlight of Make-Up album

PHIL KELLUM
Kansas State Collegian

The Make-Up is a band that must be experienced live to get the full effect. Even the band's two live albums don't even do it justice.

These former members of the Nation Of Ulysses and the Frumpies call their music "gospel yeh-yeh," a mix of gospel and French yeh-yeh music.

An easier way to describe it would be punk rock gospel.

The A side is a cover of the spiritual "Wade In The Water." It's a cool cover with Ian Svenonius' falsetto vocals carrying the tune. I like the Hammond organ solo toward the end, too.

The sound is great, with production courtesy of Brendan Canty of Fugazi.

This song is one of the highlights of the Make-Up's frenetic live shows. This version kind of falls apart at the end. It's worth the price of the record alone.

The B side is a remix of "Gospel 2000" by Super ESP. The original version appears on the Make-Up's second album, "Sound Verite."

It starts off promising with samples of Svenonius inciting a crowd to "Say yeah!" as he does about a billion times during live sets.

Then it goes downhill quickly. This is a bizarre remix. It's kind of dub, kind of hip hop.

It bears no resemblance to the original at all. Sometimes that's cool, but not this time around. I can't even recognize it.

I give this one three stars, solely for "Wade In The Water." Pick this up if you're a Make-Up fan.

Administration, SGA work to keep balance of power

as well," he said.

The administration legally has the power to overrule SGA decisions, but Associate Dean of Student Life Carla Jones said that power isn't used.

"We seek to allow them to develop as student leaders by allowing them to set the agenda for student government," she said.

Kulaga said there could be two different ways of looking at the administration's role in student government.

"Administrators can overrule Senate, but they never have," Kulaga said. "One incorrect way of looking at that is we don't care what the students do or don't feel comfortable overruling the students."

"The accurate way ... is that it is a great example of the fact that there is a relationship that exists between administration and SGA," he said. "What's the point of giving you the power to decide when every time you decide I overrule you?"

Bosco said the administration and SGA work together as partners.

"We've been partners on many, many projects, but not just today, but 10, 20, 30 years ago," he said. "This has allowed us to come up with better solutions. We've all benefited from this collaborated effort."

There have been tough times, as well, Bosco said.

"We have our tension just like any other major university, but the bottom line seems to be that students have been willing to roll up their sleeves and work alongside faculty and administrative leaders to make things better," he said.

SGA has many responsibilities, but Kulaga said he doesn't think it has too much power.

"I think there is a good balance because the students have the ability to pass legislation, enact resolutions and bills to impact the campus community," Kulaga said, "but ultimately they report up through the line to the university president. So there is a check and a balance."

The administration acts as the check on student government, but administrators agreed with some student leaders who said the Collegian is also part of the system, acting as a check on decisions made by both groups.

"We're a public state university, and I think the students in particular should have an aggressive watchdog approach," Bosco said.

"I believe we've had that kind of relationship for many years, and I applaud it. I wouldn't want to work anywhere else."

He said the Collegian makes administrators and student leaders accountable to the student body.

"I like the idea that when a decision is made, I have to reflect privately that the decision made on Tuesday could very well be on the front page of our students' paper the next morning," Bosco said. "I think that gives students, faculty and administration pause that there are no secrets here."

Kulaga said the Collegian has an obligation to report factual information.

"They shouldn't necessarily have an agenda. I think it's possible for papers, not just the Collegian, to have an ax to grind or a protocol agenda of their own," he said.

Jones said the Collegian had a different role to play, rather than a check on student government and administrators.

"I look at a check in the classic sense of who has the legal responsibility, and I don't think the paper is a check," she said.

"The media's job is to inform people and should seek to inform in the most comprehensive way possible."

Some student leaders said ultimate power is with students, but Jones said the power is combined.

"The power is a combination of students, faculty and administration," she said.

president and CEO, informed committee members of the Foundation's recent commitment of a percentage of funds taken from all new endowments that could amount to between $300,000 and $500,000 a year.

"Every one of the deans agreed and the administration has agreed on this," Hellebust said.

It has not been decided if the Foundation's support will begin on July 1 or Jan. 1, 1999.

Hobrock said it is not clear what a lack of student support would mean for the library.

Referring to Monday's Privilege Fee Committee meeting, he said he regrets the outcome.

"It makes it appear the students are rejecting this and that they have no stake in ensuring periodicals are funded," Hobrock said.

Hobrock said faculty are upset to see services used by undergraduates profit from the loss of faculty research tools. Now, money saved from journal subscription cuts is being used to fund student resources.

"We will have $628,000 of new money next year and $300,000 will go to inflation," Hobrock said. "I think we shouldn't lose heart. It's no small thing to add $300,000 to your base every year."

Students fear military action will destroy homeland

CLAUDETTE RILEY
Kansas State Collegian

A long way from their homes, students from the Middle East wrestle with concern for the safety of family and friends on the eve of a possible military action against Iraq led by U.S. forces.

These students studying at K-State brace as the country where they live considers military action in the form of air strikes against their homeland.

Khaled Khatib, graduate student in food science, has lived in the United States for two years and said the news of a possible war is preoccupying.

"I can't say I'm with Saddam, but I don't think it's right to bomb these people," Khatib said. "I'm not saying I'm with the U.S. too, but I don't agree with Saddam."

Khatib, a native of Amman, Jordan, who also considers himself a Palestinian, said his family is worried about a possible war.

"It's hard to talk to my parents because they are so tense. They have been buying food and things to have them in the house," Khatib said. "If anything happens, so much would be destroyed culturally and economically."

Through conversations with his family, Khatib said he learned camps have already been built in east Jordan to accommodate the projected Iraqi refugees.

"There's already not enough water for the Jordanians," Khatib said. "A war would be hard. This won't benefit anyone."

The distance between his home in Jordan and where the possible targets in Iraq are is comparable to the distance between Manhattan and Wichita.

"I cannot study very well when there is fighting or a war at home," Khatib said. "Anything that happens to my family will affect me and what can I do to help as a student here?"

Khatib, 24, said he remembers the turmoil of living in Jordan during the Gulf War. When the war broke out, Khatib said he was studying for university entrance exams.

"My GPA was lower than I expected, and it was not easy to concentrate," Khatib said.

Although that military action wasn't on Jordanian soil, Khatib said countries in the region could feel the tension.

"We couldn't hear the fighting, but when we go to the west side of Jordan, we would see the old bombs and we would see the Jordan army moving around," Khatib said. "Everyone was panicking, and I'm sure it's like that now."

The surge of American patriotism and support for the United States troops during a war can cause a backlash of public sentiment toward the Middle East and some Arab-Americans.

Disparaging comments and stereotypes contribute to the uneasiness felt by students from the region.

Majed Khan, graduate student in electrical engineering, was born in Pakistan and raised in Saudi Arabia, where he still has close family. Khan has traveled throughout Arab countries in the Middle East. He is working on his second degree at K-State and has lived in the United States for eight years.

He said Western stereotypes of Muslims and Arabs are often inaccurate and negative.

"It bothers me. Anyone who has good feelings toward humanity feels bad that people's lives are in danger," Khan said.

The United Nations' sanctions against Iraq have produced horrible circumstances for the Iraqi citizens, Khan said.

"The sanctions hurt everyone, especially the children," he said. "It's inhumane when women and children are suffering and families in society don't have food or medicine."

Khan said Islam is a religion, not one specific country. He said misinformation and the negative portrayal of Muslims by media troubles him.

"Pretty much everyone from the Middle East is classified as a terrorist, but that's not right. We are regular people and humane people," Khan said.

"People should be better educated about

Students express opinions, beliefs about SGA power

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

The elected and appointed members of Student Governing Association have the power to make decisions concerning a student body of more than 20,000.

Where does the student body, which is the non-elected and non-appointed members of SGA, feel the power is at K-State? Do they have any power?

Alyssa Ohlde, senior in advertising, said there is dual power at K-State.

"First of all, the administration has power because no matter what students think, there is always a better way to go about it," Ohlde said.

"Then the athletic department — just because of that whole thing with stadium expansion — they come with power saying we're not going to give you any more seats," she said.

Ohlde said individual students have power only if they know someone in SGA.

"We're well represented, but only if you know one of the student representatives. You can always go to meetings, but it seems like you always have to be in search of them."

Amy Holthaus, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said SGA has the right amount of power.

"They influence what students think as far as dealing with things pertaining to the campus and student life," she said. "I think there is a fair balance between what the state governs about the university and what the SGA does as far as allocating."

Santhi Gandu, senior in management information systems, said she believes SGA carries a lot of power.

"It seems like everything they have wanted to do has been implemented and if not, they seem to work around it and work with the students," Gandu said.

Gandu said she is glad the administration has given SGA a lot of power.

An out-of-control truck damaged two Aggieville businesses and three parked cars early Wednesday morning.

William Douglas Hye, 20, freshman in engineering, was arrested for DUI and reckless driving after reportedly driving a black 1989 Chevrolet truck into the exterior wall of Game Guy, 709 N. 12th St.

At 1:43 a.m. Hye turned the truck around, backing through the glass doors on the side of Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbecue, 1200 Moro St.

Chris Helvey, senior in finance, said he called 911 after hearing the crash. He saw the accident from his apartment window, above businesses across the street from Pat's Blue Rib'n.

"I thought at first it was someone out throwing bricks from the fire scene," he said.

The truck accelerated running straight across 12th Street into a parked car. The truck turned and headed north until it reached Kearney Street, where it apparently hit another car and then came to rest, Helvey said.

Katie Teply, sophomore in biology, said the truck hit a tree, and Hye abandoned it, running on foot.

Chris Hoal, a bartender at Pat's Blue Rib'n, said Harding Glass replaced the doors a few hours after the accident. Replacing the doors cost $4,000. There was no damage to the brick work surrounding the doors.

"There's still tire marks on our mats," he said.

Pat's Blue Rib'n was open during normal hours Wednesday, less about 16 bottles of liquor worth about $200. They were stolen from the bar in the early morning before the doors were replaced. Hoal said. He also said a cabinet full of alcohol remained untouched.

"That's probably a lot for them to carry off in their hands," he said.

Game Guy had already sustained $1,000 worth of damage from the fire that leveled Greek's Pizzeria, Club Karrington and Adventure Travel International on Saturday morning.

Tom Mahoney of Game Guy said he notified the building's owner of the damage, but the store would remain open.

Hye was issued a notice to appear for two counts of fleeing the scene of an accident and was released by the Riley County Police Department after posting $1,000 bond. Neither he nor his roommates could not be reached for comment.

RCPD is still investigating the case.

K-State/KU Blood Drive 1998

Out for blood

BLOOD DRIVE DESIGNED TO SAVE PEOPLE'S LIVES, BEAT UNIVERSITY OF KANSAS.

In a competition against the University of Kansas, the campus blood drive is falling behind. From Monday morning until noon Wednesday, the drive had only seen 175 donors, significantly fewer donors than last semester's numbers.

"We've started to get more in," said Mark Barkman, the student coordinator working with the Red Cross to organize this semi-annual event, "but right now we're getting in a three-day cumulative time what we were getting in one day last semester."

Anyone interested in donating blood can stop in from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. until Friday in the Union Ballroom. Donors must weigh at least 110 pounds, be in good health and pass a short mini-physical.

"We believe that part of the reason is due to illnesses going around campus," Barkman said. "Also, last semester it was taking people longer to get through, and we scared them off."

A new computer check-in system had just been installed, but Barkman said there is a higher number of staff, and now everyone understands the new system. Donating should take no more than two hours, he said.

Barkman is the Blood Drive Chairman of Delta Tau Delta, the greek sponsor of the event.

"We've been working hand in hand with the Wichita Red Cross, and our goal is to get as many people as we can to the campus blood drive," he said.

Delta Tau Delta is hoping the competition with KU for the blood drive trophy will motivate more people to get involved. Since the first competition in 1993, K-State has won the trophy for all but one semester.

"We used to get upwards of 1,100 donors easy in the early 1980s," Barkman said, "but the numbers dropped off at the end of the 1980s and 1990s. Since the competition has been in place, the numbers have been on the rise."

Barkman said that last semester, K-State donations totaled in the mid-800s, while KU only reached the mid-600s.

The KU blood drive is not scheduled for a few more weeks, but Barkman said K-State needs to motivate more people to volunteer.

"We really need to get our donor numbers higher so KU doesn't think they have a chance," Barkman said.

However, competition aside, Barkman suggested another reason for donating blood.

"There is no synthetic product for blood," Barkman said. "It doesn't take all that much, and it's an essential gift for those in need."

ABOVE: DAROLD LAUGHTON, A MOBILE UNIT ASSISTANT FOR THE RED CROSS, TAKES A BREAK DURING A LULL IN ACTIVITY AT THE BLOOD DRIVE WEDNESDAY IN THE K-STATE STUDENT UNION. FROM MONDAY MORNING TO NOON WEDNESDAY, THERE ONLY HAD BEEN 175 BLOOD DONORS, A SIGNIFICANTLY SMALLER NUMBER THAN LAST SEMESTER'S DRIVE. THE BLOOD DRIVE WILL LAST UNTIL 4:30 P.M. FRIDAY.

NATIONAL NEWS

Legendary announcer dies Wednesday after 60-year career with millions of fans

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. — Harry Caray, who took millions of fans out to the ballgame in a broadcasting career that spanned almost 60 years, died Wednesday four days after collapsing at a Valentine's Day dinner. He was believed to be 77.

The often offbeat Hall of Fame announcer covered baseball's greats from Musial to Mays to Maddux. Holy Cow! as he would say.

He was hospitalized Saturday after falling ill at a nightclub-restaurant with his wife, Dutchie. Doctors said his heart had suddenly changed rhythm, restricting oxygen to his brain. He died at 4:10 p.m., said Harlan Corenman, Eisenhower Medical Center spokesman.

A broadcaster since 1941, Caray became a household name through his Cubs' games for WGN-TV, carried nationally by many cable systems.

He was immediately recognizable for his thick, oversized glasses and raspy, sing-along rendition of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" over the public address system during the seventh-inning stretch.

Caray was born Harry Christopher Carabina in St. Louis. His precise age was unclear; he brushed aside questions about it. The Cubs media guide said he was born March 1, 1920, but other accounts had him as much as five years older.

In recent years, Caray had cut back his broadcasting on WGN. He cut out road trips with the Cubs last year, saying, "Road trips are a grind for ballplayers, and they can be pretty tough on announcers, too."

Former midshipman self inflicts wound, placed under 24-hour suicide watch

FORT WORTH, Texas — The former Naval Academy midshipman sentenced to life in prison for the murder of a romantic rival was placed under a 24-hour suicide watch Wednesday after wounding herself with a razor blade.

Diane Zamora, convicted and sentenced on Tuesday, cut herself on the upper left arm sometime before Wednesday morning, said Tarrant County Jail commander James Skidmore.

The wound, which Skidmore called superficial, stopped bleeding and Zamora concealed it from guards. It was noticed by a psychologist examining her Wednesday afternoon.

Although the cut was not life-threatening and Zamora told officials she was not trying to kill herself, officials placed her under 24-hour supervision.

"To be on the precautionary side, she has been classified as potentially suicidal," he said. "She will remain under that classification until she goes to state prison."

Skidmore said it wasn't clear how long Zamora would remain in the county lockup before her transfer to Huntsville. Zamora won't be eligible for parole until 2038.

The prosecutors who secured her conviction, meanwhile, are setting their sights on her ex-boyfriend and alleged accomplice.

"We're only half done," lead prosecutor Mike Parrish said.

Robert Swofford, David Graham's attorney, said he won't accept a plea bargain offer by the state that would give his client a 30-year sentence for allegedly killing a 16-year-old girl.

"That's out of the question," Swofford said. "We will go to trial with this case and you will see a very different trial than Diane Zamora's."

Swofford wouldn't talk about his defense strategy, citing a gag order.

Zamora was convicted of capital murder in the Dec. 4, 1995, slaying of Adrienne Jones. Prosecutors alleged she ordered Graham to kill the girl after he had a fling with Jones.

The couple were high school seniors at the time of the killing. Both graduated with honors and earned prestigious spots in military academies the next year, she at the Naval Academy, he at the Air Force Academy. They were arrested in September 1996 after Zamora's academy roommates said she had admitted to a killing.

Military helicopter explodes into flames killing 4 passengers; 5th unaccounted for

JOHNSONDALE, Calif. — A military helicopter on a search-and-rescue training mission crashed in central California's Sequoia National Forest on Wednesday, killing at least four people.

Sheriff's Lt. Mike Gutsch said the Huey, from the China Lake Naval Weapons Center, "basically burned to the ground" after crashing near the Kern River in a remote section of the southern Sierra.

Five Navy personnel were aboard, but the fifth person's fate was not known.

"Four crew members have been confirmed dead, with one remaining unaccounted for at this time," a weapons center spokesperson stated in a news release.

The search for the fifth person was scheduled to resume this morning. Rescue workers were unable to keep looking at night because the crash site is too rugged.

Gutsch said a citizen saw the helicopter, which can hold nine passengers, on the ground just before noon with smoke coming out of the aircraft.

"Then it burst into flames," he said.

The helicopter was fully engulfed in flames when California forestry, sheriff's deputies and U.S. forest personnel arrived after the crash was reported at 12:28 p.m.

Officials said they have no idea what caused the crash. Weather was clear and there was no wind.

All the victims were Navy personnel from China Lake, about 60 miles east across the Mojave Desert from the crash site. Their names were not released pending notification of next-of-kin.

B-1B bomber crew parachutes to safety; military plane not dispatched to Iraq

MARION, Ky. — Four crew members of an Air Force bomber on a training mission parachuted to safety moments before the plane crashed and exploded Wednesday in a muddy cow field in western Kentucky.

The plane flew about 10 miles after the crew members ejected.

Two walked to a phone and called for help, while another was found walking on a road. The fourth's parachute caught in a tree, and he suffered head and neck injuries. All four were taken to the hospital. Their conditions were not immediately known.

The B-1B bomber was flying out of Dyess Air Force Base near Abilene, Texas, when it went down near Mattoon, a rural area five miles northeast of Marion near the Ohio River, said First Lt. Eric Elliott of Langley Air Force Base in Virginia.

The bomber was not being dispatched to the Persian Gulf and was not carrying munitions, Air Force officials said.

Designed in the 1970s as a nuclear bomb-dropper, the plane has been converted since then for conventional missions and is being deployed to the Middle East for the first time in a potential combat role.

Presidential platform includes listening, keeping students informed

CANDIDATES TAKE PRIDE IN HONESTY, INTEGRITY; SEE K-STATE AS COMMUNITY.

JOSHUA STURGILL
Kansas State Collegian

Student body presidential and vice presidential candidates Chris Van Tyle and John Stucky said they see K-State as a community.

Van Tyle, senior in animal science industries and agricultural education, and Stucky, junior in agricultural technology management and agricultural economics, announced their campaign Wednesday afternoon at the sundial north of Hale Library.

"Our vision is to be involved with the students and interact with the student body," Stucky said. "We're students, and we are interested in issues that affect students."

Van Tyle said he and Stucky know that students come to K-State to get an education, to grow and to learn. He said he will work to benefit every group on campus.

The pair said its platform is based on a policy of integrity.

"Our campaign is all about accountability and availability," Van Tyle said. "Whatever we can do to let students know what's happening and to keep them informed, that's important."

Stucky said listening is central to the campaign and the possible administration.

"We want to listen to the students so they can tell us what's pressing that we might not be looking at," Stucky said.

Van Tyle said he and Stucky are never too busy to talk to anyone who has an issue.

The team's campaign will focus on a number of issues, including community involvement, parking and campus safety.

"We think campus safety is a very important issue. We want to stress awareness of the escort service, but mostly we want to work with the city to improve crosswalks," Van Tyle said.

Aside from the issues involved in running for office, Van Tyle and Stucky said they also hope to make a few changes and enjoy the campaigning process.

"We're just students," Stucky said. "We can represent the students. We've got new ideas, and we want to have fun."

The candidates aren't ordinary politicians, Van Tyle said.

"We're not the typical political types. We want to do things that haven't been done before, and we're honest and hardworking," he said.

At this point in the process, Stucky said his biggest concern is for people to be informed about all the candidates' plans.

"We want people to listen to us and know what we have to say. We want the person to be elected who will do the best job," he said.

Student library fee to be discussed in Senate despite Privilege Fee Committee vote

KELLEE MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

Despite the lack of support from the Privilege Fee Committee on Monday for a student fee to fund periodical subscriptions in Hale Library, Student Senate will hear discussion about the fee at its meeting tonight.

Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock said he anticipates a number of students speaking during the meeting's open period, asking senators to consider a student privilege fee without a recommendation from the committee.

Jason Dechant, a library employee, leads a group of students who support the proposed $328,000 privilege fee. The group, composed of graduate and undergraduate students from all university colleges, has been working on the student library fee for a while, Dechant said.

"I think it is the student's responsibility to support the fee. Our group demonstrates that there are students who are interested and do support the fee, contrary to what has been said," Dechant said.

Due to the lack of support from the Privilege Fee Committee, Dechant said his group will circumvent the committee and exhaust its resources to find other ways to get the student fee passed.

"The Privilege Fee Committee didn't reject the fee. They just failed to take action. It didn't die and so right now it's just sitting there," Dechant said.

Hobrock said he has been working with the student group as well as talking with senators from each college. He said he has heard a positive response from the campus. Tonight's Student Senate open period will provide a much broader hearing for this positive response, he said.

"I still believe that the student fee is in the best interests of the university," he said. "When the Legislature does not take a direct response, we are left to our own devices, and we must find a creative approach to our problems."

Dechant said he felt the 85-cent fee proposal was fair and was proposed because it would match money already committed by the Kansas Legislature and the KSU Foundation.

Hobrock said the library task force — which recommended state, Foundation and student support for the library — researched the three-part proposal for six months, looking at all alternatives.

"If the task force had not spent six months researching this proposal, we might be more willing to back off more quickly," he said.

Dechant said students should not be the brunt of the entire funding need, but they should match the incoming money from the state and the Foundation.

Committee members said the Legislature should do more to help with library funding, but Hobrock said K-State is already receiving $328,000, which is as much as legislators will give.

Dechant said the committee and Senate were elected to carry out the interests of the students — not to stifle them.

"Our attendance tomorrow night will demonstrate to the Senate that there is a swell of support for the student library fee," he said.

Laura Buller, president of Engineering College Council, said her council has no official plans to attend tonight's meeting. Council members informally approved supporting the fee at their meeting Monday.

Buller said interests would be repre-

Red Cross blood drive needs student support

There are a multitude of reasons to give blood. Most importantly, it saves lives. Sometimes it sounds like a tired cliché, but there definitely is a need for the product. Blood can't be synthesized. Sometimes the only chances people have to live are blood transfusions. Unfortunately, that argument doesn't move enough people to donate. There are always excuses, such as not having enough time or thinking other people will donate enough. The problem is that too many people are using these excuses. In this semester's blood drive, donating is at about 55 percent of its goal. There is a substantial drop of donors from last semester. Obviously there is a bit of desperation on the part of the American Red Cross to get donors. Representatives from the blood drive suspect the drop in numbers is due to illnesses and frustration with the time it took to donate last semester.

However, this time, there is a new computer check-in system and a higher number of staff who all understand the system. Now donating takes less than two hours. Some people are actually afraid to donate blood. Donating blood is safe and doesn't hurt much. If nothing else, the blood drive is a chance to compete against the University of Kansas, which has only won the drive competition once since 1993. The blood drive is taking place from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. until Friday in the Union Ballroom. There are some qualifications to donate, including being at least 110 pounds and at least 17 years old. Donors have to be in general good health and not recently pierced or tattooed. Drinking a lot of liquid and not planning too much physical activity on the day of donating is recommended. And while everyone is encouraged to participate in the blood drive, remember that you can give blood all year.

Rampaging popularity of Sport Utility Vehicles leaves truck consumers

"Voices were heard. They just weren't listened to."

The words of an automotive industry engineer, quoted by a New York Times reporter who attended a two-day conference organized by the Society of Automotive Engineers that took place last December.

What was the engineer talking about? The design and marketing of Sport Utility Vehicles. Although the automotive market has grown by about a quarter over the past six years, sales of the largest SUVs, which are Detroit's most profitable models, have risen 500 percent. In the face of common sense issues regarding consumer safety, automotive industry marketing executives have decided that hefty profits from the sale of incredibly popular SUVs outweigh a concern for public safety.

The Society of Automotive Engineers organized the December conference, hoping to raise the public's awareness of the dangers presented by SUVs. The picture painted by researchers present at the conference, as well as data from recently released studies performed by the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, indicate that anyone who shares the road with an SUV should be concerned. While sharing the road typically refers to other drivers, this is a situation that concerns both drivers and pedestrians.

The fact that SUVs represent a danger to other drivers is not difficult to fathom. SUVs are built, ostensibly, to serve the needs of the driver who drives in areas without well-defined roadways. For off-roading, a high carriage clearance and frame stiffness are advantageous.

These characteristics result in a heavier vehicle. The higher clearance requires larger wheels, tires, etc. The stiffer frame weighs more, and a frame that weighs more requires sturdier supporting materials. The recent marketing emphasis on big-bigger-bigger has led to some of the largest vehicles ever mass produced, and a situation where even the heaviest autos are outweighed by the lightest SUVs. Eighteen feet long and more than 5,200 pounds, the Chevy Suburban really does dwarf the Jeep Cherokee, a puny 3,600 pounds. One can't fail to mention the 17-foot, 5,600-pound Lincoln Navigator — if you really liked the movie "Titanic," maybe you should just buy one of these and take it out to Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

Anyone who's studied a modicum of physics can see that these characteristics spell disaster for an automobile involved in a collision with an SUV. Besides the fact that heavier vehicles have inherently more energy to transfer, even when traveling the same speed as lighter vehicles. Also, a SUV's stiffer frame will transmit more of the energy during the collision.

Even worse, the high carriage of most SUVs misplaces the energy. Many of today's automobiles are designed to survive brutal side-impact collisions, protecting the passengers from major injury. The assumption, however, is that the bumper of the colliding vehicle will strike the auto below the level of the passenger's window, activating side-impact airbags and allowing seat belts to do their job.

With today's high-riding SUVs, where the bumper assembly is at window height, the energy of the SUV is going to be transmitted into the window and the thinnest part of the auto's frame, resulting in a much larger number of head and chest injuries suffered by passengers.

Sadly enough, the data confirms the danger posed by SUVs: Automobile passengers struck broadside by SUVs are 27 times more likely to die than the passengers in the SUV; 47 times more likely if the automobile weighs less than 2,500 pounds.

In the last year alone, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration reported that 5,447 people died in collisions between a car and a light truck (the class that SUVs are placed in). By way of comparison, only 82 people have died as a result of unsafe airbags, despite the much larger public outcry.

However, the characteristics that make a heavyweight SUV so dangerous are exactly the characteristics that make them desirable to most consumers. Many SUV purchasers pull out the trump card when justifying their purchase: "I bought it so I can guarantee the safety of my children." Does that mean everyone who drives a Honda doesn't care about their family? I think not. This brand of thinking is both elitist, given the price tag of most SUVs, and more importantly, just plain wrong.

If your SUV rolls over, which they are more likely to do than an automobile, the passengers have 2 1/2 times more risk of dying than the passengers in an automobile that rolls over.

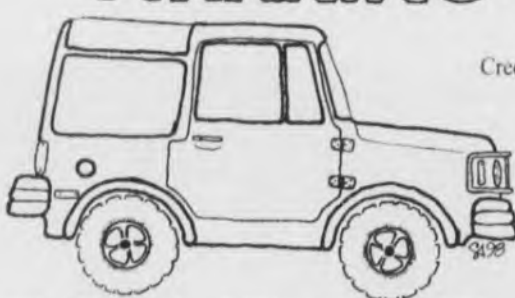

Moreover, I'm not certain I would want to teach my children that the way to protect one's family is by driving a vehicle that is much more likely to maim others and kill pedestrians. Kill pedestrians? Indeed, the largest SUVs, with their lack of maneuverability, account for a disproportionate share of pedestrian deaths as well.

What all these factors amount to is a pretty strong argument that automotive manufacturers should significantly redesign SUVs so that they pose less threat to their occupants and those with whom they share the road. If the evidence isn't convincing enough, just wait a couple years. At that time, we'll begin to share the road with the owners of second-hand SUVs. Not only will the average SUV be less well-maintained — cutting braking ability and maneuverability even further — the owners will be of a different nature. The high price tag of SUVs limits ownership in such a way that the average owner is a middle-aged parent, statistically, the safest group of drivers on the road.

Who purchases these safe drivers' vehicles at the used-car lot? Drivers in our age group, and even worse, high school students. Finally, which cars end up being cheapest at the used car lot? The ones that dealers have too many of — typically, models that were trendy several years before, which everyone got rid of at the same time.

The American automobile industry recovered from its doldrums of the 1980s by marketing high quality autos of innovative design. How unfortunate for us they decided to stop listening to their engineers.

WARNING:

WEIGHT MAY EXCEED 5,000 LBS. MAY CAUSE HEAD AND CHEST INJURY. PASSENGERS HAVE 2-2 1/2 TIMES MORE RISK OF DYING THAN PASSENGERS IN AN AUTOMOBILE IF ROLLED OVER. MAY EXPERIENCE LACK OF MANEUVERABILITY.

Meaning in life exists after losing one's hair

Men, what is your worst fear? Well, besides that. I was thinking of balding, the bane of our half of the species. Actually women bald too, but no one is supposed to discuss it.

So what's so bad about balding anyway? Those who find it objectionable say it makes them feel old, self-conscious about their looks or less self-confident.

I don't find hair loss so bad, and mine is going so fast that when I get out of the shower it looks like there is a kitten curled up on the drain. I'm only 21.

Personally, I like the ancient idea that some men are so brilliant and fiery that their overwhelming passion burns out the roots of their hair. I'm sure a bald guy came up with that one, and the rest of us among the bald and the beautiful appreciate the sentiment.

Honestly, what's so appalling about losing your hair? It is a natural process, usually coming with age, and some women find bald men sexy. Hence the reason the chrome dome has been passed down through the gene pool. Many women might find a bald guy less attractive, but that's a bit shallow. We don't need people like that in our lives anyway.

However, many of the men out there are ashamed of their receding hairlines or male pattern baldness, and they do some strange things.

Attempts to regain that full head of hair range from toupees to spray paint. I think the spray paint for your head is a little sick; you've all seen the commercials. The guy has a bald spot, so they just hose it down with some Sears Weather Beater, and he's good for three winters! You know a couple of red-necked handy men came up with this one.

One of the two, we'll call him Dave, was about to go out on his first date in 10 years, and his buddy Jimbo says, "Hey buddy, you got one hell of a disked-under patch there on your noggin'. Hey I know, Let's head out to the garage. I got some stove enamel out there that'll take care of that in a jiffy." Then the dollar signs rang up in Dave's eyes. But, that's not the worst of it.

Moving up the scale of hideousness, we hit hair plugs. Boy, do these things look natural. Natural if you happen to be a 1950s Ken doll. They make your head look like it's been clear-cut for logging.

The most revolting process on the market is the snap-on toupee. They actually surgically implant the female part of the snaps into your head, so you look like something from "Hellraiser" when your toupee is off.

The only real upside to this one is the ability to scare away those door-to-door salvation salesmen. "Good afternoon, could I interest you in some literature... (eye contact, man makes a cross with his fingers). Back to the pit with you, hellspawn!" Followed by the man running away so fast that he does a triple gainer over the hood of a parked car.

But, if you are so self-conscious you feel you need to spend hundreds or thousands of dollars for a piece of hair that will fool a 3-year-old for five to 10 minutes, depending on the quality, at least have some fun with it.

Being a brunette myself, if I ever get a toupee, it will be either white or red. If it's not going to fool anyone, you might as well make them stare and wonder. I'll tip my toupee to ladies as I pass them on the street. "Good afternoon, ma'am," just to watch their eyes bug. I'll always take it off during the national anthem; and when I go into a building, it's rude to wear hats indoors, you know. If I go to a nice restaurant, I'll check my toupee in at the coatroom.

If you have nosy neighbors, you can really mess with them. Take your toupee for a walk. Put a leash on it and drag it behind you complaining, "Fluffy isn't taking to the leash well."

Then a few weeks later, get yourself one of those invisible dog leashes (the ones you get at the carnival with the wire in them), put your toupee in the muzzle of the leash and walk proudly down the street. Make sure to smile and wave at the neighbors. You might stop and brag about how well Fluffy did in obedience school. If they ever ask to pet him say, "Better not, he gets nervous around strangers, and he bites."

So if your hair looks like the Germans in 1944 with the Russians advancing from the bald spot, and the United States, French and British marching in from the hairline, have some fun with it. Think of the positives. You have extra skin surface area for vitamin D synthesis.

Balding is motivation to work out and get your ear pierced so you can go as Mr. Clean to your next Halloween bash. As I heard some girls sitting behind me in class comment, for the nearsighted it's easier to read the reflection of the professor's notes bouncing off your head than to look down to the front of the room.

I admit there are negatives. For instance, the fact that the follicles seem to migrate to other parts of your body. Hopefully, the migration will stop before it gets to the point where you can hide on a bare skin rug, while naked, by laying face down. But it's not all that bad.

So you're losing your hair. So what. Don't be shallow and self-centered. As long as you have your friends and loved ones, who needs hair anyway? Think of the money you'll save on shampoo in the long run. Above all else, remember that friends don't let friends comb-over.

Individual change vital to ending racism

A predominately black church is burnt to the ground in Alabama, and a white man is mugged in Chicago Heights.

A Turk home is firebombed in eastern Germany, and a Tutsi village is slaughtered in Rwanda. Racism pervades all nationalities and cultures. No one is clean. Once members of all races understand that racism, evident at different levels, is part of human nature, the cleansing can begin.

People are good at hating each other. It is much easier to push someone out of a culture than to assimilate them.

This problem is not as obvious in the Midwest, as compared to other regions, because the vast majority is white. In other areas of the United States and around the world, the problem of racism is devastating.

Everyone, except for the most flagrant, thinks they are clean. "I have plenty of black (white, Hispanic, etc.) friends." The fact that you noticed, and singled out, those friends is evidence you notice race.

A truly nonracial attitude doesn't notice color at all. It doesn't cross your mind. Of this, we are all guilty. It is human nature to notice someone who is different in appearance, attitude or behavior than yourself. It is human nature to notice race.

Humans are frightened of change. Obviously, the assimilation of another race or culture takes change. Therefore, people are frightened of the changes that another culture will bring to their own.

The majority must be forced to accept the minority, because it is human nature to reject.

As educated individuals, we must fight the urge to reject. We have learned through the ages that all human beings deserve equal rights and privileges.

Everyone is not the same, as we all belong to a different culture, but that change we must make is not bad, but good.

By mixing cultures, we achieve a hybrid better than the separate cultures themselves.

We have come a long way in the fight against our instincts. There is a long road ahead, but we have made a significant start. The next step involves understanding ourselves. We are all at fault, due to our instincts to resist change.

Let's not make excuses and provide evidence to prove we don't notice race. Accept the fact that we do, and treat people the same. Afford them the basic rights they deserve and that our Constitution protects. Name calling does not move our culture forward but stalls its progress.

The change has to occur inside the individual. We all have instincts to reject. It is a hard fight, but we are making progress.

Tax bill to get more revisions in Legislature

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Legislative negotiators will bring carving knives to the bargaining table to whittle a $225 million tax relief package to a level acceptable to the House, Senate and Gov. Bill Graves.

On Wednesday, the House voted 122-1 to pass the bill and return it to the Senate with $56 million more in tax cuts than when it left that chamber two weeks ago.

House and Senate conferees will begin working next week to come up with the tax relief figure acceptable to all. Legislative leaders remained hopeful of delivering the bill to Graves by the end of next week.

The House vote followed a five-hour debate Tuesday, when Republicans, with a 77-48 majority, rejected all but one small amendment offered by Democrats trying to rewrite the bill.

Even so, all Democrats were on board for Wednesday's vote. However, some still complained about a provision repealing the state inheritance tax and adopting a state estate tax tied to the federal estate tax code.

Democrats wanted to increase inheritance tax exemptions for wealth inherited from parents, grandparents and children from $30,000 to $1.3 million.

"We made one bad choice, the inheritance tax," said House Minority Leader Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita. "In spite of one bad choice, this bill still is better than the Senate version."

The lone vote against the bill came from Rep. Ellen Samuelson, R-Newton, who said, "This bill is just too rich for the people I represent."

Samuelson is worried lawmakers might have to reduce spending for state programs to pay for the $225 million revenue loss. She said she could vote for a bill with $190 million or $195 million in cuts.

The question for the conferees will be how much must be cut from the bill to bring the state's revenue loss to an acceptable level.

Chairwoman Audrey Langworthy of the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee will be chairwoman of the conference committee.

Candidates focus on student loans, parking

► PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES MOVE TO HAVE FUN WHILE MAKING MANHATTAN STUDENT-FRIENDLY.

ALECIA TERRELL
Kansas State Collegian

Bret Glendening and Shayne Castelano said they aren't running for student body president and vice president to boost their résumés.

The two announced their candidacy Wednesday inside Hale Library.

Glendening, senior in agricultural economics and political science, and Castelano, senior in biochemistry, said their campaign will focus on issues that matter to students. As president and member of Student Governing Association, Glendening said he would represent students, not the administration.

"We want to break the trend of philosophy in current and past SGA leaderships where students represent the administration," he said. "That is wrong. The student body president and vice president should represent the students," Glendening said.

The running mates said parking, library funding and student loans will be the focus of their campaign. Castelano said money from the City-University Tax Fund should be used to establish a citywide shuttle system to alleviate student parking problems.

The tax fund holds money paid in campus sales tax, which pays for projects that benefit the university and the city of Manhattan.

"We will try to work with the city-university fund for about the next three to five years. This university fund is the base for the citywide shuttle system," Castelano said.

After establishing a shuttle system, he said other revenues from the city-university fund could be used to maintain it.

"We would try to allocate 40 percent of those funds for upkeep of the equipment, which should decrease some of the parking problem," Castelano said.

Glendening said library funding would also be a focus of his administration.

"We are currently standing in a building that is being underfunded by the state and students as well. We need to come up with a plan to fill the library," he said.

Glendening said one potential source of funds could be an SGA endowment at the KSU Foundation. The endowment money generates nearly $10,000 per year that isn't spent.

Glendening said utilizing that interest money would be a step in the right direction. It would also show students' commitment to solving library shortages, he said.

The two also support an 85-cent per credit hour privilege fee for the library. Privilege Fee Committee has failed to act on the library's proposal for a fee.

"Shayne and I are in favor of this privilege fee," Glendening said. "From talking to students on this campus it seems like about 50 percent are for this fee, and 50 percent are against it."

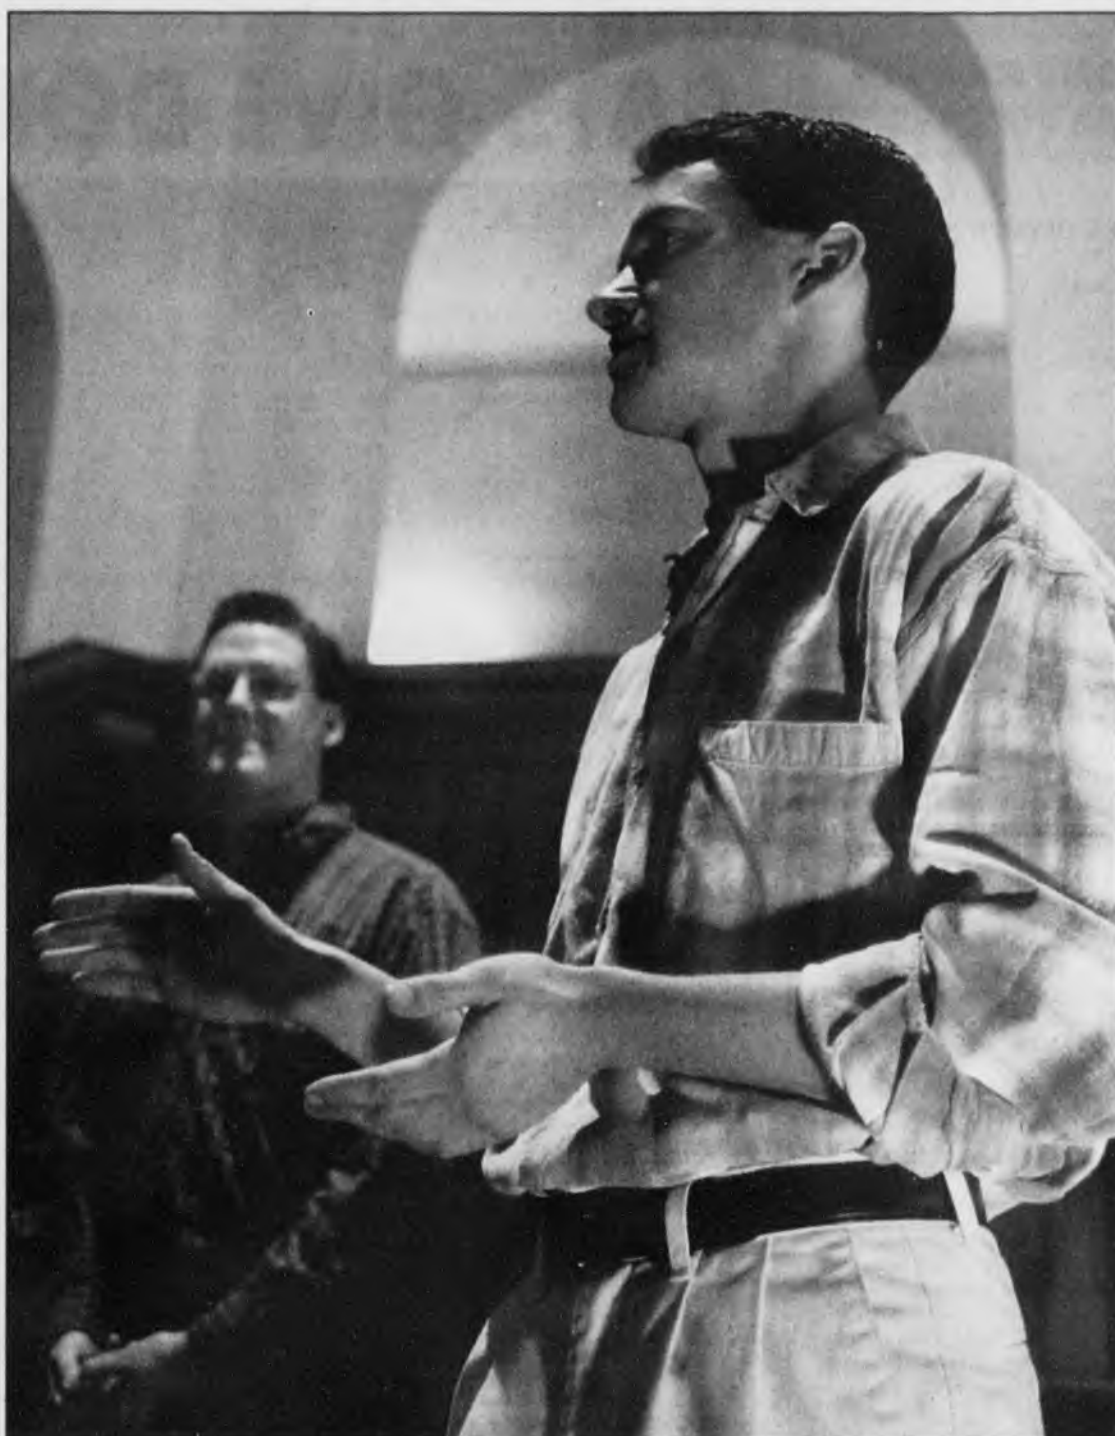

"We believe if we talk to the 50 percent not in favor of funding the library, we might be able to sway their decisions," he said.

Glendening and Castelano also unveiled their Rapid Retirement for Higher Education Debt plan, which would help students pay for their college education.

Companies who hire students fresh out of college could pay 50 to 75 percent of their student loans and receive a tax deduction.

Both candidates said their campaign won't just focus on three issues. Others include technology improvements and campus safety.

"We want to make this campaign as fun as possible," Castelano said. "Not only are we talking to the campus, but also local businesses. We want to make Manhattan a student-friendly place."

BRET GLENDENING, RIGHT, AND SHAYNE CASTELANO ANNOUNCE THEIR CANDIDACY FOR STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON INSIDE HALE LIBRARY. GLENDENING AND CASTELANO SAID THEY WILL FOCUS ON ISSUES THAT MATTER TO STUDENTS.

Program offers students help with tax returns

MIKE BURGESS
Kansas State Collegian

Doing an income tax return can be difficult for almost anyone, especially if English is not their native language.

The Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program is helping students by offering free tax assistance every Saturday at the International Student Center.

Jim Endrizzi, ISC program coordinator, said some students never have to do tax returns in their home country.

Because of this, the program can be especially helpful for international students. These students not only have the language barrier, but also some of the international returns can be difficult, said Cori Toburen, graduate student in business administration and VITA co-chair.

"There are so many things you have to consider, such as if their country has a treaty with the U.S.," she said.

Endrizzi said the ISC is lucky to have VITA.

"If they weren't here, our office wouldn't be able to absorb all of the students around tax time," he said.

Christian Haack, graduate student in computer science and previous user of the service, said he found it helpful.

"It was very helpful for people who haven't done it before," Haack said. "I think it's a good service."

Endrizzi said he recommends that all international students visit with VITA even if they think they won't need to file a return.

VITA, a national program funded by the IRS, is sponsored locally by Beta Alpha Psi, an accounting honor fraternity.

The program is available to all students and community members as well. The group is composed of 30 volunteers who are mostly juniors and seniors in accounting.

Deana Harris, senior in accounting and VITA co-chair, said the group attended an income tax training seminar by an IRS agent from Topeka earlier this year. In addition, almost all of the volunteers have had an income tax class, she said.

"My main goal is to reach as many people as we can," said Cori Toburen, graduate student in business administration and VITA co-chair.

She said she thinks the IRS does it to help people.

"I guess their main goal is to get people to file their tax returns, and that the benefits outweigh the costs," Toburen said.

Harris said volunteers are not allowed to prepare any returns they are not qualified to do. If there is any question about whether they can prepare the return, volunteers refer people to another group. Harris said she got involved in this program back in 1994 because she wanted experience.

"It's a win-win situation," Harris said. "VITA gives accounting students an opportunity to put what they learned in the textbooks to practical use."

Shawn Draper, junior in accounting, said he had two reasons why he volunteered.

"You get to experience the public on a first-hand basis, which as a CPA you do a lot. It also looks really good on a résumé," Draper said.

Endrizzi said the VITA site at ISC was crowded Saturday and encouraged anyone interested to visit the other VITA site on weekdays at the Douglass Community Center.

The American Association of Retired Persons Tax Aid Program also offers free income tax assistance to students and Manhattan community members.

John Lindholm, district coordinator for the AARP Tax Aid Program, said the service is primarily for the older people, but they will help students.

"We take student walk-ins, but give preference to the elderly," he said.

NCAA TOP-25 MEN'S HOOPS

No. 2 Duke 70, Clemson 66

CLEMSON, S.C. — No. 2 Duke blew a large lead to Clemson for the second time this season before Trajan Langdon's three-point play lifted the Blue Devils to a 70-66 victory Wednesday night.

Duke lost a 15-point lead down the stretch and trailed 64-63 with 1:30 to go. But Langdon, who scored 15 of his 17 points in the second half, converted a free throw after his driving layup with 23 seconds remaining, and Chris Carrwell hit his foul shots to keep Duke (24-2, 13-1 Atlantic Coast Conference) ahead.

Duke's Roshown McLeod scored 15 of his 19 points in the opening period.

Iowa 88, No. 5 Purdue 69

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Kent McCausland scored 16 points and Ricky Davis and Ryan Bowen each had 14 as Iowa (18-8 overall, 7-6 Big Ten) used torrid shooting to defeat No. 5 Purdue, snapping the Boilermakers' seven-game winning streak.

Kyle Galloway, making his second straight start, scored 12 points for Iowa, which defeated Purdue for the fourth-straight time.

Brian Cardinal scored 17 points, Brad Miller 15 and Chad Austin 12 for the Boilermakers (22-5, 10-3), who dropped 1 1/2 games behind conference leader Michigan State with three games remaining in the regular season.

No. 8 Kentucky 79, Florida 54

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Nazr Mohammed scored 19 points and Jeff Sheppard added 18 as eighth-ranked Kentucky avenged an earlier loss to Florida.

Kentucky (23-4, 11-2 Southeastern Conference) rebounded from a nine-point loss at home to Mississippi and won for the 11th time in its past 12 meetings with Florida (13-10, 6-7), which played without suspended star guard Jason Williams.

Greg Stolt led the Gators with 13 points, but the team's other four starters were kept to 23.

No. 15 Mississippi 83, LSU 57

BATON ROUGE, La. — Keith Carter scored 24 points, hitting four-of-seven from three-point range, and No. 15 Mississippi won its fourth straight game.

Mississippi (18-5, 9-4 Southeastern Conference) hit 53 percent from three-point range (9 of 17) and 54.5 percent from the field overall. The winner also had nine blocked shots, six by Johnnie Rogers, while Ansu Sesay had 14 points and six rebounds before fouling out with 4:47 left.

Rogers Washington and Cedric Carter scored 12 points each to lead LSU (9-14, 2-11).

No. 16 Arkansas 96, No. 13 South Carolina 88

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Pat Bradley scored a career-high 33 points and Kareem Reid keyed a late surge as No. 16 Arkansas held off No. 13 South Carolina.

Bradley's three three-pointers and bank shot gave the Razorbacks (21-5, 10-3 Southeastern Conference) a 68-54 lead four minutes into the second half. Three times in the final 5 1/2 minutes, South Carolina (19-5, 9-4) got as close as two points, but each time Arkansas responded.

South Carolina played without its third leading scorer, LeRon Williams, suspended for one game for violating the team's academic policy.

Rhode Island 87, No. 18 Massachusetts 85, 2 OT

AMHERST, Mass. — Cuttino Mobley scored 26 points, including a basket with 68 seconds left in the second overtime to put Rhode Island ahead for good as the Rams upset No. 18 Massachusetts.

URI (19-6, 10-3 conference), which had lost 10 consecutive games to UMass, won for the sixth time in seven games and moved into a second-place tie, just a game behind the Minutemen (19-7, 11-2) in the Atlantic 10's East division.

UMass lost for just the second time in its last 15 games and fell to URI for the first time since Feb. 20, 1993.

Charlton Clarke scored a career-high 24 points for Massachusetts, including a three-pointer with 1.6 seconds left in regulation to tie the game 68-all and three free throws to send it into a second extra period tied at 78.

No. 23 Illinois 69, Northwestern 57

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Kevin Turner scored 28 points as No. 23 Illinois beat Northwestern and moved into second place in the Big Ten.

The Illini (19-8 overall, 11-3 Big Ten) made 11 of their 18 3-point shots in the game, which was their 19th-straight win over the Wildcats (9-14, 2-11) at Assembly Hall.

Northwestern was led by Evan Eschmeyer with 18 points and 10 rebounds, his 17th double-double of the season.

CATS GIVE DOANE COLLEGE NO RELIEF

For a moment or two in K-State's 13-3 win over Doane College, the sun shed a little light on the K-State baseball team.

The nice weather gave the Cats an opportunity to get some playing time on the field; moreover, it is playing on dirt.

The outcome was in question at the end of the top half of the first as the Tigers mounted a 2-0 lead on the Cats. However, the Cats stormed back and followed with a flurry of runs for the next five straight innings.

In the third inning the Cats tied the score at two. Catcher Chet Savage walked and scored on designated-hitter Mark English's double to center field. On a full-count pitch, second baseman Chad Tabor ripped a liner down the third-base side that scored English.

The Cats took the lead for good in the third inning after they put three more runs on the board to up the ante at 5-2.

"The guys went up with a better plan of attack today," Clark said.

"Hitting-wise I think we made a step in the right direction."

K-State tallied three more runs in the fourth inning. Third baseman Josh Marn doubled to left field and scored on left fielder Brian Bobier's double to center. Bobier took third on a throwing error by the shortstop. First baseman Yancy Ayres then smacked one to the wall in left field and got three bases out of it, scoring Bobier. Savage singled to center and scored Ayres making the score 8-3 after four innings.

"We did a real good job with moving runners," Clark said. "We were more patient today, and we went the other way with those outside pitches, and we got a lot of doubles because of it."

Of K-State's 13 total hits in the ball game, eight of those hits went for extra bases including a home run in the fifth inning by Marn, his third of the year.

"It was a curve ball away. It was the pitch I was looking for," Marn said. "I figured he was going to throw me an off-speed pitch, and that's what I got. I was able to put enough backspin on it to get it over the fence."

Marn's homer was a three-run dinger. Marn went two-for-four on the day and had three RBIs. Savage also had a nice day at the plate going two-for-three with three RBIs.

The Cats logged a total of three more runs in the fifth, one in the sixth and another in the eighth to account for the final tally.

Clark again used as many position players as he could. Topeka-product Kasey Weishaar doubled to center field to lead off the eighth and scored on an error by the shortstop.

Seven different pitchers spent time on the mound. Tom Henshaw pitched two innings for the Cats giving up just two hits in seven batters. Henshaw picked up the win, his first of the season.

K-State is back in action this weekend at a tournament in Monroe, La., against Northeast Louisiana and Southeast Louisiana.

Often enough, basketball games come down to strategic fouling in the final seconds of the game.

But it's rare for the team with the lead to commit the fouls.

That was the case for K-State's men's team Wednesday at Iowa State. Though, as the Cyclones, up 63-62 with plenty of fouls to give, fouled three times in less than 13 seconds, preventing the Wildcats from having time to set up a game-winning shot.

"That's one of the benefits of not fouling and not playing with your hands throughout the game," Iowa State coach Tim Floyd said. "It gives you some options in late-game situations. We were fortunate that we had three to give."

Floyd said his players fouled at the right time. The Cyclones would let a few seconds run off, then commit the foul.

The Cyclones started fouling with 15 seconds and, after three fouls, finally reached their limit with 3.2 seconds to go. But K-State guard Aaron Swartzendruber missed a quick three-point attempt and Cat forward Shawn Rhodes couldn't tip the rebound in at the buzzer.

"It's very difficult to get an

Starting guard gone for season

AMES, Iowa — K-State sophomore point guard Duane Davis will be unavailable for the remainder of the season after sustaining an injury to his left ankle on the opening tip of the Kansas game Feb. 14 in Manhattan.

"Test results received Tuesday afternoon revealed that Duane would be lost for the rest of this season," head coach Tom Asbury said.

Davis sustained a distal tibiofibular syndesmotic injury to his left ankle. Damage to the involved ligaments requires a short period of immobilization prior to his return to activity.

He averaged 7.7 points a game and 3.5 assists for the Wildcats this season.

Demolition.

In their second-worst defeat of the season, the Wildcats were outplayed in virtually every facet of the game, losing 80-50.

The game was full of superlatives. Bests for the Cyclones, 21-5 and 10-3 in the Big 12, and worsts for the Wildcats, now 10-13 and 4-9 in Big 12 play.

Iowa State had four players in double-digits in scoring and set season highs by shooting 56 percent from the field, including 65 percent in the first half, and making eight-of-12 three-pointers, for 67 percent.

The Cats set several season-lows — namely first-half field-goal percentage (.241), overall field-goal percentage (.284) and shots attempted (67). K-State also had a season-high 22 offensive rebounds, a product of both hard work and many missed shots.

Not many kind words could be said about the Cats.

"This is the poorest game we've played in my time here," K-State coach Deb Patterson said.

Despite being blown out, the Cats weren't always out of the game. The Cyclones took an early 8-5 lead, but K-State rallied to score the next six points to take a brief three-point lead.

Iowa State recovered to score the next 12 points and outscored the Cats 36-8 the rest of the half. When the teams went to the locker room, the Cats were already beaten.

The 44-19 halftime margin was the most lopsided of the year for K-State. K-State hadn't given up 44 points in the first half of a game all season and had scored less than 19 only once — with 18 against Kansas in a game the Cats ended up winning.

Death of baseball broadcaster marks end of era for Chicago Cubs

Saturday was a bad day all around. Part of Aggieville burned down. The evil Jayhawks beat the Wildcats in basketball.

It wasn't all bad. Pitchers and catchers reported to spring training, but even the baseball portion of the world turned sour Saturday night.

Legendary broadcaster Harry Caray collapsed at dinner that night.

Caray slipped into a coma and died Wednesday, ending the life and career of a great announcer and fan.

Caray represented all that is right with baseball, broadcasting, sports and life. His enjoyment of the game and his refreshing honesty — both positive and negative — were wonderful for fans of the game.

Caray is unquestionably responsible for many Cubs fans (and Bud men) around the country, including myself.

Much of watching a Cubs game centered around him — hearing new phonics you didn't think could possibly be made by North Americans, getting an all-too-close view of his eyes through those bulletproof glasses and finding out exactly how he will pronounce Mark Grudzielanek's name on any given day.

Along with former Baltimore Oriole pitcher Steve Stone, Caray was part of the finest broadcast team there was.

Caray's enthusiasm for the game and for his beloved Chicago Cubs was true and enjoyable. Games he broadcast were the first I watched after the strike of 1994, partially because I missed baseball, but mostly because I knew he would help me to regain the love I had for the game before the labor conflict. His child-like love for the game was the reason he was so great.

He is best known for singing "Take Me Out to the Ballgame" during the seventh-inning stretch at Wrigley Field.

He didn't sing to get people involved. It all started when he was doing radio for a game, and during a commercial, he was singing baseball's national anthem, simply because he loved being at the ballpark. Someone switched on the stadium public address system, and the wonderful tradition started.

Caray was also a great broadcaster simply because he was a fan at the games. When Cubs' opponents had a game-winning hit, you didn't need to hear the incoherent words coming out of his mouth, just the tone in which they were uttered.

He was a frustrated Cubs fan, just like all the others.

The "wait 'til next year" attitude had to be adopted, although every April he swore the Cubbies would finally break through. But when mistakes were made by the Northsiders, Caray reported them as a frustrated fan, not a stiff, always-objective journalist.

The little things such as, "I don't know where he was throwing that one," instead of the typical, "It slipped out of his hand, and that'll be an error on Dunston," were among the things that made Caray so wonderful.

Along with that anguish of being a Cubs fan, the ecstasy of a game-winning hit or a game-winning catch truly brought Caray alive, and his enthusiasm and amazement made the play that much more special.

Nothing in baseball is more exciting than Caray's famous, "It might be. It could be. IT IS!! CUBS WIN! CUBS WIN! CUBS WIN!" during an extra-inning home run at Wrigley Field. His call always made the play more special than it was — like it won the pennant, instead of improving the Cubs' record to 38-104.

Now that he's somewhere else broadcasting a game that the 1908 Cubs — the last team playing in Wrigley Field to win the World Series — are playing in, I consider myself extremely lucky to recall his calls of Cubs games over the years.

Without Ryne Sandberg and Caray, the Cubs will not be the Cubs anymore. The only thing left is the ivy on the outfield wall.

Caray represents all that was great about baseball and sports. He was the final link to spending all day at the ballpark because it'll make you happy. And sitting in the outfield bleachers shirtless all day, getting sunburned, but not caring because you were at the yard, just enjoying the American Pastime, and singing "Take Me Out to the Ballgame."

I'll miss hearing you, Harry. Thanks for the memories.

Tutoring coordinator leads elementary students by example

CLAUDETTE RILEY
Kansas State Collegian

A decision to tutor elementary students in the evenings through the KSU Community Service Program eventually became three semesters of service. Now, Jill Stafford can't imagine not helping young people learn and improve.

Stafford, sophomore in agricultural economics, said a leadership class her first semester at K-State convinced her to get involved in community service.

After tutoring for three semesters, Stafford said she decided to take a stronger leadership role as coordinator for the other student tutors from K-State.

Editor's note:

This is the first in a series of profiles of Unsung Heroes, those people who work behind the scenes. They are the individuals who make contributions, but don't always get recognition. Ideas for other profiles of Unsung Heroes can be sent to Claudette Riley via e-mail at criley@ksu.edu, or by phone at 532-6556.

"I believe in showing people who you are through your actions," Stafford said. "If I showed how much I care about schoolwork, perhaps they will care too."

Stafford is involved in recruiting the tutors and placing them at different tutoring sites. She said she looks for tutors who have past experiences with community service, a strong sense of responsibility and ability to follow through.

A lot of the tutors are education majors, although students from all disciplines are welcome to volunteer, she said.

"There has to be responsibility and good people skills and a willingness to devote the time," Stafford said.

Volunteers who are accepted and tutor for the entire semester also demonstrate care for others and good communication, Stafford said.

When recruiting tutors for students in the Manhattan area, Stafford said she believes in leading by example. To her, leadership means a willingness to serve others.

"Real leadership shows through a person's actions," Stafford said. "The people working behind the scenes might not always get the credit, but they get satisfaction."

The short-term rewards for Stafford as a tutor translate into positive long-term reinforcement for the students.

"I enjoy seeing the progress from day one to day 31," Stafford said. "There's nothing better than a student who comes back the next day and tells you they've done well on a test. It gives students a feeling that they can do it."

Although she originally considered entering the College of Business Administration, Stafford said she became drawn to the College of Agriculture. A 1996 high school graduate from Hill City, Kan., said she considers K-State a second home.

"I think it's the family atmosphere at K-State that I love," Stafford said. "It's important to get involved."

Stafford has gotten involved. She serves in Silver Key Sophomore Honorary and is an Agriculture Council representative involved in recruiting and educating other students.

Flipping through the lists of quotes written in the back of her daily planner, Stafford said they give her inspiration about leadership and she often uses them to begin speeches as a State Future Farmers of America officer.

The leadership quotes she prefers center on being a good example for others.

Carol Peak, director of the Community Service Program, said Stafford's example to the students and tutors is outstanding.

"Her work goes above and beyond the call of duty," Peak said. "Jill started tutoring and was outstanding with the students and as other students, graduated and left, they identified her as a leader who could step up."

"REAL LEADERSHIP SHOWS THROUGH A PERSON'S ACTIONS."

JILL STAFFORD, SOPHOMORE IN AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS

JILL STAFFORD, SOPHOMORE IN AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS, IS A COORDINATOR FOR STUDENT TUTORS AT K-STATE. STAFFORD IS INVOLVED IN RECRUITING THE TUTORS AND PLACING THEM AT DIFFERENT TUTORING SITES.

Peak said Stafford has handled the increased work load as interest on the part of student tutors and interest from the area has doubled during the past two years. The CSP continues to actively recruit tutors who are enthusiastic about providing academic assistance to young people.

"We were looking for a level of commitment that is more than showing up. There has to be a high level of interest. We look for people who are creative and use this service to really help others," Peak said. "Of course, Jill has all these things."

Protesters jeer as administration states its case for U.S. military involvement in Iraq

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Facing tough questions from America's heartland, the Clinton administration's foreign policy team tried to make the case Wednesday for U.S. military action against Iraq. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright called Iraq's disputed weapons arsenal the greatest security threat the United States faces.

Speaking over persistent jeers at a town meeting at Ohio State University, Albright said President Clinton prefers a diplomatic way out of the crisis but stressed, "It must be a true, not a phony, solution."

Joining Albright on a red carpeted stage in the center of a basketball arena were Defense Secretary William Cohen and National Security Adviser Samuel Berger.

They were interrupted several times by chants from a noisy audience that included students and faculty as well as uniformed members of the military and veterans.

"Saddam (Hussein) has delayed, he has duped, he has deceived the inspectors from the very first day on the job," Cohen said in a prepared statement before the three took questions in a 90-minute session televised live by CNN and moderated by two of the network's anchors.

It is Hussein's refusal to permit unrestricted U.N. inspections of his nation's weapons arsenal that is at the heart of the dispute. U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan was going to Baghdad today to try to reach a diplomatic settlement.

Some of the protesters held aloft a banner that said, "No War," but one caller identifying himself as a U.S. soldier in duty in Germany said he supported Clinton's approach.

"If a soldier's life needs to be lost, let it start with mine," the soldier said by telephone. His remark drew a round of applause from the arena audience.

Callers from as far away as the Persian Gulf and Europe probed for U.S. intentions and questioned the wisdom of taking action against Iraq.

The arena was only about half-filled, and some protesters shouted at the administration officials when they didn't like their answers. Others cheered them. "What we are doing is so all of you can sleep at night," Albright told a protester.

Another person asked why the United States does not go directly after Hussein.

"We do not see the need to carry out a large land campaign in order to topple Saddam Hussein," Cohen said. "Our mission is to get the inspectors back. If they can't get back, to make sure he can't constitute or reconstitute this threat."

When one person said as many as 100,000 Iraqi civilians could be killed in an attack, Albright said, "I'm willing to make a bet that we care more about the Iraqi people than Saddam Hussein does."

Berger sought to frame the dispute in broad, strategic terms. He said the world could not afford to allow Iraq to flout the will of the international community.

"The lesson of the 20th century is, and we've learned through harsh experience, the only answer to aggression and outlaw behavior is firmness," Berger said.

"He will use those weapons of mass destruction again, as he has 10 times since 1983," Berger said.

One person standing just feet from Albright engaged her in a mini-debate, saying the United States was inconsistent by selling arms to some political allies with deplorable human rights records while preparing for war against Iraq.

Albright said the United States is critical of countries that violate international standards but said Hussein has shown a proclivity to use his weapons of mass destruction. "He is a repeat offender," she said, referring to Iraq's use of chemical weapons against its Kurd population and against Iranian soldiers.

Another person, who identified himself as an assistant professor at OSU, asked whether the United States has the moral right to attack Iraq.

Cohen replied, "The question is also does Saddam Hussein have the moral right to use weapons of mass destruction, chemical and biological, against his own people?"

Clinton went on national television Tuesday to explain the rationale for possible military action.

With opposition mounting in Congress and doubts in the minds of many Americans, he decided to dispatch his top foreign policy aides to address those concerns.

To illustrate Hussein's history of using weapons of mass destruction, Cohen showed the audience a picture of an Iraqi woman holding a dead child in her arms. He said they had been gassed by Hussein's forces.

He described the picture as "Madonna and Child, Saddam Hussein-style."

After opening statements, the three took questions from the audience. The first two questions sharply challenged the U.S. authority to launch an attack on Iraq, given a lack of support from Iraq's neighbors.

Berger said the United States was seeking to protect the world's long-term interests in limiting the spread of weapons of mass destruction.

"In the 21st century, the community of nations may see more and more of this very kind of threat that Iraq poses now, the rogue state. ... If we fail to respond, Saddam and all those who follow will believe that they can threaten the security of a vital region with impunity. But if we act now as one, we will send a clear message to would-be tyrants and terrorists that we will do what it takes to protect our security and our freedom in this new era."

Middle East students share feelings concerning crisis

what other people are like."

Khan said the last thing he wants to see is a newspaper headline saying the United States is going to war with Iraq.

"This is humanity we are talking about. Killing people is not humane. Most of the Iraqis are good Muslims," Khan said. "Governments are a different thing. I know that Hussein is a bad guy for sure and needs to be straightened out."

American students, such as those at CNN's Wednesday televised town meeting in Ohio State, are sharply divided over the possible commitment of troops and weapons against Iraq.

Unlike the Gulf War, when U.N.

troops attacked Iraq for invading Kuwait and committing horrible atrocities, the enforcement of U.N. sanctions is receiving less support.

Khalid Alsh, doctoral candidate in sociology, said U.N. sanctions against other countries fail to gain such a drastic international response.

"There is not only a double-standard but multiple standards. The U.S. isn't just two-faced, they are showing multiple faces," Alsh said. "There are other countries that there is a justification for this action but the United States isn't doing anything."

Calling the U.N. sanctions an act of war, Alsh, who was raised in Saudi Arabia, said he worries about the families in Iraq.

"I'm not concerned about the leader of Iraq," Alsh said. "I am concerned about the people themselves and the people are Muslim."

Any solutions to this conflict would emerge from listening and considering the other side, Alsh said.

"A lot of people don't agree with this but we should try to see this from other's point of view and understanding," Alsh said. "But, the ones in power have their own say even if it's at the expense of many things like the people, for example."

There are public concerns that turmoil in the volatile region could result in a ripple of terrorism and military action between Israel and the Arab countries in the Persian Gulf.

Itai Margalit, graduate student in management and business administration, said he has lived in the United States for six years although he returns to his home near Tel Aviv, Israel, at least twice each year.

All of Margalit's family, including two sisters, live in Israel. He said Israelis handle the threat of a war in the Persian Gulf region differently.

"It's mixed emotion really. A few people take it easy and say there's little to worry about and others take it hard. It really bothers them," Margalit said. "In Israel, it's a different reality. Terrorism is something we live with and there is a high intensity of security."

The Israeli government distributed gas masks to all citizens and visitors in Israel during the 1991 Desert Storm Gulf War. In the past few weeks, the supply and service of masks has again become a priority.

The capacity for Hussein to launch chemical weapons, such as gas missiles, concerns residents in the neighboring countries.

Margalit served in the Israeli army during the Gulf War and said he would prefer to be home when there is any threat to national safety.

"I don't feel lucky to be here at all," Margalit said. "When something like this happens, I prefer to be there. I'm an Israeli and want to help and have the experience along with my people, not hear about it through others who are there."

Margalit said he believes there is little threat of other Arab countries attacking Israel even if Iraq does.

"Right now, the biggest concern is Iraq and not border countries because Israel has peace agreements in place or working on it," Margalit said. "It's really in the hands of the leaders to work out an agreement."

He said the biggest issue involves long-term ramifications of Hussein's aggression and threat to his neighbors.

"My concern is that really nothing would happen and the long-term situation would be worse," Margalit said. "If nothing happens now and we let them go ahead and develop the weapons there would be potential for it to be chaotic later on."

Fee to be discussed during open period

sented by the three engineering senators who attended the council meeting.

"There is no overall issue we are supporting. We are just supporting the student fee," Buller said. "I didn't think that the 85-cent proposal seemed to be that much to pay."

Dan Cataldi, Arts and Sciences College Council member, said the council agreed that a good library is a standard of a great university. The Arts and Sciences Council passed a resolution supporting the fee at its Sunday meeting.

Cataldi said putting the issue before the full Senate, instead of the fee committee, will allow more students to be involved in the decision-making process.

"I think more people need to be involved in the debate," he said. "There were only six voters present at the privilege fee meeting."

Student Senate Chair Jeff Dougan said a bill can still be introduced to create a fee, but it would be sponsored by individual senators and not the fee committee.

Any fee bill would still be referred back to the committee for recommendation, he said. A motion to create a library fee died for lack of a second at Monday's committee meeting.

Dougan said both the fee committee and a Senate committee created to study the library's needs were not in support of a fee.

"But anything can happen," he said.

Students talk about SGA powers

"I would rather see the students leading the school than administration," she said.

Jerry Holtorf, junior in secondary education, disagrees. He said power at K-State rests with deans and administrators, not students.

"The SGA doesn't have as much power as it should," he said. "When it comes to major issues that the students want to have done, they don't have much power."

Holtorf said it takes more than one person to have power.

"Every student has the potential to have power, but one student doesn't really get things done," he said.

Jamie Jacobsen, freshman in political science, said SGA gets things done, but the administration has more power.

"I don't see them having their way with a lot of stuff. It's about right what they do have," she said of SGA. "They make people see the problems on campus, but I think the administration is more influential in getting stuff done than SGA."

Charlie Rottinghaus, sophomore in food science, said SGA's members are students, and students should have power.

"I don't think the students can get too much power when it concerns their education," he said.

"It's hard to say that there can be a limit to how much a student can be involved," Rottinghaus said students need initiative to have power.

"We have the power to vote and express our opinion, but as far as getting things changed, you would have to have a lot of initiative to get it to go through all the channels," he said.

"The average student doesn't have that initiative to get it to go through all the channels."

"I do think it's possible, if somebody feels strongly enough about something to get it to go through."

Other students said the believed SGA and administrators are lower on the totem pole than another key group alumni. Shawn Slyter, junior in architectural engineering, said alumni have all the power because they give so much money.

"I think SGA could stand to have a little more power. They want to do a lot of things that get shot down by people who are higher than them," he said.

first half, we played as well as we have all season," Iowa State head coach Bill Fennelly said. "We shot the ball really well, and we got great looks at the basket."

Things didn't get any better for K-State in the second half.

Iowa State was able to empty its bench and still outscore the Cats in the half.

Walk-on Beth Pellett even got into the action for the Cyclones, nailing a three-pointer from the top of the key with less than a minute left for her first points of the season, bringing an explosion of elation from the Iowa State bench.

Patterson said everything went wrong for the Cats all night long.

"I thought we played for about seven or eight minutes tonight. After that, there was nothing I could find that we did well," Patterson said.

The Cats have little time to recover from the game. They play Oklahoma State, which has lost only two games at home all season, Saturday night in Stillwater, Okla.

inbounds from the sidelines with three seconds to go, although they did get a pretty good look," Floyd said. "It looked like it was down from where I was sitting."

The Cats lost after Iowa State's smart fouling and their own failed shots, but K-State coach Tom Asbury said the Cats shouldn't have been in that position in the first place.

"It never should have been down to that," Asbury said. "They're not a good enough team to have it be that close at the end. It shouldn't have been that close."

K-State forward Manny Dies, who scored 27 points in a 77-59 victory over Iowa State last month, played only seven minutes in the first half after getting two fouls and finished with six points, matching his season low.

Forward Marcus McCollough led the Cats with 16 points on eight-for-10 shooting.

Asbury said Iowa State defended the Wildcats' final play well. It wanted to get it to Ayome May, but it went instead to Swartzendruber, who had to shoot with Brad Johnson in his face.

"As happens in late game situations, a lot of times things get out of synch and you don't execute exactly what you hope to," Asbury said. "Then it's a panic situation."

Fire department unable to determine cause of fire

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan Fire Department investigators and state fire marshals are stumped.

In a press conference Thursday, Assistant Director of Technical Services Steve Burnett said his department cannot find the cause of Aggieville's Saturday morning fire that destroyed three businesses.

"The fire cause will be listed as 'undetermined,'" he said.

Burnett said one cause — arson — has been ruled out.

"No indications of any type of acceleration were found by the investigators or the arson team," Burnett said. "We've found no physical evidence of foul play."

Other possible causes were also eliminated, Burnett said, but heavy damage has made it impossible to find definitive answers to the three-alarm fire that caused more than $1 million damage. Investigators said they thought faulty electrical wiring might be the culprit, he said.

"Due to the extensive damage to the electrical service in the area of origin, electricity cannot be ruled out as a cause," he said.

"However, neither can it be proven to have caused the fire."

Manhattan Fire Marshal Don Francis said investigators did pinpoint the fire's origin inside Adventure Travel, 1118 Moro St.

Francis said what witnesses had reported as an explosion after the fire began might have been what firefighters term a "flashover." He said the fire probably burned for a while before anyone noticed it, creating heat that quickly combusted when windows broke allowing oxygen into the building.

"There was a buildup of heat, which brought the combustibles to a temperature at which they could've burned if they had enough oxygen," he said. "When it got the oxygen, it all caught fire."

"A flashover brings all of the materials in that area to their admission temperature, and when it gets the oxygen, it's almost instantaneous," Francis said.

Francis said the fire spread quickly after gaining speed from the flashover. The second floor of Club Karrington, 1120 Moro St., didn't help much, he said.

"Karrington's was pretty wide open. There weren't any interior walls or anything up there to stop it from going on west," Francis said.

The fire burned through Karrington's and Greek's Pizzeria, 1124 Moro St. It stopped at Greek's west wall.

The 3:42 a.m. report of the fire probably was made several minutes after it started, Francis said, which hampered containment efforts.

"We kind of feel like the fire had been burning for a while inside before anybody noticed it," he said.

Burnett said the intense heat and size of the blaze made investigating the rubble a frustrating task.

Being unable to determine the cause of such a large fire is even more frustrating, he said.

"We always like to find the exact cause with this amount of damage. We've eliminated many of the causes, but due to damage we can't totally rule some things out."

Burnett said his investigators and detectives from the Riley County Police Department who worked to find a cause will continue to follow up on additional information they receive. Otherwise, the investigation is closed.

Going sky-high no big deal when lab in helicopter

Many students might find mixing potions in their chemistry labs or knocking themselves out with running during a kinesiology lab a good time, but the ROTC lab on Wednesdays gets to rack up frequent flier miles.

In helicopters, that is.

"It's a reconnaissance exercise," Capt. Robert D. Wallace said. "The cadets took all of their combat gear, all of their knowledge of operation tactics, and basically checked out the bad guys."

It's about getting it done and getting it done right, Capt. Ryan Strong said.

"We assess success or failure by looking at the execution," Strong said, "but the planning and organization is done by the cadets themselves."

The scenario tests how the cadets respond to changes in their created environment, he said.

"Time is one large factor, but other variables determine how they adapt their leadership style," Strong said.

Those variables might include a change of location or surviving without certain equipment. Regardless of the circumstances, Wallace said, cooperation with the team is essential.

"It's kind of like a trust-your-buddy course," he said.

When students reach MS3 status, signifying they are junior cadets, they reach the pinnacle of their education at Advanced ROTC Camp in Fort Louis, Wash. It's there they will be placed in a specific field of the military service based on their performance.

"Camp basically ties together everything they've learned," Wallace said.

"It's their capstone exercise. It puts them against the best in the nation."

Paul McGuire, sophomore in military science, said the importance of camp adds significant value to the reconnaissance exercise.

"They're going to be doing things just like this at camp," McGuire said.

"It's all the basic fundamentals you need."

This time around, McGuire said, he was one of the bad guys.

"Reconnaissance is about searching for, and observing, the enemy and gathering intelligence," he said. "Since I was the enemy, it was nice to watch the process being done."

Strong said great emphasis is spent preparing the cadets before they're turned loose.

"The first couple of weeks, we go over the preliminaries," he said. "We do a dry run in class to walk it through."

However, nothing compares to the real thing, he said.

"It's an opportunity to see what you learned in theory in action," Strong said. "It's active learning at its best."

Library supporters plead case to Senate

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
Kansas State Collegian

A student privilege fee to fund Hale Library wasn't on Student Senate's agenda Thursday night, but senators heard from their constituents about the issue for more than two hours.

Several students spoke in favor of an 85-cent per-credit-hour fee during Senate's open period. Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock also attended to answer questions.

No one spoke in opposition to the fee, which the library has requested as part of a three-tiered funding plan to boost periodical subscriptions and resource purchases.

An 85-cent fee would generate $328,000 per year. A bill to create such a fee died in Privilege Fee Committee on Monday.

Grant Denny, senior in speech, said senators should take the initiative to write a bill and pass it without the fee committee's support.

"Are you dedicated to having a high-quality institution? Are you dedicated to keeping K-State the best that it can be? You need to stand up and take a leadership role," he said.

Kevin Zollman, freshman in speech, said many students are forced to drive to other universities for research materials because of the poor quality of K-State's library. That alone, he said, should justify a student contribution to solve the library's funding problem.

"I think it's abysmal that K-State students have to go to the KU library to do research," he said.

By not passing a fee, Zollman told senators they would send a poor message about K-State's student body.

"We would only show that students at this university were unwilling to do anything for our own education," he said. "It would reflect badly on us as an institution."

"What is it you want to be proud of and you want the students to be proud of when you leave KSU?" Zollman asked. "Is it that you went to a university where the football team was successful, or where you contributed some money and funded a library that faculty could use for their research and students could use to further their education?"

Jason Dechant, a library employee leading a student group in support of the fee, said senators should work to pass

Researchers develop white wheat to meet preferences of buyers

AMY EBERT
Kansas State Collegian

K-State researchers have developed two new wheat varieties that have the potential to improve the wheat industry in Kansas. K-State will release the two new varieties later this year.

Although Kansas is the wheat state, the wheat produced in Kansas is not the type of wheat many international and national buyers want, said Joe Martin, professor of agronomy and wheat breeder at K-State's Agricultural Research Center in Hays, Kan.

"With the current wheat usages in the world, we are shut out of about half of the world market. We hope to open that up with white wheat," Martin said.

Most of the 11.4 million acres of wheat planted in Kansas annually are planted with hard red winter wheat. The new varieties K-State has developed are white wheat.

White wheat is used to make noodles and is a better quality wheat for bread products. Products made with hard red wheat flour might have a bitter taste because of the red tannins in the wheat seed coat.

To convince wheat growers to convert to white wheat, Martin said researchers must develop varieties with the same yield potential as hard red wheat.

"Our main objective is to get the white wheat at the same yield level as the hard red wheat," he said.

Rollin Sears, professor of agronomy and wheat breeder, said he agreed the varieties must produce the same quantity as the traditional ones.

"We must find and grow white wheat varieties with the same or better yield potential. It's not good enough to just have good quality, they must also be high yielding," he said.

Doug Ohlmeier, marketing specialist for the Kansas Wheat Commission, said the high yield potential is necessary, too.

"Before wheat producers will embrace it, they have to see the high-yield results," he said.

Sears also said he didn't think farmers would be the ones to hold back on the change from traditional to new types of wheat.

"Researchers are the ones that are more reluctant. The producers are quite anxious to change. They want to produce the best product they can, so if you can provide them a wheat with good yields, they will be anxious to adapt," he said.

Sears said no other institution is working on white wheat at the same level as K-State.

"No one has scaled up their research work as much as we have for these new varieties, at least not yet," Sears said.

K-State's goal in moving the state to a white wheat state is a large one in numbers.

"We'd like to see a scale up of one million acres in five years. Right now the state only has five to six thousand acres in white wheat, so we have a ways to go," Sears said.

"We want to reach that goal of one million acres and, at the same time, maximize the amount of return for Kansas producers. Hopefully, that's what we can accomplish."

FBI accuses 2 men of anthrax possession after brag of planned attack on subways

LAS VEGAS — Two men were charged Thursday with possessing the deadly germ anthrax for use as a weapon. The FBI said one bragged in Las Vegas he had enough to wipe out the city and last year laid out a plan to attack New York City subways.

The men were arrested in suburban Henderson late Wednesday as they were allegedly trying to arrange a lab test of the substance. Their beige Mercedes, sealed in plastic, was hauled off to an airbase for tests to see whether the material carried inside was the germ warfare agent.

An informant said one of the men told him he had military-grade anthrax in flight bags in the trunk of the Mercedes, according to an FBI affidavit. The informant said he saw eight to 10 bags marked "biological" in the trunk.

Larry Wayne Harris, 46, of Lancaster, Ohio, and William Leavitt, 47, of Las Vegas and Logandale, Nev., appeared before a federal magistrate Thursday afternoon.

Bobby Siller, special agent in charge of the Las Vegas FBI office, said in a news conference before the affidavit was released there was no indication the men had any target.

The FBI said the pair were trying to arrange to buy the informant's testing equipment for $2 million up front and another $18 million later.

Siller repeatedly reassured residents of the Las Vegas area that there was no contamination and no danger.

Harris, identified by the FBI as a member of the Aryan Nations, was previously given probation after pleading guilty to illegally obtaining bubonic plague bacteria through the mail in 1995. He is also author of a self-published book called "Bacteriological Warfare: A Major Threat to North America."

Leavitt, who has no criminal record, owns a microbiology lab in rural Logandale, about 60 miles north of Las Vegas, and another in Frankfurt, Germany, according to the affidavit prepared by FBI Special Agent John H. Hawken.

The affidavit said a confidential informant called the FBI Wednesday to say he was a research scientist and had been contacted by Harris and Leavitt, who asked him to use some of his equipment to test vials of the bacterium Bacillus anthracis, which causes anthrax.

Over the next 12 hours, the informant kept in touch with the FBI and at least one phone call was tapped. The document outlined a meeting of Harris and Leavitt with another man at the Gold Coast Hotel.

The man, who was neither identified nor charged, was later tracked down by the FBI and related their conversation.

"Harris had shown him what appeared to be a vial, which was wrapped in cardboard and stated that it contained anthrax," the affidavit said. "Harris held the vial in his hand and further stated that there was enough there to 'wipe out the city.'"

Anthrax is an infectious disease that usually affects only animals, especially cattle and sheep. But anthrax spores can be produced in a dry form suitable for weapons and can be fatal to humans even in microscopic amounts.

Anthrax can also be used in germ warfare; many of the troops who fought in the Persian Gulf War were inoculated for the bacteria.

House proposal would issue strict limits on qualifications for burial in Arlington

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Republican and Democratic leaders of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee have proposed legislation that would strictly define who can be buried at Arlington National Cemetery.

Reps. Bob Stump, R-Ariz., chairman of the panel, and Lane Evans of Illinois, the ranking Democrat, noted that under their bill neither of them, both veterans, would be eligible for burial at Arlington.

Their committee is to meet next week on the legislation, which resulted in part from allegations last year that the Clinton administration was granting waivers to big campaign contributors who would not ordinarily qualify for a plot at Arlington.

A review by the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, found no evidence of improper use of waivers but did point to a lack of clarity in the waiver process following the tightening of eligibility standards in 1967.

Under the Stump-Evans bill, members of Congress, the vice president, Supreme Court judges, Cabinet secretaries and ranking diplomats would no longer be eligible simply on the basis of having served in the military.

"Being well-connected will no longer be an acceptable criteria for burial consideration," Stump said.

The president would continue to be eligible, as would service members who die on active duty, retired members of the Armed Forces, recipients of significant combat medals and former prisoners of war.

The bill would allow certain close family members of eligible veterans to be buried in the same grave with loved ones without a need for a waiver and would codify regulations allowing the cremated remains of any veteran with an honorable discharge to be kept at the cemetery.

Only memorials honoring military service would be allowed on the grounds.

Former Wichita resident picked to lead 4-nation coalition enforcing no-fly zone

INDEPENDENCE, Kan. — As tension between the United States and Iraq increases, U.S. officials in the Middle East are turning to a former Kansan for military expertise.

Gen. Roger R. Radcliff, a 31-year Air Force veteran raised in Wichita, commands the Joint Task Force-Southwest Asia — a multi-service, four-nation coalition enforcing the no-fly zone in southern Iraq.

The task force was created after the Gulf War when the United Nations established a no-fly zone barring Iraqi aircraft from flying south of the 33rd parallel. Its goal was to protect Iraq's oil-rich neighbors from further attack.

The task force's mission has been greatly heightened in recent months by Iraq's challenges to the United Nations' right to conduct weapons inspections, Radcliff said.

"This is a serious situation," he said in an interview with Eric Brian, the Independence Daily Reporter's education writer who is in Saudi Arabia on assignment with the Navy Reserve. "We're here to provide stability to the region with our coalition partners in southwest Asia."

Radcliff knows how tough desert war can be. He flew an A-10 on combat mission during Desert Storm, and he commanded two Air Force wings and a tactical fighter squadron.

As commander of the task force, Radcliff now directs the operations of units of the U.S. Armed Forces as well as British and French forces. In addition, he supervises Navy aircraft on three carriers stationed in the Persian Gulf and supporting Army Patriot missile batteries.

"United States units fly over southern Iraq every day, 365 days per year from stations throughout southwest Asia," he said. "That's what the mission is all about."

Radcliff was born in Neodesha and lived in Thayer and Pratt before moving to Wichita at age 10. He started his military career in 1966 at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Radcliff is now a command pilot with nearly 4,000 hours of flight time.

"I've been extremely fortunate to work for a lot of great leaders over the years who have propelled my career along. They gave me some great mentoring — some assistance when I needed it," he said.

CHECKBOOK BALANCE

Why hassle with a checkbook?

Whether you're out on the town or in for a night of studying, Wildcat Checking can make college life a breeze. Your money is accessible 24-hours a day by either swiping your card through a card reader or a nearby ATM. Hungry? Thirsty? Several vending machines on campus accept the smart chip on your card for a quick break so you can hit the books again.

Going off-campus? Lots of local merchants convenient to campus accept the card, so why use cash when you can use your card? If you need cash it's as close as an ATM. Commerce Bank has a Connection 24® ATM in the K-State Student Union Building, as well as others around town. Plus, your money is accessible through BankMate® and Cirrus® ATMs anywhere in the country and even around the world.

To learn more about the many ways your Wildcat Card can work to simplify your life, visit the Campus Card Center or call Commerce on campus at 532-3500. Once you start using it on a daily basis, you'll wonder how you survived without it.

Graves, regents blast plan to shift funding

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A plan to funnel more money into higher education and bring community colleges and state universities under one governing body came under fire from the Kansas Board of Regents and the governor.

Questions about funding were raised in a regents meeting Thursday morning and later as Gov. Bill Graves met informally with reporters.

The plan calls for $42 million in state funding for higher education in fiscal year 1999, on top of the $28.4 million Graves has recommended. Part of it would replace local property taxes levied for community colleges.

"There's no way you're going to find $42 million in this budget for that plan," Graves said. "The financing is a mystery to me. A lot of support is predicated on the fact that the money will be there."

The House Select Committee on Higher Education, which drafted the plan, will reveal the funding mechanism probably next week, said Rep. Ed McKechnie, D-Pittsburg, the panel's ranking minority member.

"The money's there," McKechnie said. He declined to elaborate.

Earlier, Regent Murray Lull, of Smith Center, had a pointed exchange with Rep. David Adkins over the suggestion that community colleges don't want to come under the wing of the regents because they don't trust them.

In his presentation to the regents, which would be disbanded under the plan, Adkins called such lack of trust a political reality.

Lull said such an impression was unfair.

"It is not fair to infer these people are not trustworthy, or we are not trustworthy," he said.

Adkins, R-Leawood and chairman of the higher education committee, replied that the regents "should be looking at the historical basis for the lack of trust." He said it would be easier to simply place community colleges under the regents, a move that would not require a constitutional amendment, but too much distrust exists.

"Community colleges feel like stepchildren," he said.

Lull said, "They have nothing to fear."

Adkins replied, "Convince them of that."

Another Regent Ken Havner, of Hays, later lauded Lull's statements and said he was speaking for the entire board.

Lull also said more money should go to the universities regardless of how they are governed. He described them as the state's "family of six," saying they should be taken care of "before you add another 20 hungry mouths to feed."

Regents chairman Robert Talkington, of Iola, said there would be ample time to discuss the plan, and there was some possibility of reaching a common ground.

"Obviously, we don't agree with abolishing the Board of Regents," Talkington said. "We are not completely unaware of the role community colleges have and their importance in higher education."

Some regents also questioned whether the state would find the money, and whether higher education could count on additional funds if the economy falters.

The state constitution mandates the nine-member regents board run the universities. The Board of Education, which also supervises elementary, junior high and high schools, oversees community colleges.

The committee's plan would establish an 11-member Council on Higher Education to govern the six regents universities and Washburn University of Topeka, review mission statements and approve courses of the community colleges. Community colleges support the concept of the plan.

Graves doesn't philosophically oppose the new higher education proposal and said he believes community colleges should not be governed by the Board of Education, spokesman Mike Matson said.

Concerns are over funding and exactly how coordination would take place with community colleges.

"If coordination means encroaching on the traditional responsibilities and authorities that local community college boards have had, I think you start to lose some of the community college support," Graves said.

"If coordination doesn't have a fairly strong oversight component, what you're really doing is just property tax relief for community college towns, renaming the Board of Regents, adding two people and going down the road," he said.

"For what this plan costs, I'm not sure that's worth it."

Official hopes talks will end Iraqi standoff without force

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Bound for Iraq in a last-chance peace mission, U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan declared Thursday he was reasonably optimistic about his chances of ending the weapons-inspection standoff without force.

In case he fails, the United Nations evacuated dozens more aid workers Thursday, and the Polish Embassy — which represents U.S. interests in Iraq — became the first to pull its diplomats out.

Speaking to reporters in New York, Annan acknowledged a great deal of suspicion on both sides.

His aims for weekend talks with Saddam Hussein were straightforward:

"to explain the situation very clearly — and get him to understand that it is in his best interest and in the interest of the Iraqi people to agree to implement Security Council resolutions."

Annan stopped in Paris for talks and is to arrive in Baghdad today, after the Security Council approved his mission Wednesday.

The United States wished him success, but made clear it reserved the right to reject any deal he makes — and to attack to force Hussein to open all suspected weapons sites to U.N. inspectors.

Hussein sent a message Thursday to Russian President Boris Yeltsin saying he remains committed to a diplomatic solution, the official Iraqi News Agency reported. Yeltsin has been loudest and bluntest among world leaders in opposing any U.S. use of force to end the crisis.

The Polish Embassy, which has handled U.S. interests in Iraq since the 1991 Persian Gulf War, sent 10 of its diplomats and their families to Jordan. The remaining six diplomats would follow, Polish Ambassador Roman Chalaczkiwicz said, without saying when.

The U.S. Embassy in Jordan said Washington played no role in the Polish decision to evacuate, which Polish officials predicted could prompt an exodus of foreign missions from Iraq.

Buses carrying 29 U.N. relief workers pulled out of Baghdad before dawn Thursday. Another 30 are to follow today.

The move was a precaution in case everything does not work out, said Denis Halliday, the U.N. humanitarian coordinator for Iraq.

About 250 workers, out of a total of 400, remain in Iraq to run the U.N.-approved oil-for-food program distributing aid to Iraqis.

U.S. preparations for military action intensified, with 750 infantry soldiers arriving in Kuwait — the first contingent of a 3,000-strong ground force to defend Iraq's smaller neighbor from any retaliation against a U.S. attack.

The Fort Stewart, Ga.-based troops join 25,000 U.S. servicemen and women already in the Gulf region.

The United States already has tanks, artillery and missile launchers outside the Kuwaiti capital, as part of a defense agreement signed after the Gulf War.

Negative images of Iraqis hinder understanding

While Saddam Hussein ignores United Nations resolutions and casts doubt on a peaceful solution to the standoff, the world community is reaching for some understanding.

K-State students and faculty are no different.

As Wednesday's contentious CNN-televised town meeting at Ohio State University proved, there are more concerns and fears than answers.

Outspoken protesters and supporters have the right to be heard. In fact, listening to one another might be the opportunity we have to reach solutions.

Public sentiment about the commitment of American troops and military resources to facilitate the enforcement of U.N. resolutions is mixed.

Clearly though, this decision affects every American and members of the public should be involved by voicing their opinions.

The propagation of negative sentiment or stereotypes of the Iraqi citizens won't encourage understanding or a respect for humanity. There is a clear difference between Hussein and the average Iraqi citizen who is undoubtedly suffering because of U.N. sanctions.

Whatever the decision, negotiators should look at the overall picture and the long-term objectives. The U.S. government should eventually determine how long its citizens will maintain an active military presence in the Middle East.

Discussions between individuals, especially those with differing points of view, is a positive sign. As college students, we have an opportunity to bring about change. We can't do it, however, if we aren't asking the important questions and becoming well-informed.

NO, I AM NOT A LESBIAN

But if I were, I sure wouldn't be ashamed of it

BRANDI HERTIG
Brandi is a junior in print journalism. You can send e-mail to Brandi at bh0377@ksu.edu.

I guess I could fit the equation — short hair, comfortable shoes, a love for the Indigo Girls and Ani DiFranco, an occasional bandanna about the head. But the alarming truth is I'm simply not a lesbian.

Don't be so surprised. During the past year, I have had more than my fair share of inquiries about my sexuality (not as if it's really anyone's business anyway). Understand that I am not offended by people thinking I'm a lesbian. I am offended by the fact that people seem to feel they are entitled to ask about someone's sexuality if they think that person is gay.

I've never heard someone say, "Are you a hetero or something?"

Like that nice guy who e-mailed me last semester, asking me if I was "bi or something." He felt it was his God-given right to ask me this, because his lil' sis is a lesbian. Well, Hoss, good for your little sis and all, but I'm just not in the family.

He seemed to think I hate men (which I'm sure is not a basis for all of lesbianism anyway). The truth is, I have a general dislike for the population at large.

In fact, I have found much less to like about women than I have about men.

I am much more at ease in the company of men than I am in women's.

Women are catty. Women smell like a variety of floral arrangements. Women have a much easier time being fake than men do. We're taught from an early age to be competitive with one another. Anyway, I've seen one too many of us stick out her boobs and turn off her brain. This is where I thank God I am a woman (believe it or not), because I can't imagine having to go through some sort of courtship/mating thing with one of them. So, therefore, gentle readers, I am not a lesbian. Stop asking, and stop soliciting.

I have to admit I am absolutely intrigued by the whole homosexuality/bisexuality thing. You could call me a friend of the family. I realize this doesn't help me in my quest to prove my utter hetero-ness. As my friend Tara said upon my purchase of a copy of The Advocate, "Brandi, you're just perpetuating the myth." I'm really not trying to cause a stir. One shouldn't have to be gay to enjoy the wit and humor of The Advocate. What can I say — I love gay people.

There have been times when I've wished I were a lesbian, because, despite of all the ill will of women folk, sometimes men can be worse. And Claire Danes is awful cute. But, just like gay people can't will themselves un-gay, I can't do the opposite.

But even though my sexual preference doesn't match up quite right, my sympathies will always fall with those who bear the inverted pink triangle. After all, it's hard not to have sympathy when people are denied rights "normal" people are allowed to have (which are privileges garnered mainly by white heterosexual men). I guess I have it easy — I'm a white middle-class heterosexual female in America.

The fact that I don't really face much of the prejudices that homosexuals, bisexuals and minorities face makes me feel terribly guilty. A swap of a few genes, and I could've been in their shoes.

They deserve not only my support, but everyone's.

Again, I'm not a lesbian. But I would be damn proud if I were one.

Recent illness invokes desire to serve others

SHANE FOSBURG/Collegian

I felt ill the first few days of this week. If you saw me walking across campus, you probably noticed my gloomy appearance. I suppose the thought of resting in bed with no responsibility enticed me. You have felt it, too. Sitting in class. Every thought demands your body to wince with pain. You have to force yourself to function in spite of the fatigue.

I did have an aide come to my rescue, though. After calling a friend and describing my sickness, I was promptly asked if there was anything that could be done for me. I admit this is the reason I called. I said indeed, there was something that could be done to help ease my misery.

I gave her my list: two 2-liter bottles of 7-Up, two oranges and a bottle of Tylenol. Mandy told me she would deliver them promptly. After a very short wait, the doorbell rang, and she entered with a grocery sack filled with my requested items.

Not only did Mandy fill my order, but she also brought a cherry cheesecake that her mother sent me during the weekend. Talk about good timing. When you have been ill, and a delicious cake is presented to you, your eyes widen and your stomach begs to be fed. Thanks for the cake, Bonnie.

These deeds of kindness express the actions of Jesus. I have been reading through Matthew's account of the life of Christ for the past few weeks.

I had forgotten how often Jesus served people. That is what he did almost exclusively.

I have realized that Jesus' life was in contrast to what I do too often — looking out for myself. I have posed this question: Do I want to live my remaining college years in selfish pursuit? And if so, what will give me motive to break the habit after I graduate?

When I die, I want to be remembered as a man who honored God by unselfishly giving of himself to serve others. I do not want to be remembered for what I accomplished, what I had on my résumé or even how I did good things. I believe there is a time when personal achievements can be acknowledged — the scholarship applications many of you have completed within the past month are a good example. But I have found myself extending this ego further than my portfolio. My personal advantage has been deciding what activities I will choose to participate in. Unfortunately, many prodigious opportunities have fallen on the wayside because of my narrow focus.

Serving. It is an uncomfortable concept to master. Jesus is arguably the greatest leader who has ever walked on this earth, yet he lived a life that was devoted to serving others. He served out of compassion for people who would never be able to repay him for his time or services.

He effectively administered consistent acts of kindness. If he had sought recognition and fame (even though he deserved it), he would have missed touching so many lives. Serving wholeheartedly is one trait that marks this man different from all others.

If I could only harness my ideas of becoming successful and instead allow ambition to run in wild pursuit of serving others. But it is so challenging.

Rush Limbaugh once said that when he chased fame and fortune, he was less happy and made less money than when he pursued things he truly enjoyed. He found the most contentment in fulfilling his heart's desire. He now serves the conservative cause with his Excellence In Broadcast network. He is the host of the most-listened-to talk radio show on the globe. He couldn't have achieved the prestige he now has if he had sought selfish ambition.

I believe that when you seek your calling instead of trying to make something happen for yourself, you will find the greatest joy.

My advice: Serve people by pursuing the desires that God places in your heart. And remember, when you seek fulfillment in good fortune, you lose contentment in the now. If fame and wealth are given to you, so be it, but don't waste your life trying to attain them.

If you do, you will never find happiness.

Inauguration needed Wefald's attendance

Editor,
Last Saturday, Kay Schallenkamp was inaugurated as the 14th president of Emporia State University in an impressive ceremony. Forty-four institutions of higher learning were represented.

While many of these representatives were alumni who are on the ESU faculty or living in the Emporia community, more than half were college or university administrators.

K-State was represented by Dean Holen, college of education, and several alumni.

As a K-State alumna, it was disappointing that neither my alma mater's president, provost nor any vice president attended. Nine university presidents from five states including Wichita State University, Fort Hays State University and Pittsburg State University were present along with a dozen provosts or vice presidents. But not K-State.

One would think President Jon Wefald would have been on hand to officially welcome his newest colleague in the Kansas Board of Regents system. For him to be absent from these festivities is, in my mind, disrespectful to Schallenkamp, discourteous to the Emporia community and an embarrassment to our local alumni and supporters of the Purple Pride.

Anti-immigrant laws intensify racism in U.S.

Editor,

Monday's Collegian featured an opinion piece written by Santos Ramirez. While I think that his opinions were valid, they are in need of some expansion. Ramirez said we should not blame immigrants for some of the problems with our nation. I agree with this, but the deeper issues come with the definition of an immigrant.

I was born in Texas. Sure, you might say I am a son of an immigrant, but both my parents worked hard to get ahead. My dad served his time in the military and performed his duties in Desert Storm, and I cannot think of anybody that would say he was a bad immigrant. We are all individuals, and we should be judged that way. This is where the problem with Ramirez's opinion comes from. While he would argue that my father is the perfect example of what he was writing about, this leaves my status in the air.

I am not an immigrant. The reason I don't support measures such as Proposition 187 and English Only, is because people would have the tendency to classify me as an immigrant. I am not. These issues only serve to greater divide the nation. Proposition 187 would turn doctors, teachers, police officers and other social workers into hunters of skin color. What other determinant would they have to distinguish citizens from immigrants? How would you feel if you were denied emergency medical treatment until you could prove that you were a citizen? That type of treatment of any member of our society should not be tolerated.

What about English Only or Official English? Nobody at this university should support this measure. It would only limit us. I speak English and Spanish. So what would you think of me when I learn French, Chinese or Russian? Would I be a lesser citizen in that case because instead of only one language, I knew two or three or four? That's ridiculous.

As a citizen of this nation, I can tell that these propositions are not for me. What about this issue of immigration? If we feel that there are too many people, then we should change the laws in a responsible and fair way that would not stop one group of people from entering. Let's remember that many Mexicans originally didn't cross the border, the border crossed them. Just as with any group living in the United States, Latinos have a strong national history that has to be reviewed.

I enjoyed reading the opinions of Ramirez. It gave me time to reflect upon my identity.

I know that I am not an immigrant, but do you? More importantly, should that matter?

Committee explains library-fee opposition

Editor,

As members of the Student Senate Ad Hoc Committee on Library Subscriptions, we would like to explain the reasoning behind our recommendation not to support a privilege fee for funding library subscriptions.

1. We believe the library is an essential part of our educational experience at K-State, not a privilege. Asking students to pay a privilege fee for periodical subscriptions would be equivalent to a privilege fee for attending class. Charging privilege fees for basic operations of a state institution goes against the principles of a land-grant university. Privilege fees should be reserved for those things that enhance our education, not integral components.

2. Students already contribute $323,142 per year for the library's expansion, financing a $5.5 million note.

3. If a privilege fee were instituted, students would be the only group guaranteed to contribute to the library's budget for more than one year.

The KSU Foundation support is being provided on a yearly basis and requires renewal each year. The state of Kansas has only agreed to a 0.5-percent increase in other operating expenses for the library for fiscal year 1998-99. While a sunset clause is a good idea in theory, there is no way to ensure fees for the library would cease after five years.

Financing the library is neither the responsibility of the students, nor is it in the best interest of the K-State student body.

While a privilege fee is perceived as an easy source of funding, we feel the burden of improving the library should not lie with the students.

A quality library is not a student privilege, it is an essential component of a quality university.

Islamic student refutes others' misconceptions

CLAUDETTE RILEY
Kansas State Collegian

General misconceptions of Islam were refuted during the third International Coffee hour Wednesday afternoon at the International Student Center.

Majed Khan, graduate student in electrical engineering, spoke about his experiences with Islam and how being a Muslim brought him a deep peace.

"This topic is so big and so widely misinterpreted," Khan said. "A Muslim is a person who submits to the creator, and submitting brings true peace."

Islam as a religion is centered around the belief in one creator who created the entire universe and brings order to everything in it. Islam embraces the teachings of the gospel and Torah, but Khan said the teachings of Mohammed bring the final interpretation.

Khan said Mohammed was a prophet sent for all people.

"He sent messengers from Adam and Mohammed, peace be upon him, to guide us on the right path," Khan said. "Islam looks to me like a peaceful religion. There is tolerance in Islam, but people can get different ideas."

Khan brought out magazine articles from World & I, and he discussed the difference between headlines and the content of the articles. News media representation of Islam is often wrong, Khan said.

He also talked about misconceptions over women's issues and the rights of Muslim individuals.

"To me, a woman, whether she's a Muslim or not, but modest is the better way," Khan said. "If you look at what Islam teaches, you'll know the truths."

The points Khan shared about inheritance and marriage laws brought out heated comments and questions from the audience.

The five pillars of Islam and the seven articles of faith teach peace and bring individuals closer to Allah. Understanding the teachings of Islam can only come through learning more about the religion, Khan said.

"If you hear something about Islam and don't ask questions or find a Muslim who is knowledgeable, then your head comes up with a lot of possibilities," Khan said.

Abra Lyman, junior in anthropology, said discussing the misconceptions of Islam with students from different faiths interested her enough to attend the coffee hour.

"I came hoping people would be talking about some of the complex societal issues like the treatment of women and their role," Lyman said.

"It would be great if everyone could listen with more of an open mind," she said. "It's interesting to listen. Everyone is generalizing about the issues, and that's why we cannot agree."

Eldon Epp, pastor for the Manhattan Mennonite Church and adviser for the Manhattan Mennonite Church student group, said he is interested in interfaith dialogues and wanted to talk more about Islam because of a possible military strike against Iraq.

"Given that we're perhaps headed toward war, I thought dialogues like this might be important," Epp said. "One of our main differences between Americans and Iraqis is religion."

Students to write creative responses to exhibits

JOSHUA STURGILL
Kansas State Collegian

Advanced K-State English students will be creating a collection of written works for the Mariana Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

Chris Cokinos of the Department of English, jointly with Beach Museum Education Coordinator Kathrine Walker Schlageck, will use the submissions to create a "Gallery Guide" for a national touring exhibition later this spring.

The guide will help viewers interpret the works of the exhibition, "The Archaeology of the Edge: Paintings by Clarence Morgan." The collection of abstract images will be shown at the museum April 4 through June 21.

Schlageck said she hopes the project will give students a voice in the exhibit.

"Our goal is to find a way to personalize exhibits and make them more a part of this campus. We're trying to make sure we appeal to as many people as possible," Schlageck said.

She said the guide will make the works more accessible.

"Pure abstraction is unique and challenging," Schlageck said. "The students' work will add another layer of meaning to the paintings." Schlageck said people who are more comfortable with writing than with art will especially enjoy the guide.

As education coordinator, Schlageck has worked with several of the university's departments.

"When professors contact me, I can help design a tour of the museum that fits their curriculum," she said.

She added that in the future she hopes to be able to have dance or dramatic responses to exhibits.

The idea for a written guide to the Morgan exhibit came from Walker's work and from poetry students using past exhibitions to generate subjects for their poems.

"It grew out of having classes go over to the museum anyway," said Cokinos. "Kathrine suggested doing something more formal."

The formal process will begin at a slide show of Morgan's works where responders can view his paintings before the actual exhibition. Responders will then submit writing that speaks with or reacts to his work and style for use in the guide.

More info?
Students interested in submitting work for the guide are encouraged to contact Chris Cokinos or Elizabeth Dodd in the English department for more information at 532-6716.

Defining Bible history, literature difficult, professor says

► TEACHING RELIGION OFTEN REQUIRES ADVOCACY, YET TOLERANCE FOR OPPOSING VIEWPOINTS.

JENNIFER JANSONIUS
Kansas State Collegian

Margaret Conrow, associate professor of English, lectured about teaching the Bible in modern classrooms and some problems that can occur due to the sensitivity of the topic.

Thursday's lecture, "What Does It Mean to Teach the Bible? Issues of History, Literature, and Advocacy," was the first of a departmental series on scholarly research or topics of interest directed toward the English department.

To understand how she presented the history of the Bible, Conrow gave examples of questions she asks her students.

Conrow said she asks students to define what kind of literature the Bible is at the beginning of her classes.

Conrow said she believes the Bible is an historical document, and it contains literature and history.

"The Bible is an interpretation of history," she said. "We do discuss some of the same things as any literature class."

As an example of literary usage, Conrow said the use of rhetorical questions is frequent in the Bible, to make the reader become more involved.

"Up to a certain point, the Bible is the same as any other literature, but the writers believed they were writing God's truth," she said.

Conrow said there are new boundaries to political correctness every instructor has to face.

"Every instructor has a point of view, and they have to decide how to treat alternative views," she said.

Conrow said each instructor has to decide how aggressive to be, and if the instructor lets the conversation roam, students often keep opinions to themselves.

"I don't know if my strategies are the right ones. I don't know which ones are the best," she said. "Fundamentalist students will challenge your views."

Greg Eiselein, director of graduate studies of English and organizer of the colloquium series, said he enjoyed the talk.

"I appreciated the complexity of the way she dealt with a complex issue. She said you have to know how you manage a classroom with its different strengths," he said.

Eiselein said he thought it was also interesting in how she handled the complexity of the history and literature aspects.

David Smit, associate professor of English and assistant department head, said the talk was informative.

"Margaret did a good job presenting the issues people have to face when they read the Bible," he said. "Facing issues in reading the Bible is a metaphor for reading all literature. No text is obvious. It has to be interpreted."

In his dreadlocks and wire-rimmed glasses, Byron defies bland swing-era stereotypes before he even plays a note. His musical interests range from Stravinsky to Motown.

In addition to the first musical set, Byron and his friends will perform a remarkable score he created to Scar of Shame. This 1920s silent classic once labeled a "race movie," focuses on the life of urban blacks in the 1920s.

"Byron plays with almost alarming command. If he carries anything from his klezmer work, it is his ability to make the clarinet cry, laugh, lecture and mourn as if it were human..."

K-STATE PITCHER BRAD GROGAN HURLS THE BASEBALL TOWARD HOME PLATE DURING WEDNESDAY'S GAME AGAINST DOANE AT FRANK MYERS FIELD. THE CATS WON THE GAME 13-3.

Wildcats using spring games for experience

JEREMY KELLEY
Kansas State Collegian

If one thing is illustrious of K-State's start to the 1998 baseball season, it's that Coach Mike Clark has been able to use nearly every player on his 35-man roster.

Through the past seven games, Clark has positioned different players at different spots for the opportunity to get playing time in the field.

"That's what these games are all about," Clark said. "In case we have an injury or they get put into a pinch-hitting situation, we need to get these guys as much experience as possible."

Every position player, including all pitchers, have had at least an inning on the field or at the plate, except for pitchers Mickey Blount, who is nursing a tender shoulder, and Casey Cook, and fielders Justin Raaf and Jeff Schuler.

"We have a lot of new guys this year," pitcher Jason Wells said. "We have a lot of community college transfers who have never played at this level before. Overall, I think that will make us better as a team because every guy is fighting for a position."

All in all, the Cats have 19 newcomers on the roster with 12 community college transfers joining the ranks of seven true freshmen. These early games give the newcomers a chance to develop rhythm and enhance their overall skills.

"It's a great chance for us just to get our rhythm down and to see live pitching early in the season," third baseman Josh Marn said. "We have a long year ahead of us, and it's good to get focused here early and get to what it feels like to hit the ball down day-in and day-out."

This weekend, the Cats will continue to gain some much-needed time on the field in the Century Cellnet Classic in Monroe, La. K-State will tango with Southeast Louisiana today and Sunday and play Northeast Louisiana on Saturday.

Clark said he would like to use these games to work on several things, such as situational hitting, bunting and the hit-and-run.

"We need to work on the things that will help us down the road," he said. "After the Missouri Western game we got out to a big lead, so I couldn't work on the hit-and-run or bunting or anything like that because you just don't do that in baseball — run the score up on them."

Tennis team hopes to get back on track with weekend meets

DAN CATALDI
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State tennis team will look to rebound from its first two defeats of the year with two dual meets this weekend.

Last weekend, the Wildcats dropped matches to Wisconsin and Northwestern, each an 8-1 score, to fall to 2-2 on the season.

Despite the lopsided losses, K-State coach Steve Bietau said he isn't worrying yet.

"Concerned is a good word," Bietau said, "but worried is not accurate. We are starting three freshmen, and they handled things pretty well. This was their first weekend out against this level of competition."

Both Cat victories came at No. 1 singles, where Yana Dorodnova swept a pair of matches over nationally ranked opponents to move to 4-0 on the season.

Dorodnova is ranked 95th in the nation, but that ranking doesn't include her two wins last weekend.

"Yana played extremely well," Bietau said. "She has consistently been playing attacking tennis, and she has really been hanging in there under pressure."

Friday, she beat 77th-ranked Andrea Nathan of Wisconsin in three sets. She followed that up with another three-set win over 59th-ranked Katherine Nasser.

This weekend, the competition doesn't get any easier as the Cats face two opponents for the first time this season.

Saturday, they square off against the Utah Utes in a 1 p.m. match at the Cottonwood Racquet Club in Manhattan.

At No. 1 singles, Dorodnova likely will face Anna Svedenhov, the No. 43 player in the nation.

This is an important meet for the Cats, Bietau said, Utah is in their NCAA region, and a victory over the Utes could be an important early season step toward an NCAA Tournament bid.

"This is really a pretty big rivalry for us," Bietau said. "We play them every year, and we've gone back and forth with them."

Also, he said it's important to see the team's progress after a tough weekend up north.

"We need to take some more steps in the doubles," Bietau said.

Sunday, the Cats welcome the Drake Bulldogs for a dual meet.

"We don't know much about Drake," Bietau said. "We haven't played them in about four years."

The Drake meet is scheduled for 2 p.m. at the Cottonwood Racquet Club.

Admission to both meets is free.

"We are just looking to improve and put ourselves in a better position as far as the NCAAs go, and put ourselves in a better position to be ready for our conference matches," Bietau said.

"THIS IS REALLY A PRETTY BIG RIVALRY FOR US. WE PLAY THEM EVERY YEAR, AND WE'VE GONE BACK AND FORTH WITH THEM."

I can in practice to step it up on the road."

At 10-13 overall and 4-9 in the Big 12, the Cats' chances of being in the top half of the final conference standings are gone, but they are still playing for a favorable seed in the Big 12 Tournament in Kansas City, Mo., starting March 3.

"I want to be eighth or ninth in this league instead of 11th or 12th," Patterson said. "Our team has to remain focused on getting better and wanting to put themselves in the position to be able to still achieve some positive things in the stretch run."

Despite not having won a conference road game this season, the Cats have been competitive in recent games away from Bramlage Coliseum. The Cats led at halftime in each of their past three road games, but lost it in the second half each time.

Patterson said the Cats need to step up in practice to be ready to hold on for 40 minutes Saturday.

"There's a big challenge on the horizon tomorrow," Patterson said after the Iowa State game Wednesday. "We've got to step up and come in here with an attitude that we're going to get better, and I hope that this team does."

Colts 2 two former Cats to contracts

The Indianapolis Colts signed 16 players to contracts Thursday, including former Wildcats Mitch Running and Jason Johnson.

Running, a wide receiver for the Colts from 1992 to 1995, is third on K-State's all-time charts with 1,821 receiving yards and ranks fourth with 133 career catches.

Johnson, a center, earned letters from 1993 to 1996. His class was the first from K-State to go to bowls all four years.

NCAA BASKETBALL

Men's top-25 results

No. 11 New Mexico 95, Texas-El Paso 71

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Kenny Thomas had a career-high 31 points, and Royce Olney tied the school record with eight three-pointers as New Mexico won its eighth-straight game.

New Mexico (21-3, 11-1 Western Athletic) was tough from long range once again, tying the school and WAC record with 18 three-pointers. The Lobos are second nationally with an average of 10 threes per game.

Olney, who finished with 26 points, hit his eighth three-pointer with 1:43 left, giving him a share of the UNM record with Marlow White and teammate Clayton Shields — who set the school record for career threes with his 265th.

Thomas also had 12 rebounds and a career-high four three-pointers as New Mexico extended the nation's second-longest home winning streak to 41 games.

William Smith and Alton Sanders each scored 14 points for UTEP (12-12, 3-9 WAC).

No. 17 Cincinnati 93, Alabama-Birmingham 76

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Only hours after being told his mom had died, Ruben Patterson scored a career-high 32 points to lead No. 17 Cincinnati to a 93-76 win over Alabama-Birmingham on Thursday.

Cincinnati coach Bobby Huggins said he learned early Thursday morning that Charlene Patterson died of a heart attack the night before in Ohio. After learning the news, Patterson and his family decided he should stay with the team in Birmingham and return to Cleveland on Saturday.

Patterson was 12-of-21 from the floor and five-of-seven at the foul line to lead Cincinnati (20-5, 11-2) into a first-place tie with UNC-Charlotte in the Conference USA American Division.

Antonio Jackson and Damon Cobb each scored 10 for the Blazers (15-10, 7-6), who never got closer than 12 points in the last 10 minutes.

Wake Forest 83, No. 25 Maryland 79

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Freshman Robert O'Kelley scored a career-high 31 points, and Wake Forest withstood a big last-minute rally.

Trailing by as much as 19 points in the second half, the Terrapins outscored Wake Forest 10-1 within an 18-second span to close to 80-77 with about 34 seconds left.

Maryland had a chance to tie after Wake Forest threw away the ensuing inbound pass, but Laron Profit threw up an air ball with 13.7 seconds remaining.

Niki Arinze then made three-of-four free throws in the final 11.5 seconds to seal the victory for Wake Forest (13-11, 5-8).

Laron Profit scored 19 of his 26 points in the second half for Maryland (15-9, 8-6), which was troubled by turnovers and poor perimeter shooting in losing at home for only the second time this season.

Texas Tech coach apologizes for comments

LUBBOCK, Texas — Texas Tech coach James Dickey apologized Thursday for comments about officiating in a game against Oklahoma State that earned him reprimands from the Big 12 Conference and the university.

"I was wrong in publicly voicing my concerns regarding the officiating last night following the Oklahoma State game," Dickey said in a statement released through the school.

Texas Tech's Cory Carr was called for a controversial foul as he battled for a rebound with the Cowboys' Brett Robisch with 3.5 seconds remaining.

Robisch made both free throws, giving Oklahoma State an 83-81 victory Wednesday night in the game played in Lubbock.

"I understand the action taken by the university administration and the Big 12 and accept their decision. We have a league policy prohibiting commenting on officiating, which I fully understand and certainly need to abide by," he said.

The league considers any public comments about officiating to be a violation of Big 12 policy.

Athletics Director Gerald Myers said all coaches are familiar with Big 12 rules and the code of conduct and are expected to abide by them.

"I have addressed this situation internally with the appropriate action and I am convinced that events such as this will not reoccur," Myers said in a statement.

IVAN KOZAR/Collegian

FORMER K-STATE HIGH JUMPER GWEN WENTLAND, WHO COMPETED INDEPENDENTLY, ATTEMPTS TO CLEAR THE BAR AT A COMPETITION THURSDAY AFTERNOON IN AHEARN FIELD HOUSE. THE COMPETITION WAS PART OF THE KSU INVITATIONAL THAT FEATURED SCHOOLS FROM AROUND KANSAS.

Zsivoczky leads K-State sweep of high jump

JOEL WHITE
Kansas State Collegian

Although K-State high jumper Attila Zsivoczky unsuccessfully flirted with an Ahearn Field House record Thursday night in the KSU Invitational, he was able to secure the gold medal.

After clearing 7 feet, 3 3/4 inches, a provisional NCAA Championships qualifying mark and a personal best, Zsivoczky had two obstacles for the gold — the crossbar resting at 7-5 and teammate Nathan Leeper, ranked No. 6 in the nation.

Leeper cleared the bar at 7-2 1/2, and passed on the next height — 7-3 3/4, before attempting 7-5. His risk failed to pay off as he missed all three attempts at 7-5.

"I wanted to have a good jump going into next weekend, but it didn't happen," Leeper said. "I figured I already got that height this year, so I decided to go big and try to bust a 7-5. Here it was all right, but once you get into a big meet, you don't want to do that."

Leeper finished in second place; former all-American Itai Margalit, Israel's No. 2 high jumper, finished third; and Charles Burney, ranked second among U.S. collegiate high jumpers, finished fourth. Leeper, Margalit and Burney all cleared 7-2

ZSIVOCZKY

1/2, while Ed Broxterman, a 1996 Olympian, took fifth place with a jump of 6-10 3/4.

Zsivoczky, a multi-event athlete, will compete in the heptathlon next week in the Big 12 Championships. He said he needed to compete well in high jump this week to qualify for the NCAA Championships.

"I was focusing on this meet, and it just happened," Zsivoczky said. "I still made mistakes, but usually I'm worse."

While Zsivoczky was making a name for himself by beating a stacked field, K-State weight thrower Renetta Seiler performed up to expectations.

Seiler captured the gold with a throw of 66 feet, 7 1/4 inches, despite pain in her left wrist caused by torn cartilage.

"I'm just starting to get back into my rhythm," Seiler said. "The only thing I have to improve is my finish. My finish will add the three or four feet that I need."

Seiler is the second-ranked collegiate weight thrower in the nation. She said she is focusing on the national meet.

Her best throw this season, 67-9, is nearly three feet behind the nation's best throw.

"Right now, I'm just looking forward to the national meet," she said.

She said she is not worried about next week's Big 12 Championships if she throws to her potential.

"I'm consistently throwing 63 to 65 feet," she said. "If I throw 63 at the Big 12, I'll win it."

Cats to battle Cowgirls

DAN MERKER
Kansas State Collegian

The road has been tough for the K-State women's basketball team. The Wildcats have yet to win a Big 12 road game this season. Their closest call was a 65-62 loss on Feb. 7 at Kansas.

Now is the last chance for the Cats to steal a win in another Big 12 team's building. K-State starts its final road trip of the season Saturday at Oklahoma State.

The Cowgirls are 9-2 in Stillwater this season, losing only to the conference's top two teams — Texas Tech and Iowa State. K-State's only road win of the season was a Dec. 13 triumph at Ohio State, 67-64.

Each team is coming off a loss on Wednesday night. The Cowgirls lost to Baylor, 72-64, while the Cats fell at home to No. 24 Iowa State, 80-50. Wednesday night's game was one the Cats said they want to forget.

"I don't want to bring the same team to Oklahoma State that we had in Bramlage," K-State coach Deb Patterson said.

K-State was dominated in virtually every facet of the game. The difference in play showed on the scoreboard, leaving the Cats with their second-worst defeat of the season.

The players also said they want to do everything they can to turn things around and play a better game than they did against Iowa State.

"After this, I'm determined to step up on the road, pull together and get a much-needed win," forward Jenny Coalson said. "I'm going to work as hard as

Putting football team on court KSU's best shot to beat (up) Jayhawks

The time has come for the losing to stop. The Kansas Jayhawks have out-jumped, out-hustled, out-shot, out-fouled, out-rebounded and just plain out-played the Cats in basketball one too many times. In response, I have concocted a way to finally beat the Hawks.

In order to ensure a K-State win against Kansas in the Big 12 Tournament, drastic measures must be taken.

So here's the plan. The next time K-State plays Kansas in basketball, we send some guys who expect to win, who know how to beat Kansas. We send the football team.

Keep in mind, we're not just sending 12 football players — we're sending the entire team. This way, the Cats will have plenty of fouls to give. It'll give double-bonus new meaning.

Granted, the football players don't possess the shooting ability or overall basketball ability of the Jayhawk players. But what they lack in basketball ability they will easily make up for in unadulterated physical play.

The way I figure it, we put offensive tackle Ryan Young at center. Young is 6 feet 6 inches, 330 pounds. Raef LaFrentz isn't going to box Young out too many times. If he does, Young will deliver a forearm shiver to the back of LaFrentz's skull, dropping him to the floor.

Boom — one less All-American.

Now that LaFrentz is down, we put everybody's favorite floor general, Michael Bishop, at the point. Bishop talked more smack during football season than Reggie Miller did the last time he played in New York. Kansas point guard Ryan Robertson is likely to hear some new words out of Bishop's mouth.

You have to figure even if Robertson tries to steal the ball from Bishop while Bishop is talking trash, Bishop could just launch an ill-advised pass from the nuclear warhead he calmly refers to as his arm, straight into Robertson's face.

Boom — one less point guard.

At least Robertson makes it longer than LaFrentz.

Moving on, we'll throw Cephus Scott in at the off-guard position. While in high school, the 6-foot-2-inch Scott led his league in rebounding. Not a big deal except, at the time, Scott could only use his right arm due to an injury suffered in a football game.

With this in mind, when Scott plays against KU at the Big 12 Tournament, we'll tie his left arm to his body just for old-times sake. After all, it's only fair to the Jayhawks.

But the first time Kansas off-guard Billy Thomas drains a three-pointer against Scott, we'll have Casey Martin help Scott file a lawsuit against the NCAA demanding that Scott be allowed to use a golf cart on the court.

If the lawsuit succeeds, we'll have an All-American with a concussion lying on the floor, a point guard with a facelift and a guy with a good arm tied to his chest driving around the court in a golf cart with his knee on the steering wheel so he can still shoot the rock.

At this point, you have to wonder if the refs will allow Scott to stock beer in the back of the cart. If they do, I must ride along.

OK, we have a guy with a golf cart and a sports columnist drinking beer in the passenger seat, but we still don't have anyone to guard the other Kansas All-American, Paul Pierce.

We could put defensive tackle Jerome Evans on Pierce. Evans is 6 feet 6 inches, 305 pounds.

That might not do — Pierce is too fast for that. Besides, after seeing his buddy LaFrentz rushed to KU Medical Center, he won't be too giddy about letting anyone guarding him get too close.

For this job we are going to need a guy who is superhuman. We need a guy who can do anything.

Yes, folks, we need Bill Snyder.

We'll put Snyder on Pierce, and the first time Pierce so much as hand checks Snyder, every Wildcat fan watching the game in Kemper Arena will freak out, rush the floor and quickly form a mob with the sole purpose of killing Pierce.

You just don't mess with Snyder around rabid Wildcat fans. I'd rather give mouth to mouth resuscitation to a fully cognizant grizzly bear than do something negative toward Bill.

Once this mob scene breaks out, Kansas will have to forfeit because that thoughtless Pierce started a riot.

End of story. K-State gets its first win over Kansas in basketball since 1994. That's 12 straight games, but who's counting?

SNYDER: DOES HE HAVE WHAT IT TAKES TO ROCK THE HAWKS' CHALK?

Bar to blame for crime, convict suit says

ALECIA TERRELL
Kansas State Collegian

A convicted child molester said an Aggieville bar is the cause of his crime.

He's suing Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon for $50,000.

Daniel Dixon Jr., a Manhattan resident now in prison for sodomy and taking indecent liberties with a 15-year-old girl, is suing Chance for admitting the girl. According to court documents, Dixon's case states the bar is to blame for admitting the girl. Dixon claims the incident took place around 11:30 p.m. on June 6, 1996.

Mike Hodges, assistant manager of Chance, said he and his lawyer, Troy Huser, are moving to have the case dismissed.

"We have no proof that he was even in here that night. He could be making the whole story up," Hodges said.

A hearing is scheduled before District Court Judge Meryl Wilson for 2:15 p.m. today. Dixon plans to represent himself.

Hodges said it's difficult for him to remember the event, which took place almost two years ago. Dixon's claims also place the time of the incident before Manhattan's midnight curfew for teen-agers, Hodges said.

"If it happened at 11:30 p.m. like Dixon said, it wasn't even curfew yet. Curfew is not until midnight. If the girl was in here, she must have gotten in with a fake ID," he said.

Hodges also said Chance is not only a bar, but a restaurant.

"We get families in here all the time during the day and early evening," he said. "I don't want people to think we allow little kids in here all the time, because we don't. We have no legal obligation to keep underage kids out of the bar, we just can't serve them alcohol."

According to court documents,

Dixon, now 27, said he believed the girl was older than 18 because she was in the bar. They also state he had consensual sex with the girl, and he was later arrested, charged and convicted by a jury in October 1996.

Dixon is in state prison in Hutchinson, Kan., serving 73 months for criminal sodomy and 49 months for indecent liberties.

He said Chance violated state law by acting in a reckless and negligent manner, according to court documents.

Hodges said he thinks the whole story is a farce and said he would like the judge to dismiss the case.

Ejected student charges bias in revocation of hall contract

JOSHUA STURGILL
Kansas State Collegian

A student's residence hall contract was revoked two weeks ago, and the student was forced to leave after being charged with violating conduct codes in Marlatt Hall.

"The dorm was out to get me the whole time," Robert Illing, freshman undecided, said of the decision to remove him from the residence hall system on Feb. 4.

The incident that prompted a hall judicial board review of Illing's conduct occurred Nov. 6, according to a University Police Standard Offense Report.

Illing said he dropped a bottle in the stairwell and Jon Perez, senior in accounting and sixth floor resident assistant, thought Illing threw the bottle at him. Illing said Perez then chased him and two other residents to a friend's room and was calling to them to come out.

Illing said Perez was acting violently and pushed in the door to come into the room, which he said he thought was against conduct codes for an RA.

Perez deferred comment to Derek Jackson, assistant director of residence life.

Jackson said Illing received notice on Feb. 4 that his contract would be terminated on Feb. 6.

"It was a confidential judicial and disciplinary matter, and the residence hall followed the proper procedures for the judicial board hearing," Jackson said.

At the judicial board hearing on Dec. 11, Illing was found in violation of conduct codes KSU-SCC 3, 10, 11 and 18, which include disorderly behavior, violation of university policy and behavior that threatens the physical safety of any person.

According to the public minutes of the hearing, Illing was sanctioned to write a one-page formal apology to Perez and was placed on probation for the duration of the semester. Illing said he was not allowed to bring witnesses to speak on his behalf.

Violation of probation would have resulted in complete removal from the residence hall system, according to the minutes.

The judicial board also recommended that Illing be transferred from Marlatt to another residence hall and have no visitation rights for the duration of the 1997-98 academic year. The recommendation was made to Director of Housing and Dining Chuck Werring.

Illing appealed the verdict to a Student Governing Association Tribunal that voted to uphold the judicial board's original decision.

Del Hininger, freshman in sociology and resident of Marlatt, said the process was slow because of finals week, and Illing was not given enough warning about the termination of his contract.

"It just came out of the blue," Hininger said. "He got the notice about 10 p.m. on Wednesday and had to be out by 5 on Friday."

Illing complained that he didn't know he was going to be removed from the residence halls altogether and that he was not given the full amount of time to move out of the residence hall.

"They didn't even give me 48 hours. I had to miss class to move out or else they said I'd be arrested," Illing said. "I called Housing and Dining to get more time, but they wouldn't even give me another hour."

He also said the judicial board seemed to ignore his concern about Perez's behavior.

"The board was all Perez's friends," he said. Brice Pufahl, senior in electrical engineering, second floor RA of Marlatt, said Illing had a history of misbehavior in the hall.

"He hated authority," Pufahl said. "He was charged with stealing lobby furniture several times. Anything he could do to make trouble, he would."

Pufahl added that he thought the board made the right decision.

Illing has made arrangements to live off-campus with friends.

Colleges team up, provide real-world situations

WYNN DALTON
Kansas State Collegian

Students are experiencing real-world situations through a partnership with the College of Agriculture and the College of Business Administration.

This partnership brought together three classes for a month-long case study of real-world companies.

Two students from Agribusiness Management Strategy, two students from Management Applications in Grain Processing Industry and one student from Administrative Strategy are grouped and given a case study that involves real companies with real decisions.

Using case studies is not a new method of teaching, but this particular method is uncommon.

Mike Boland, assistant professor of agricultural economics, said the partnership between the College of Agriculture and the College of Business Administration fosters an atmosphere more like the real world.

"This class is as close to a real-life experience as we can give to students in their undergraduate program, working in a multidisciplinary team and being asked to solve a real-life problem," Boland said.

"What we are trying to do is give our students some touches of what the real world is all about when they get out in that business world and in their careers."

Fred Fairchild, associate professor of grain science and industry, said the real world is a collaborating business.

"When you get out to the business world, you have to depend on a lot of people and in most cases it's a group decision or a team project. In that team project, you have many different talents that are brought to the table for a particular project. And not everybody has the same talent, which is good," Fairchild said.

One of this year's case studies involves 21st Century Alliance and the feasibility of that company investing in a dry edible bean processing plant. The second case involves Minnesota Corn Processors, which is in the process of deciding what to do with energy deregulation.

Cory Swartz, graduate assistant in business administration, said students will work on their case assignment for three weeks. During that time students will become familiar with industry trends, competitors' analyses, and the strengths and weaknesses of their individual companies.

At the end of three weeks, teams will give company recommendations to the class as a whole and will also get feedback from the chief executive officers of the analyzed companies.

Jill King, senior in agribusiness, said she appreciates the fact that chief executive officers from the two firms will be giving feedback and advice to the class.

"They obviously know what decisions they made and they can tell us what options they considered when making their decisions. It's great to have them tell us their perspective from the professional world so that we know what to

THE REAL WORLD

Speaker comically reveals methods to conquer rat race

Dan Zevin gave a testimonial of how to survive in the real world Thursday night in the Union Ballroom.

Author of "Entry-Level Life: A Complete Guide to Masquerading as a Member of the Real World," Zevin spoke to students in a comic dialogue about the essential skills needed to be successful in the business rat-race.

A 1991 graduate of New York University with a degree in journalism, Zevin has been a reporter for Rolling Stone. His articles have appeared in publications such as Mademoiselle, Spy and GQ. He also has appeared on The Today Show and National Public Radio.

"Faking your résumé is the key to landing a job. Exaggeration, exaggeration, exaggeration," Zevin said. These are things that your advisers and career counselors never told you, he added.

Zevin said that once most students graduate, they have no clear plan of what they want to do or whom they want to do it with. Whether it is finding a roommate, locating an apartment or falling in love with a significant other, all graduates need to remember that their peers are all in the same boat.

It doesn't matter to employers where you went to school, he said. The only people who care where, or if, you graduated are your parents, he said.

Changes in social patterns are evident after you attain your first job, Zevin said.

"Before, when you went out with your buddies, you went out 'drinking,' he said. "Now, you will be going out with your buddies for 'adrink.' The key is to find one beverage that will have the same effect that previously took a half a keg."

When searching for love, Zevin said the real world forces you to lower your standards.

"Right now, you are looking for Mister or Miss Right," he said. "A few months in the real world, you will be looking for Mister or Miss OK."

Zevin said one will have a more difficult time finding a compatible roommate than finding a soul mate. He said typical roommates can be broken down to three categories — anal retentives, animals and psychos.

The anal-retentive roommate will hide your stuff in the exact same place that your mother would put it; the animal roommates are those who are unable to perform tasks such as bathing; and psycho roommates are those who are addicted to Prozac, he said.

Zevin said his lecture was not to scare but to inform students of what is really out there.

"My buddies and I would sit around and tell stories about how horrible our days were," he said. "No one ever told us that the real world was this funny."

Zevin summed up his advice to students on conquering the real world with a simple phrase — "Just pretend you know what you are doing."

McCain to feature innovative jazz, cinema combo

CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

Jazz music and cinema will combine when the Don Byron Quintet performs at 8 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

Byron is a jazz clarinetist whose music is inspired by the stylings of Duke Ellington, Dizzy Gillespie and Miles Davis. He will perform his own original score of the 1920s silent film "Scar of Shame." The film, which will be shown along with the composition, focuses on urban black life and conflict within the black community. This is the first time a film has been featured in the McCain Performance Series.

Seven other musicians will join Byron to present a 30-minute set before the score is performed. These musicians include percussionist Pheeroan akLaff, pianist Uri Caine, trombonist Josh Roseman and trumpeter James Zollar, who was featured in the 1996 Robert Altman film "Kansas City." Byron himself also made an appearance in the film.

Byron was born into a musical family. His father played in a calypso band, while his mother was a pianist. In recent years, he was named Jazz Artist of the Year for 1990 by Down Beat magazine. He recently released an album titled "Bug Music."

Because of his experience and his score for the film "Scar of Shame," Byron is expected to affect his audiences in a variety of ways, said Sara Burdette, senior in public relations and publications editor for McCain performance programs.

"Having Don and his musicians play will not just be an educational experience but also a moving experience by having them put so much emotion into a silent film," said Burdette, who recently met Byron.

As a musician, Burdette said, Byron is something of a pioneer.

"He takes his music very seriously," she said. "He likes to be known as a 'creator.' He creates music. He doesn't just play."

David Frain, assistant director of McCain, agreed with Burdette's label of Byron as a pioneer in music.

"For him to have scored a silent film and take it on the road, this is certainly something our generation hasn't seen," he said.

Frain said silent movies haven't been combined with music since Fritz Lang's 1926 science fiction film "Metropolis." Rock music was added to that film in 1984.

“HE CREATES MUSIC. HE DOESN'T JUST PLAY.”

Crichton's 'Sphere' needs more time

CHRIS DEAN
Kansas State Collegian

Another Michael Crichton book has made its way to the big screen, and in adapted-Crichton fashion, read the book.

"Sphere" has all the makings of a good movie with decent writing, good acting, great visual effects and absolutely no time to pull it off.

Barry Levinson directs in this unfortunate attempt to combine space travel, time travel and deep-sea travel while still leaving enough time for a little character development. Nice thought.

When a space craft, assumed to be more than 300 years old, is found buried in a coral reef in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, five leaders are called in to investigate and make first contact with an alien race. All according to plan.

Too bad the plan was a fraud written by team leader and psychologist Norman Goodman (Dustin Hoffman) a decade ago for $35,000 (no expenses needed for research).

When Goodman is called in, he is surprised to find out people believed him and followed his advice to the letter, including calling in his recommended contact team, three friends/misfits who are missing just a few qualifications.

The crew, including Sharon Stone (without the standard shower scene) and Samuel L. Jackson (with a shower scene), are led into the depths of the Pacific and left there to fend for themselves when things inevitably go bad.

Visual effects make this movie, but as good as the killer jelly fish, 40-foot squids and golden-liquid, reality-altering alien life forms look, they are somewhat removed from logic and explanation.

The movie moves along at a fast pace, using book-like chapter breaks to avoid those nasty, time-consuming transitions, but in the end, they just run out of time to explain to the audience what is going on and end it with a "Wizard of Oz" explanation. (Click your heels together three times and all the bad men will go away.)

The people who designed the sets deserve awards. The people who still think you can condense a Crichton novel into a two-hour movie deserve treatment.

Rated PG-13 for human-slicing doors and live cremations, "Sphere" is a good movie if you can flow with the jumps of logic and try to make sense out of it later.

Just don't see it within 24 hours of an exam, due to extreme brain taxation.

Birdhouse show this weekend to feature folk singer

JOHN FRANSON
Kansas State Collegian

A veteran of several large folk festivals will play at 8 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan Center for the Arts. Singer-songwriter Celeste Krenz is bringing her blend of musical styles to the second BirdHouse concert of the season.

"Celeste is a very talented singer-songwriter," said David Kamerer, BirdHouse founder and assistant professor of journalism and mass communications. "She's a charming performer. She's a wonderful soprano voice."

Krenz, who lives in Denver, played at the Kerrville Folk Festival in Kerrville, Texas, and the Rocky Mountain Folk Festival in Lyons, Colo. She will be backed on second guitar by her husband and producer, Bob Tyler.

Kamerer said Krenz has more of a country influence than previous performers at the acoustic BirdHouse series.

"She veers on the folk side of country, or maybe the country side of folk," he said. "There'll be a little bit of very traditional country, and then the rest of the evening will be her singing her sort of more folk songs with sort of a western influence."

Kamerer said BirdHouse looks for talent over any particular style in the artists it books.

"What we're after is great songwriting and great performance," he said. "That's what makes us want to bring these people in."

Tickets for the performance are $10 for adults and $8 for students and seniors, and are available at the Dusty Bookshelf, the Manhattan Center for the Arts and at the door.

Cassandra &amp; Jack

There are two sides to every story. After an ugly breakup a few months ago, Jack and Cassie have put their differences aside to give advice to those in need.

Dear Cassie and Jack,
Another Valentine's Day came and went, and once again, I was alone. I'm just wondering what I am doing wrong. I don't get it. Sometimes, I find it impossible to meet men. I think I'm cursed. The only men who ever talk to me are men I don't like. So people tell me to lower my standards. How am I supposed to do that? And why should I, when nobody seems to be lowering theirs to fit me? So I end up with the same pattern: I have crush on guy A who has a girlfriend, while guy B has a crush on me, but I don't like him. Not even remotely. All my friends get the guys they want. Why can't I?

Lonely

Dear Lonely,
Love is a complicated equation. But I guarantee as soon as you stop looking, love will find you. Never lower your standards, but you might want to bend them once in a while and go out with someone just for fun. Every match doesn't have to be "the one."

Love, Cassie

Dear Lonely,
Sexual frustration can be tough to deal with. Luckily, you already have the answer right there in front of you. Yes, lower your standards. Regardless of what your friends want to tell you, love is not an easy thing to find.

A good thing for you is one person for one night sure is easy to find. There is a reason most bedroom activity takes place in the dark.

It's time to live a little and put an end to your frustration.

Call me,
Jack

Dear Jack,
I've been seeing this girl for a couple of months, and I want to start seeing other people. How do I let her loose without her going cool-psycho?

Sincerely,
Trapped in Manhattan

Dear Trapped,
This kind of reminds me of when Cassie and I split up. I know what it is like to want to spread your wings, so I feel for you. After all, a man is only truly alive when he is allowed to take flight.

So do as I did at the expense of Cassie — fly little homie, fly away.

Take flight,
Jack

Dear Trapped,
How do you know she won't be glad to get rid of your sorry behind? Be honest, break up with her, and let her move on to bigger and better things. Break up with her at a bar, so at least she has a chance to pick up someone else on her way home.

Love,
Cassie

Blend of Bard's tragedies has different spin

DIANA LEE
Kansas State Collegian

"Doth anyone in Verona sail straight?" This is the million-dollar question in "Goodnight Desdemona, Good Morning Juliet," being presented in Nichols Theatre tonight and Saturday.

"Goodnight Desdemona," Ann-Marie MacDonald's comedy that twists the traditional ideas of Shakespeare, focuses on Constance Ledbelly.

Ledbelly, played by Shelley Befort, senior in theater, is best described as a mousy spinster who teaches English at a university.

She feels compelled to explore the notion that two of Shakespeare's most beloved tragedies, "Othello" and "Romeo and Juliet," were actually meant to be comedies.

Ledbelly is forced to face her stereotypes of the two heroines, Desdemona and Juliet, when she finds herself sucked into the action of these two plays.

Desdemona is commonly considered a demure, subservient woman who bends to Othello's every whim. However, Ledbelly quickly discovers that Desdemona is every bit as violent, bloodthirsty and intense a character as Othello is. She discovers that Desdemona's main reason for moving to a war zone with Othello was to experience blood and guts firsthand.

Ledbelly is then suddenly sucked away to Verona, where she once again becomes an unscripted character, this time in the world of "Romeo and Juliet."

Instead of the star-crossed lovers history has deemed them, Ledbelly realizes they are nothing but a couple of immature whiners who only think about death so much because they don't know how to live.

The plot takes another interesting turn when both Romeo and Juliet, obviously not considering the marriage vow particularly sacred, actively compete for Ledbelly's affections.

At first, Ledbelly seems appalled by the idea that she could return a woman's interest. She explains to Juliet that she is actually a girl (she'd been masquerading as a boy), but this does nothing to deter Juliet. Ledbelly discovers that she is actually more open to the idea of being with a woman than she ever would have realized.

In the end, Ledbelly successfully empowers Desdemona, Juliet and herself by exposing them as the strong women they truly are.

While an intimate knowledge of both "Othello" and "Romeo and Juliet" definitely adds to one's enjoyment of this play, it is in and of itself masterfully written.

The play, through a spectacular use of comedy and plot twists, is an underlying tale of a woman's journey to self discovery. Ledbelly learns to accept herself, as a woman, for what she is, whatever this might be.

"Desdemona" is a wonderful example of the quality of student productions on this campus.

This group of student actors is extremely credible and skilled in character development and creating believability. They work to put forth a very important message and a ton of laughs.

Tickets still remain for "Goodnight Desdemona." Tickets can be purchased at the McCain Box Office between noon and 6 p.m. for tonight and Saturday and Sunday. All shows begin at 8 p.m. in Nichols Theatre.

Vanilla Ice brings old rap, fresh tour into Lawrence

TODD PACEY
Kansas State Collegian

"All right, stop, collaborate and listen, Ice is back with a brand new invention."

Go ahead, you know the rest, or at least you know the chorus to "Ice, Ice, Baby." Vanilla Ice, everyone's favorite white rapper, is back without a brand new invention, just a new way to make money.

Ice, whose real name is Robert Van Winkle, is back and has put together a short and scattered tour of mostly college towns. Despite telling People magazine that he formed a grunge band called Picking Scabs, he is touring as Vanilla Ice.

The Iceman will be playing not one, but two sold-out shows at the Granada in Lawrence this Saturday and Sunday. The tour, which began Thursday in Springfield, Mo., has 16 scheduled appearances including one at In Cahoots in Wichita on March 27.

Ice broke onto the scene in 1990 with his big label debut "To the Extreme," which spawned such hits as "Ice, Ice Baby," "Play That Funky Music" and the beatbox "Havin' a Roni." However, Ice disappeared almost as quickly as his overnight success.

His follow-up album "Extremely Live" had some success but not enough to make him a mainstay. In 1994, he released "Mind Blown," an album that became almost as obscure as he did. He did his "Ninja Rap" in the movie "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles II" and had his own movie, "Cool as Ice." In this film he uttered the famous line, "Yo baby, why don't you drop the zeros and get with the hero."

Last year, Ice rapped with Jimmy Pop Ali on the song "Boom" found on the Bloodhound Gang's album "One Fierce Beer Coaster." Ice also played a few clubs and booked studio time last year.

Ice has a new album due out soon, tentatively titled "Ice Capades." Never a favorite of the critics, Ice is now appealing to the general public. Instead of dropping the zeros, Ice has found a way with this new tour to add a few to his bank account.

Colleges team up for funds

expect when we go out there," King said.

Fairchild said unlike the real world, class work in college is traditionally individual.

"One of the things that changes when you get out there is when you've been in college all of these years, it's always been working for an individual grade, working for your own grade and everything you accomplished was for you alone," Fairchild said.

Jeff Katz, assistant professor of business management, said this multidisciplinary program accomplishes their vision and mission in educating students.

"Our vision is to train students that will be really competitive, good decision makers and leaders well into the 21st century," Katz said.

The multidisciplinary program is funded by the USDA Educational Challenge Grant Program and the Department of Grain Science. The money is used to develop four cases in the next two years. The money will also be used to teach graduate programs on the Internet.

Katz said because of the USDA grants received by K-State, the university has a national reputation that allows further growth and funding in this area.

"K-State is nationally known as a school with innovative and educational programs in agriculture," he said.

Senate hears opinions of library supporters

the fee before the mid-March deadline for fee legislation. Waiting longer will hurt the library even more, he said.

"We are literally reaching a threshold of sorts where it would be financially irresponsible to ignore this issue," Dechant said. "If we were to continue to wait, it would take an exorbitant amount of money, a larger fee or a larger tuition hike to solve the problem."

Dechant also challenged the integrity of a report by the Student Senate Ad Hoc Committee to Study the Library. He said the report, issued earlier this week, repeated funding suggestions that were first developed by the library task force in its October report.

The ad hoc committee opposed the creation of a student fee, but Dechant said its other suggestions weren't any different from others that have already been examined.

"What it did is it just rehash everything that was reviewed already by the task force," he said. "They were innovative ideas, but unfortunately they've already been gone over. They weren't new ideas. Basically, they'd already been done by the library task force."

The ad hoc report was discussed by Privilege Fee Committee members before their action at Monday's meeting.

Dechant said the committee didn't even ask Hobrock or other library officials for input into its report.

"It was not much more than if I and a couple of friends had sat down and brainstormed them ourselves. They failed to invite Brice Hobrock or any administrators from the library to tell them about the library.

"It seems like if you're going to talk about money ... you should talk about somebody who's been with the program," he said.

Ad hoc committee co-chair Jayme Morris-Hardeman defended the committee's work and said students shouldn't have to pay a fee for library use.

"We put a lot of time into this report," she said. "It's not a privilege to use the library."

Hobrock addressed several questions from senators about other proposed library funding sources, including about $300,000 from the KSU Foundation and $328,000 from state allocations.

Senators suggested the Kansas Legislature should do more to fund the library instead of a student fee. Hobrock said the Legislature's traditional lack of support for K-State and higher education needs likely is to continue.

"The Legislature should be doing the whole damn thing, right? It's a crock, but they haven't, and I don't think they will," he said.

He said undergraduate students would see definitive results from a fee, including increased book purchases and electronic resources.

Hobrock also suggested forming a student board to oversee the use of the fee money.

"We have to play fair with you. You can expect detailed accountability," he said. "Everything is subject to reviews. What we're proposing to do with any privilege fee money is to use it in a way that you will all see and understand."

U.S. tobacco company exports cigarettes with more nicotine

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — American cigarettes packing genetically altered, high-nicotine tobacco are being exported to Asia, the Middle East and Western Europe, according to a deposition by an official of the third-largest U.S. cigarette maker.

Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. adds twice as much of the nicotine-rich leaf to cigarettes sold overseas as it does to brands marketed in the United States, said Roger Black, the company's director of leaf blending, in a deposition for New York state's class-action lawsuit against the large tobacco companies.

Black's deposition confirmed an Associated Press report in December that Brown & Williamson had begun work on the genetically altered, nicotine-rich tobacco plant as early as 1981, and that the Brazilian company has been growing large quantities of the tobacco for the world market from seed originally supplied by Brown & Williamson.

Thursday afternoon, Brown & Williamson issued a statement saying the use of genetically altered tobacco doesn't mean people are smoking cigarettes with higher nicotine levels. The company said it blends nicotine-enhanced leaf with weaker tobaccos, and produces a variety of brands with varying nicotine levels to satisfy smokers' differing tastes.

Mark Smith, a Brown & Williamson spokesman, said the company had decided to stop using the enhanced tobacco because cigarettes containing it were unpopular with consumer test panels. This statement contradicts Black's sworn testimony. In his deposition, Black said products containing Y-1 "tested better in the consumer product test. The consumers seemed to like that product better."

Black's deposition could prove a significant development in state lawsuits against cigarette companies and in the U.S. Food and Drug Administration's drive to regulate the industry on grounds that cigarettes deliver an addictive drug.

Dies, Bishop arrested in unrelated weekend incidents

AMANDA FINGER
Kansas State Collegian

Two of K-State's top athletes were arrested early Sunday morning in two unrelated incidents.

Starting quarterback Michael Bishop was arrested at 1:55 a.m. on one count of battery and two counts of aggravated battery.

At 2:13 a.m., K-State basketball forward Wilbert E. "Manny" Dies was arrested for transporting an open container of liquor, obstruction of legal process, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics had no comment on either case.

Dies was driving an automobile when a Riley County police officer pulled him over. The passenger of the vehicle was Antonio M. Rodriguez of Wichita, who was also arrested for possession of an open container of liquor, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia.

Rodriguez was released after posting a $1,000 bond.

Dies is on probation for misdemeanor criminal damage to property charges related to an incident involving Collegian columnist Todd Stewart in May 1997.

Dies was released after posting a $1,500 bond.

Earlier Sunday morning, Riley County police officers responded to a call about a fight in the Aggieville area, which, after further investigation, resulted in Michael Bishop's arrest.

There had been several fights earlier in front of, and behind, Lucky BrewGrille, causing large crowds to gather in the streets.

Jeffrey Moore, senior in finance, was interviewed by KSNT-TV

27, Topeka, on Sunday. He named two other football players who he said were involved in the incident.

Derrick W. Shanks, sophomore in fine arts, said he was watching a different fight in Aggieville on Sunday morning, involving Christopher Reed, Wichita, and other K-State football players.

Shanks' tooth was broken when he was struck by a beer stein. Shanks said Bishop was not involved in that particular fight.

Bishop was arrested without incident, charged with the battery of Moore, Shanks and Reed. He was released after posting a $3,000 bond. At press time, no one else was arrested in relation to the incident.

Bishop was named as a player representative for the 1998 football team on Friday.

Football coach Bill Snyder, who was at a function in Cancun, Mexico, was unavailable for comment.

Assistant Athletics Director Sean Snyder said his father was notified and the athletics department is expected to make a public statement within the next week.

Alumni center building plans topic of debate

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Although faculty in the College of Architecture, Planning and Design were told no design for the planned alumni center had been initiated, it became apparent this weekend that wasn't the case.

The programming stage for the alumni center has not been completed, but a conceptual architectural design has been in progress for at least two months. When faculty from the College of Architecture, Planning and Design questioned the architects and the KSU Alumni Association president at a programming meeting, they were told no architectural design would begin until the programming stage was finished. That meeting occurred Feb. 12.

At the Alumni Association's board of directors meeting on Saturday at the Ramada Plaza Hotel, the architects, Gossen Livingston Associates of Wichita, presented fully rendered architectural plans, artistic drawings of the interior and exterior, and a scale model.

Conflicting statements surround the $6 million, 48,000-square-foot alumni center project, which is planned for the green space south of Memorial Stadium. At the center of the issue are faculty and administration who can't agree whether the design was ready for public input. Faculty, students and alumni were invited to participate in the programming stage.

At the architecture faculty session, many questions about the design arose, including whether the building would act as a structural gateway to campus or would be forward-looking. However, if the conceptual design had already been selected, many of the issues drawn from programming focus groups have the potential to be irrelevant.

Eugene Kremer, professor of architecture, attended the focus group planned for the College of Architecture, Planning and Design faculty on Feb. 12. That session was facilitated by Alumni Association president Amy Button Renz and Mac McKee, an architect with Gossen Livingston.

Kremer said several questions concerned whether architectural design had begun on the project. He said McKee was forthright in explaining no design had begun.

"He indicated the folks designing the project were not involved at this point," Kremer said.

On Saturday, project designer Rick Backus, an architect with Gossen Livingston, said the design process had been under way for the past two months.

"This really goes beyond what you would call conceptual to design to schematic design," Backus said. "We've spent a lot of time working with the users on this. We started with a building that was quite different than this and discussed pros and cons of three different building schemes."

Saturday's presentation was the first time artist's renderings were displayed to the board, although parts of the board had seen the design before the meeting.

"I'm not familiar with what he's talking about, so I'm not going to answer that," Renz said Sunday, referring to Backus' discussion of three building types. On Friday, Renz told the Collegian that Saturday's meeting would be the first time she would see conceptual drawings.

Renz said she has worked closely with the architects on developing the internal adjacencies, which were shown to focus group meetings in the form of block and stack diagrams. These diagrams lay out adjacencies on a per-floor basis. Renz said the Alumni Association's building and site committee, chaired by Curt Frasier, has been reviewing the different concepts of how the building would develop.

She said an initial site analysis and how the building would look on the site was previewed for Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance, in the latter part of January. Asked whether she had seen the floor plans before the meeting, she said, "You have to begin to know what you are going to put in a building."

Renz said the design concept could change tomorrow. Later in the interview, she said the current process

Local Iraqis concerned attack would harm families

CLAUDETTE RILEY
Kansas State Collegian

In lieu of military air strikes, Iraqi families living in Manhattan hope a diplomatic solution will end the economic embargo and bring much-needed relief to the 22 million civilians still in Iraq.

The embargo was imposed in 1990 and the economic ramifications have been drastic and far-reaching. Prominent buildings and vital infrastructure are possible targets in a threatened air strike by U.S. military forces. However, it's the welfare of Iraqi civilians that remains uncertain.

For the eight Iraqi families living in Manhattan, air strikes would mean further pain and hardship for relatives and friends already suffering from the embargo.

Iman Khamis brought his family to Manhattan seven years ago. He graduated with a doctorate in statistics last May and now works as a tutor on campus.

"Imagine being in a country fighting your country and how you would feel," Iman said. "I am happy here because my family is safe, but sad because I'm not among my people."

Iman said he is optimistic the situation will be solved peacefully.

"They have to know the embargo is hurting the Iraqi people," Iman said. "We are optimistic the Americans don't want the war either."

Iman Khamis said the media often portray war or the removal of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein as an improvement for the Iraqi citizens.

"There is no right for any country to interfere with the business of another," Iman said. "The U.S. has to respect the sovereignty of Iraq. If you are a superpower you have to be fair."

Hussein became the leader of Iraq in 1979. In 1996, Hussein was popularly elected by voters in his country.

Iman said when Hussein came to power, he brought improvements in technology, infrastructure and supplied good medication and free education to his people.

Sinaa Khamis, Iman's wife, said life in Iraq was good before the 1990 embargo.

"Most of the people were middle class, and they lived comfortably," Sinaa said.

Through letters and phone calls with their family in Iraq, the Khamises understand the difficulty of everyday life in their homeland.

Annan, Hussein reach agreement in Iraq crisis

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — U.N. chief Kofi Annan and Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein settled the last significant obstacle Sunday to opening presidential palaces to U.N. arms inspectors, the main condition for avoiding a U.S. attack, Annan's spokesperson said.

The agreement came during a three-hour meeting between Annan and Hussein at the Republican Palace, one of eight presidential sites that Iraq had declared off-limits to U.N. weapons inspectors, said U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard.

"We've reached an agreement," Eckhard said. "We have a text."

"We expect the text will be acceptable to all 15 members of the Security Council," including the United States, he said.

One Iraqi official, who also insisted his name not be used, was asked whether there was a deal. He replied, "Yes."

Annan and Iraq's deputy prime minister, Tariq Aziz, met late Sunday to agree on the precise wording of an agreement the secretary-general will take back to the Security Council.

The crisis over weapons inspections has brought the Persian Gulf to the brink of war.

The United States has sent a naval armada and 25,000 troops to the region to mount air strikes unless Iraq agrees to open all sites, including eight presidential palaces, to the U.N. weapons inspectors.

Pro-Iraq protests have erupted across the Arab world — Jordan had to send out tanks in one desert city to contain them — and sent Israelis scurrying for gas masks and diplomats there preparing to leave.

Any deal must be endorsed by Washington, which has said it would refuse an agreement it believes undermines the inspectors' authority.

White House spokesperson Mike McCurry said preliminary accounts had been received from Baghdad, but he refused to assess them.

Britain, America's strongest backer for a military strike, also reacted cautiously.

"The expectation is that Kofi Annan will make an announcement in the morning whether a deal has been brokered," a spokesman for Prime Minister Tony Blair said on customary anonymity. "Even then, he will report back to the Security Council the details of that."

CIA's Bay of Pigs investigation released after more than 3 decades locked in safe

NEW YORK — One of the Cold War's most secret documents — the CIA's scathing internal investigation into the 1961 Bay of Pigs debacle — is finally out, and there is little wonder why the spy agency has guarded it so jealously.

The 150-page report was released after sitting in the CIA director's safe for more than three decades, blamed the disastrous attempt to oust Fidel Castro not on President Kennedy's failure to call in air strikes, but on the agency itself.

The CIA's ignorance, incompetence, as well as its arrogance toward the 1,400 Cuban exiles it trained and equipped to mount the invasion, was responsible for the fiasco, said the report, obtained by The Associated Press on Saturday.

"The choice was between retreat without honor and a gamble between ignominious defeat and dubious victory. The agency chose to gamble, at rapidly decreasing odds," the report said.

The document, released by the agency last week, criticized almost every aspect of the CIA's handling of the invasion: misinforming Kennedy administration officials, planning poorly, using faulty intelligence and conducting an overt military operation beyond "agency responsibility as well as agency capability."

Few of the CIA personnel helping train the exiles for the invasion spoke Spanish, yet "the agency reduced the exiled leaders to the status of puppets."

Despite U.S. news articles linking the United States with a plan to invade Cuba, the project went forward under the "pathetic illusion" of deniability, the report said.

Castro's forces easily turned back the April 1961 assault at the Bay of Pigs, killing 200 rebel soldiers and capturing 1,197 others, who were later turned over to U.S. authorities.

The fiasco at the swampy, mosquito-ridden inlet on Cuba's southern coast was a watershed for the CIA, puncturing the air of invincibility it had acquired with its successes in helping topple Iran's president in 1953 and Guatemala's leader in 1954.

It was also a significant foreign policy disaster for the Kennedy administration, tarnishing its "Camelot" sheen and frustrating its young president. Yet it also hardened his determination to get rid of Castro, evident in subsequent assassination plots that became subject of congressional investigations.

CIA officials and Cuban exiles believed Kennedy's failure to approve air strikes to back up the seaborne invaders doomed the plan.

But the report, by CIA Inspector General Lyman Kirkpatrick, placed the blame directly on CIA leaders, saying they had "failed to advise the president, at an appropriate time, that success had become dubious and to recommend that the operation therefore be canceled."

The report so outraged CIA officials that all but one of the 20 copies produced was destroyed.

FBI searches researcher's home again 1 day after his release from Nevada jail

LOGANDALE, Nev. — FBI agents searched the home of a researcher again Sunday, even though the man was released from jail after tests showed he possessed a harmless animal vaccine, not a biological weapon.

More than a dozen agents descended on William Leavitt Jr.'s property in this small farming community 50 miles northeast of Las Vegas. Neighbors said the agents had been searching the home and an adjacent shed since Wednesday, when Leavitt was arrested along with Larry Wayne Harris.

Leavitt's lawyer, Lamond Mills, called the search "a fishing expedition" and said he planned to visit the home to "see what kind of shape the house is in and what they've taken."

"I think they're embarrassed, and I think they're looking for anything they can find to bring charges against Bill Leavitt," Mills said.

FBI agents at the scene declined to comment.

A government lab on Sunday was still testing material seized from Harris' Ohio home to determine if it is a dangerous — and illegal — biological agent, federal sources have said. Harris is on probation for a 1995 conviction for illegally obtaining the bubonic plague bacteria.

The FBI said its investigation into both men is continuing, even though authorities announced Saturday that a substance once feared to be the ingredients of a biological weapon turned out to be a harmless anthrax vaccine.

The material was seized from Leavitt and Harris on Wednesday in Henderson, Nev., just outside Las Vegas, triggering a nationwide scare. They were arrested on charges of possessing a biological agent for use as a weapon.

Leavitt was released from jail Saturday night on his own recognizance.

Although the anthrax vaccine is legal and safe, the charges were still pending against the men. Leavitt's attorneys said federal prosecutors should drop the charges. Harris' attorney did not return calls for comment over the weekend.

Former legislator elected NAACP chair, hopes group can be vocal on race issues

NEW YORK — Civil rights pioneer Julian Bond was elected chairman of the NAACP Saturday, saying he hoped to have the organization become a leading voice on all issues of race.

Bond, 58, a former Georgia legislator, is a history professor, a frequent radio and television commentator and chairman of the NAACP's publication Crisis Magazine.

"It is a daunting responsibility," Bond told members meeting at the Grand Hyatt Hotel in Manhattan after the 29-24 vote.

"I want to make sure the NAACP voice is heard wherever race is discussed," he said.

"Colored people come in all colors," he said. "We want to reach out to emerging Americans, Hispanics, Latinos, Native Americans, Asians and white Americans."

Bond, who teaches history at American University in Washington, D.C., and at the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, had joined the field of five other candidates on Tuesday because he "got a number of calls from board members urging me to run."

The other candidates for the unpaid position were Joe Madison, a Maryland radio host; Lenny Springs, a North Carolina banker; Leon Russell, a human rights official in Florida; Marc Stepp, a Detroit labor union executive; and Charles Whitehead, an executive for energy company Ashland Inc. of Kentucky.

Construction should be planned around classes

Campus construction is important, but there is little justification for students and professors to fight extreme noise levels just to understand one another in class.

There is a limit to how much noise a classroom can handle before the quality of education is compromised.

Judging from the frustration expressed by those trying to provide or gain an education in Eisenhower Hall, this situation is clearly not under control.

Worthy projects such as a drain line project in Eisenhower, improvements in Cardwell Hall and making Kedzie Hall handicap-accessible could have been better scheduled.

The structural corrections and adherence to the Americans with Disabilities Act did not crop up overnight.

The foreign language, literature and history classes that populate Eisenhower are dependent on discussion.

Classrooms and offices need quiet so students and faculty can concentrate.

There should have been better cooperation between facilities and the scheduling faculty to prioritize construction to avoid the most intense class periods.

Closing windows reduces noise and dirt levels although it decreases the circulation of fresh air and traps construction fumes inside. We hope the construction will end before the warm days of spring fever arrive in full force.

Construction companies have to bid for contracts. Perhaps the facilities department could have planned more work in the summer and during winter and spring breaks. The administration could have set parameters or planned around the busiest class times.

Why can't wooden walls be built around the construction sites to serve as a buffer between classrooms in the buildings and the actual work?

The administration and facilities should be aware of this problem and should work toward a solution. A reduced noise level for class periods improves the level of education available.

If noise from construction is affecting your ability to learn in classrooms, call facilities or log a complaint with the dean of your college.

PLATFORM PARTY

Finally, some campus issues that really matter

Last week was a week of coincidences. Five teams announced they were running for K-State student body president and vice president and discussed their platforms. I also received copies of the state party platforms from both the Democrat and Republican political parties. They made for some entertaining and sometimes sleep-inducing reading. Here are some highlights.

VIEWPOINT

LISA DETHLOFF

Lisa is a senior in political science. You can send e-mail to Lisa at batman@ksu.edu.

Democrats: "Democrats hold to simple principles understood by the families in our bedrock neighborhoods and by the workday heroes: hard work, responsibility, fairness, and honesty."

Republicans: "We who are now Kansas Republican are the heirs of pioneer forebears. And we are still, above all, a party of principle, a party that stands for something. The main principle of the party is securing the inalienable right of personhood."

Well, anyway, you get the idea. I love my parents, hard work, apple pie and the American flag, too, but I also have a burning desire to discuss my issues. The issues that keep me awake at night pacing the floor of my apartment back and forth, back and forth. Now, I want more things in this world other than no trash, a place where the bunnies can frolic and the opportunity for everyone to buy the world a Coke.

My issues are hard-core and must be brought to the forefront, or everyone shall suffer from missing a truly wonderful experience. This platform is supported solely by me and will be called the "Parody Platform." Let me know what you think the symbol of the platform should be.

Issue No. 1: Aesthetics. Now, I love the campus. I have only gotten lost four times, and the color of limestone is very soothing to the soul when feeling lost and abandoned. However, to further help the dazed and confused, K-State's campus needs more aesthetically pleasing things.

First of all, the number of benches on campus is low. I would like to see more benches placed along the big sidewalk (aka I-70) that runs from the K-State Student Union to Waters Hall. This would help the freshmen who are not used to the long walks, and the 10th-year seniors who are awaiting an artificial limb to complete the whole trip.

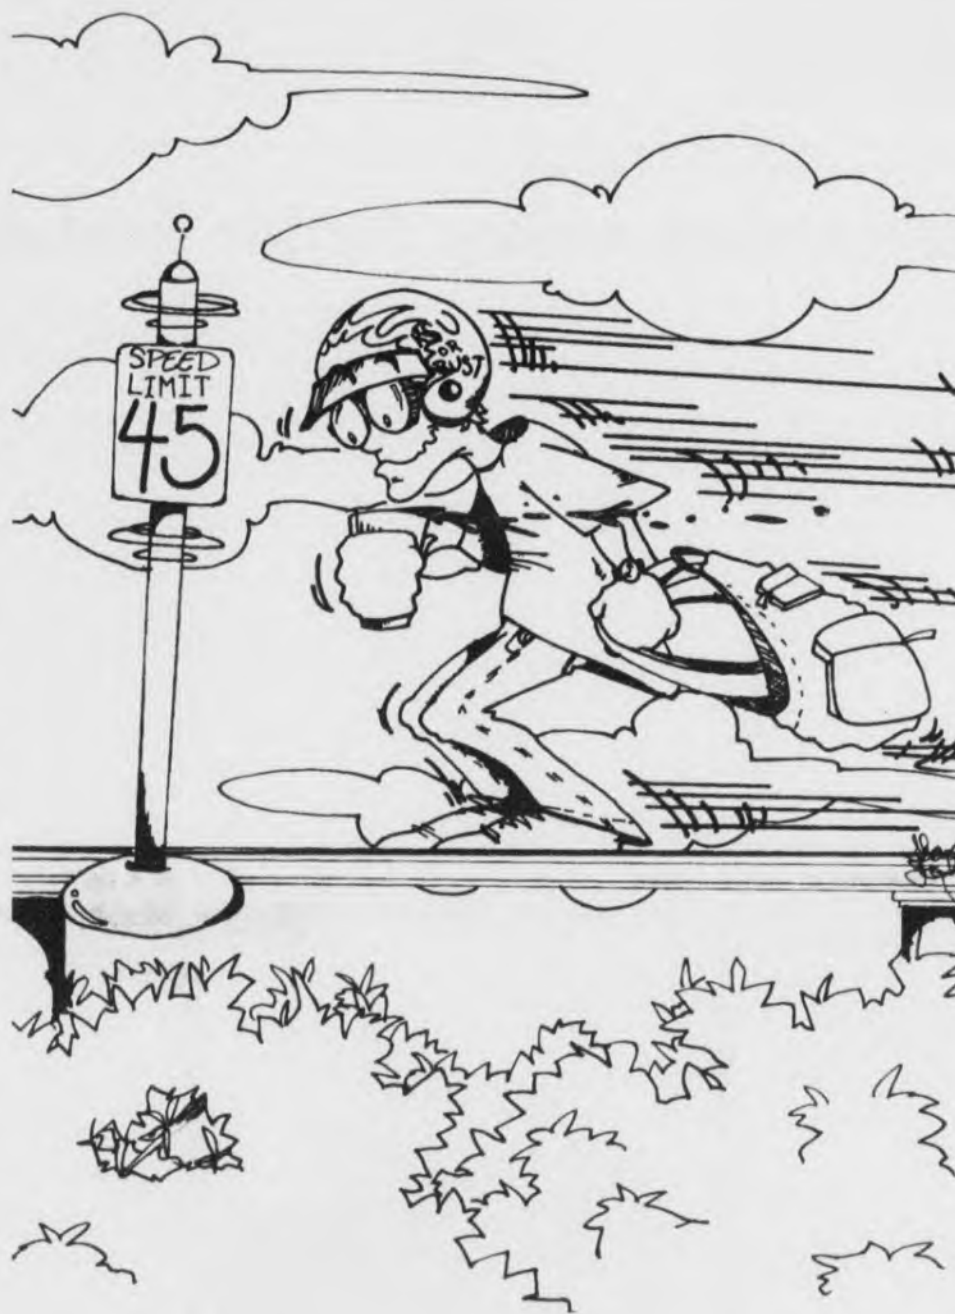

Next, to improve the aesthetics of campus, K-State needs a bass pond. The bass pond also goes along with my theme of still helping the dazed and confused by providing a source of food and water. The people who actually know where they are would be able to participate in the wonderful pastime of fishing. Plus, the bass pond would be revenue-producing by selling the fish to the Union.

Issue No. 2: Transportation. By having a massive bake sale and car wash, K-State would have the funds to install aerial sidewalks that move at 45 miles per hour. Then it would take only 2.39 seconds to leave a parked car at Bramlage Coliseum and get to class in Calvin Hall. The only drawback would be mandatory helmets in case you fall off. Excuses for being late to classes would cease to exist from this rapid and innovative solution to an alleged parking problem.

Issue No. 3: Holidays. Now, classes are not canceled for Groundhog Day, and I propose that trend continues. Instead, I would love to see K-State shut down for my birthday — a holiday everyone could participate in if you know when and where to go. President Jon Wefald, if you are reading, please consider this proposal because it would make me the happiest girl in the world.

These are just three of my issues that I believe will solve the problems of this university. Good luck to all of the real candidates who have real issues to discuss. Just keep me in mind if you need new issues to develop. I will be the one-woman think tank at my own birthday party.

BUILDING WALLS

Many of the barriers we see in society often find their way into our heads

Last summer as I drove to work every day, I would pass several so-called housing projects. Most of them could be seen easily from the highway.

Sometimes I could hear yelling and screaming early in the morning coming from one of the housing complexes, which was right across the street from the school where I worked. It was one of the housing projects I passed every day in my routine. I became immune to what really went on there or at any other of the housing projects I passed every day on my way to work.

I've always felt safe in the city because I knew where I could go and where I shouldn't. I've started to wonder, though, why we build barriers between people, not just class and social structures, to keep people separated.

These barriers don't stop at psychological barriers that tend to go unnoticed. In fact, my immunity to see or care about what went on in these housing complexes was finally broken by the physical confinements I finally noticed.

At first glance, I thought maybe the steel fences enclosing many of the projects were put in place to keep trespassers out and provide a safer environment for the residents. I bought this reasoning and excuse for many years. However, I started to wonder what these fences really suggested. Usually those gates did little, if anything, to keep trespassers out.

Many of these structures that society labels housing projects or more so, ghettos, exemplify a state of mind suggesting people who live there are uncontrollable. It sends residents and children a message that they must be caged in like animals, and no one ever seems to question why.

I could have pretended that what I saw every day did not exist. I could have closed my eyes or looked the other way and forgotten about all the children whom I became attached to that summer.

I was a positive male role model at the summer camp. I was not just a summer camp counselor. I had to play the role of being an authority figure, a teacher, a care taker and a friend.

At the end of the day, I felt sad that children from the summer camp would have to go back to the surrounding projects. It was sad because I heard stories from my group of children that the only time they could go outside and play was when I took them to the park.

I was hurt because many of them came from single-parent homes and no one had the time to sit and color with them or talk with them as I did. I was furious when I drove home and saw drug dealers and junkies all doped up a few hundred yards away from the school where I worked.

Even with all my love and all my work, I could never let these children believe I would always be around. I believed more in them than they believed in me. This was evident when I returned from the weekends because many of the kids would run and hug me. Some were always surprised I returned. It was never hard for me to return because I knew the welcome I would receive.

I was worried on weekends throughout that summer because I knew many of them would be alone or out playing with no one to watch over them. The hardest thing I had to face was when I had to tell them I was leaving for school at the end of the summer.

I talk about projects and ghettos being a state of mind because all my kids at the summer camp had desires and dreams. They didn't seem to be bothered by the deteriorating buildings that surrounded our school.

That community was made up of people, and it didn't matter what the school looked like on the outside. What we did as a summer camp group was what really seemed to count. It was the impression I made on them and the education they unknowingly gave to me.

Without a doubt, the hardest thing I've ever had to do was say goodbye at the end of that fun-filled summer. I kept in touch by sending postcards the first few weekends, but time since then has not allowed me to do as much as I should.

These projects and ghettos are a state of mind that might keep many people from dreaming. But if we can keep these dreams and desires alive in the hearts of the children across all urban areas, maybe we could eliminate the so-called projects and ghettos in their minds.

Library fee attributed to shortsightedness

Editor,

I'd like to say that I am against students paying an additional fee for the library. I realize the library isn't asking for a huge amount of money from students, but we shouldn't have to pay for something we aren't responsible for in the first place. It's a small fee now, but the costs of journals are rising. Will the fee rise every year to compensate?

The amount of money needed to fill this beautiful library should have been considered before it was built. It is an awesome building, but why build a library so big and extravagant that it's no longer useful? If they were so worried about funds, why did they waste so much money on expensive decor, such as the iron sunflowers and the tiled state seal?

Not to mention all the landscaping (a large portion of which was ripped up after the opening ceremony and replaced with cheaper shrubs). They lined the back side of Denison Hall with shrubs knowing that when it is torn down the shrubs will be destroyed.

If they want to charge students to clean up their mess, they need to charge faculty as well. Faculty probably use the library more than anyone, and they don't even have to pay late fees.

A library is not built for aesthetically pleasing architecture, both the inside and out. The fact of the matter remains that a library exists to furnish literary resources and to facilitate the patron's needs to gather these resources.

Hale Library is a public library. Anyone can use it. I'd like to ask Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock why it is suddenly the responsibility of the students to fix poor budgeting and poor judgment, as well as provide resources for anybody to use.

Alumni center plans unveiled

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

At Saturday's meeting of the Alumni Association Board, architects revealed conceptual plans for the proposed alumni center to be built on the southwest corner of campus.

The conceptual plans show a three-story building between the east and west sections of Memorial Stadium. A vehicle entrance off of 17th Street circulates to the north of the proposed center to a large parking lot on the west side.

The proposed 48,000-square-foot building reflects campus architectural elements in itself, especially with the use of arches, limestone facades and pitched roofs. It appears in an English manor house style, taking obvious cues from the new Hale Library and older buildings on campus such as Holton Hall and the President's Residence.

Construction on the alumni center is tentatively scheduled to begin in June 1999 and to be completed by September 2001. The programming and design of the center is being completed by Gossen Livingston Associates of Wichita.

Several members of the firm were present Saturday for the meeting at the Ramada Plaza Hotel.

Rick Backus, an architect with Gossen Livingston, presented the conceptual design to the board. His presentation included complete floor plans, a color-rendered site plan, two artist renderings of the north and south facades, two artist renderings of the interior and a small-scale model.

Backus said working in cooperation with the KSU Alumni Association, the designers have continued to modify the appearance of the design presented Saturday. That design was selected from three the firm prepared for the Alumni Association.

"The full board hasn't seen it together, but they have seen bits and pieces of this," Backus said. "We've met numerous times over the last few months."

The design includes 40 percent private space, which would be association offices, storage, kitchen space and specialized facilities. Nearly 60 percent of the building would be public space, which would include a 400-seat banquet room that could be divided into smaller spaces, a great room with a large limestone fireplace and a cafe/lounge on the first floor. Most of the spaces on the first floor open up onto terraces for outdoor functions.

The second floor includes a large board room, smaller meeting rooms and a memorabilia library along with the private spaces of the association's programs and administration offices. The third floor contains offices for the publications and records divisions of the association.

The north facade is dominated by a large semi-circular window of the second-story board room. The south facade, perhaps the most visible public space because it faces Anderson Avenue, is dominated by an oversized two-story porte-cochere over the main driveway into the complex.

Backus said the design remains flexible and the plans presented Saturday are only the early schemes. He said the designers anticipate getting started on the plans again in June.

An integral part of the design process is the programming. Unlike architectural designs, the programming is concerned with space usages, adjacencies, basic design concepts and the overall goal of the building.

Mac McKee, also an architect with Gossen Livingston, has been putting this program together in the past several months. He began by meeting with the alumni board and developing the goals and concepts of the building. After this, he developed a set of facts for the building, such as site constraints, drainage issues and city concerns that will affect the design, such as the expansion of Anderson Avenue.

Other programming elements, which were on display on the walls of the conference room, included several options of block and stack diagrams. These diagrams show projected adjacencies of specific spaces — a sort of bubble diagram of how the floors of the building could be arranged.

He also explained to board members the results of focus group sessions that have included alumni groups throughout Kansas, several departments on campus and faculty and students from the College of Architecture, Planning and Design.

Bill Livingston, principal architect with Gossen Livingston, said every one of these focus group sessions yielded some new idea that was beneficial.

"A lot of the information is fresh and new, and a lot of changes have been made up until last evening," Livingston said.

ChimpanZoo director to compare differences between primates in natural habitat, captivity

JAMI BOYLES
Kansas State Collegian

It's human nature for parents to worry about the health of their children. Most parents count the fingers and toes on their newborns to make sure everything is normal.

This trait is not unique to humans. Chimpanzees do it too, said Virginia Landau, program director of ChimpanZoo.

Landau will present her lecture, "The Nature of Chimpanzees," at 7 tonight at the Holiday Inn. Admission is free.

She will compare chimpanzees in the wild with those in captivity and explain some of the problems for chimpanzees in the wild.

ChimpanZoo is an organization interested in improving the lives of chimpanzees and educating people about them.

Landau has been working with chimpanzees for 10 years. She said there is something different about people who work with chimpanzees as compared with other animals in a zoo.

"Primate keepers are very bonded to their animals," she said. "There is something about seeing a chimp. You know it's aware of you and sizing you up."

Landau said she has done lectures for everyone from zoo officials to grade school children and has answered nearly every imaginable question about chimpanzees. She said women usually ask her questions about parenting, while men ask questions about aggressive behavior.

Chimpanzees have been known to go to war in the wild.

She said children usually ask questions involving sign language and toys.

Chimpanzees love toys, just like human children, she said.

Landau said she tries to educate people about improving chimpanzees' lives in zoos.

She said some zoo donors want their money to go to things like waterfalls and gardens, which make the zoo physically appealing, but do not improve the lifestyle of the chimpanzees. Regulations have forced zoo officials to worry more about the health of the animals than the beauty of the zoo, she said.

"In the last 10 years, very positive things have been happening," she said. "I don't think the public minds at all."

Landau said she was impressed with Manhattan's new chimpanzee exhibit at Sunset Zoological Park because it gives the chimps more space and entertainment.

WINTER OLYMPICS

Czechoslovakia takes gold in hockey

NAGANO, Japan — No one ever mentioned the Czech Republic as a gold-medal contender. Canada, yes. The United States, yes. Sweden, yes. Even Russia.

But never the Czechs.

There they were Sunday with fewer NHL players than any of the other five superteams in this first Olympic "dream team" tournament, gold medals hanging from their necks after beating Russia 1-0 Sunday.

Petr Svoboda scored with 11:52 to play and Dominik Hasek remained unbeatable in goal as the Czech Republic won the first Olympic hockey competition featuring NHL players.

"I knew we had a great team," defenseman Jiri Slegr said.

"I told everyone if we play as a group, we can win it all. Everyone laughed. Now we're laughing."

All the way back to Prague for a huge celebration. It was the Czechs' first gold medal in its 17th Olympic hockey tournament, but this victory had roots stretching back 30 years.

Though the political climate has changed dramatically since Soviet-bloc tanks rolled into Prague in spring 1968 to crush an incipient uprising, this was very special nonetheless.

Thirty years later, Czech captain and Pittsburgh Penguin star Jaromir Jagr wears the number 68 as a reminder to all of the Soviet invasion.

"What happened happened. I wasn't even born in 1968," Czech teammate Martin Straka said. "We don't hate the Russians. Some of the guys on that team are my friends."

The Czechs (5-1) got to the gold-medal game by defeating the United States 4-1 in the quarterfinals and Canada 2-1 in a semifinal shootout — those teams were co-favorites coming into the tournament.

Then, the Czech Republic avenged its only loss — 2-1 to Russia in round-robin play — by beating the only remaining undefeated team.

NCAA TOP-25 WOMEN'S HOOPS

No. 10 North Carolina St. 60, No. 7 North Carolina 57

RALEIGH, N.C. — Tynesha Lewis hit a three-point shot with 25 seconds left, and No. 10 North Carolina State erased a 17-point, second-half deficit to beat No. 7 North Carolina 60-57 Sunday.

Lewis scored 11 points in the final 5:25, including three three-pointers, and finished with 17 points and 13 rebounds.

Chastity Melvin added 19 points for N.C. State (21-5, 12-4 Atlantic Coast Conference).

Tracy Reid led North Carolina (21-6, 11-5) with 22 points and 11 rebounds.

Nikki Teasley added 12 points and five assists for the Tar Heels.

Reid was the only Tar Heel to score a field goal in the final 10 1/2 minutes of the game.

North Carolina led for the last time at 57-55 on a layup by Reid with 2:02 remaining.

Lewis banked in a one-hander with 1:15 remaining to tie it and, after Teasley missed with 40 seconds left, Lewis sank her game-winning three-pointer from the left wing.

The Tar Heels missed their last six shots from the field, including four three-point tries in the final 14 seconds.

N.C. State outrebounded North Carolina 48-28 and held the Tar Heels to six offensive rebounds, all of them coming in the last seven minutes and three of them in the final 14 seconds.

NCAA TOP-25 MEN'S HOOPS

No. 2 Duke 120, No. 12 UCLA 84

DURHAM, N.C. — No. 2 Duke made a strong bid to reclaim the nation's top ranking with a 120-84 victory over No. 12 UCLA on Sunday as Trajan Langdon matched his career-high with 34 points to lead the dominating performance that saw the most points ever allowed by the Bruins.

Duke (25-2) or No. 3 Arizona, with the nation's longest winning streak, will likely rise to the top of the poll following No. 1 North Carolina's 86-72 home loss to N.C. State on Saturday.

It could be Duke's third stint as the top-ranked team this season.

UCLA (20-6) began playing basketball in 1919 and the most points allowed had been 116 to Stanford in double overtime in 1987.

Duke wasted little time showing it might belong on top again — five games removed from losing the No. 1 ranking with a 24-point loss at North Carolina. The two Atlantic Coast Conference powers meet here for a rematch on Saturday.

The Blue Devils scored 57 points on the stunned Bruins in the opening 20 minutes, shooting 56 percent, making 10 of 17 3-pointers and blocking seven shots to go up by 24 points at halftime.

Roshown McLeod added 23 points for Duke, which ran its non-conference record in Cameron Indoor Stadium to 114-2 since 1983.

Kris Johnson led UCLA with 20 points, while Baron Davis added 18 before fouling out with 4:03 left.

Powered by torrid shooting from 3-point range by the men and hot hands from the free-throw line by its women, Oklahoma State came away with a clean sweep of K-State on Saturday.

► MEN'S TEAM LOSES 2ND HOME GAME OF SEASON, 64-61 TO COWBOYS.

SUN DEE MILLS
Kansas State Collegian

In what Coach Tom Asbury called a "winnable game," the Wildcats went to the wire with the Oklahoma State Cowboys to lose, 64-61, for only the second time at home this season.

"It's frustrating," junior forward Manny Dies said. "It's like we got our first road win, and now we can't win at home. Hopefully, we'll win our last two games."

The Cowboys kept it close the entire game. In the first half, Oklahoma State only had a two-point lead twice. But the Cats could never extend their lead to more than five.

Cowboy inside man Brett Robisch was contained to two-of-11 from the field, and Oklahoma State shot 30 percent in the first half.

"Me, Manny and Pero (Vasiljevic) were trying to front him to keep him from getting the ball," junior center Shawn Rhodes said. "We might have had him a little frustrated, but he still played well. He got some good plays off."

In the second half, the Cowboys unloaded five three-pointers in three minutes to gain momentum. K-State lost its lead for 10 minutes, but managed to come back and tie the game at 55 with 3:41 remaining.

Cat guard Ayome May fouled Cowboy Joe Adkins, who sank both of his shots to regain the lead. Dies answered with his fourth dunk of the game to tie it up again.

After an Oklahoma State timeout, Dies blocked Robisch's jump shot attempt with his fifth block of the game. With that block, Dies tied a Bramlage Coliseum record for blocked shots by a K-State player, and he moved past ex-Cat Les Craft for second place in K-State history for blocked shots in a season.

Off the offensive rebound, Cowboy forward Desmond Mason put up a layup to take the lead back. Cat guard Marcus McCollough answered with a layup of his own for another tie.

But Cowboy forward Adrian Peterson iced his fourth three-pointer of the game to give the Cowboys a three-point lead. Dies answering jumper cut the lead to one, and Oklahoma State called another timeout.

Robisch missed yet another jump shot and Rhodes grabbed the defensive rebound. When Dies got the ball near the lane, two Cowboys jumped in to take it from him, prompting a jump ball call.

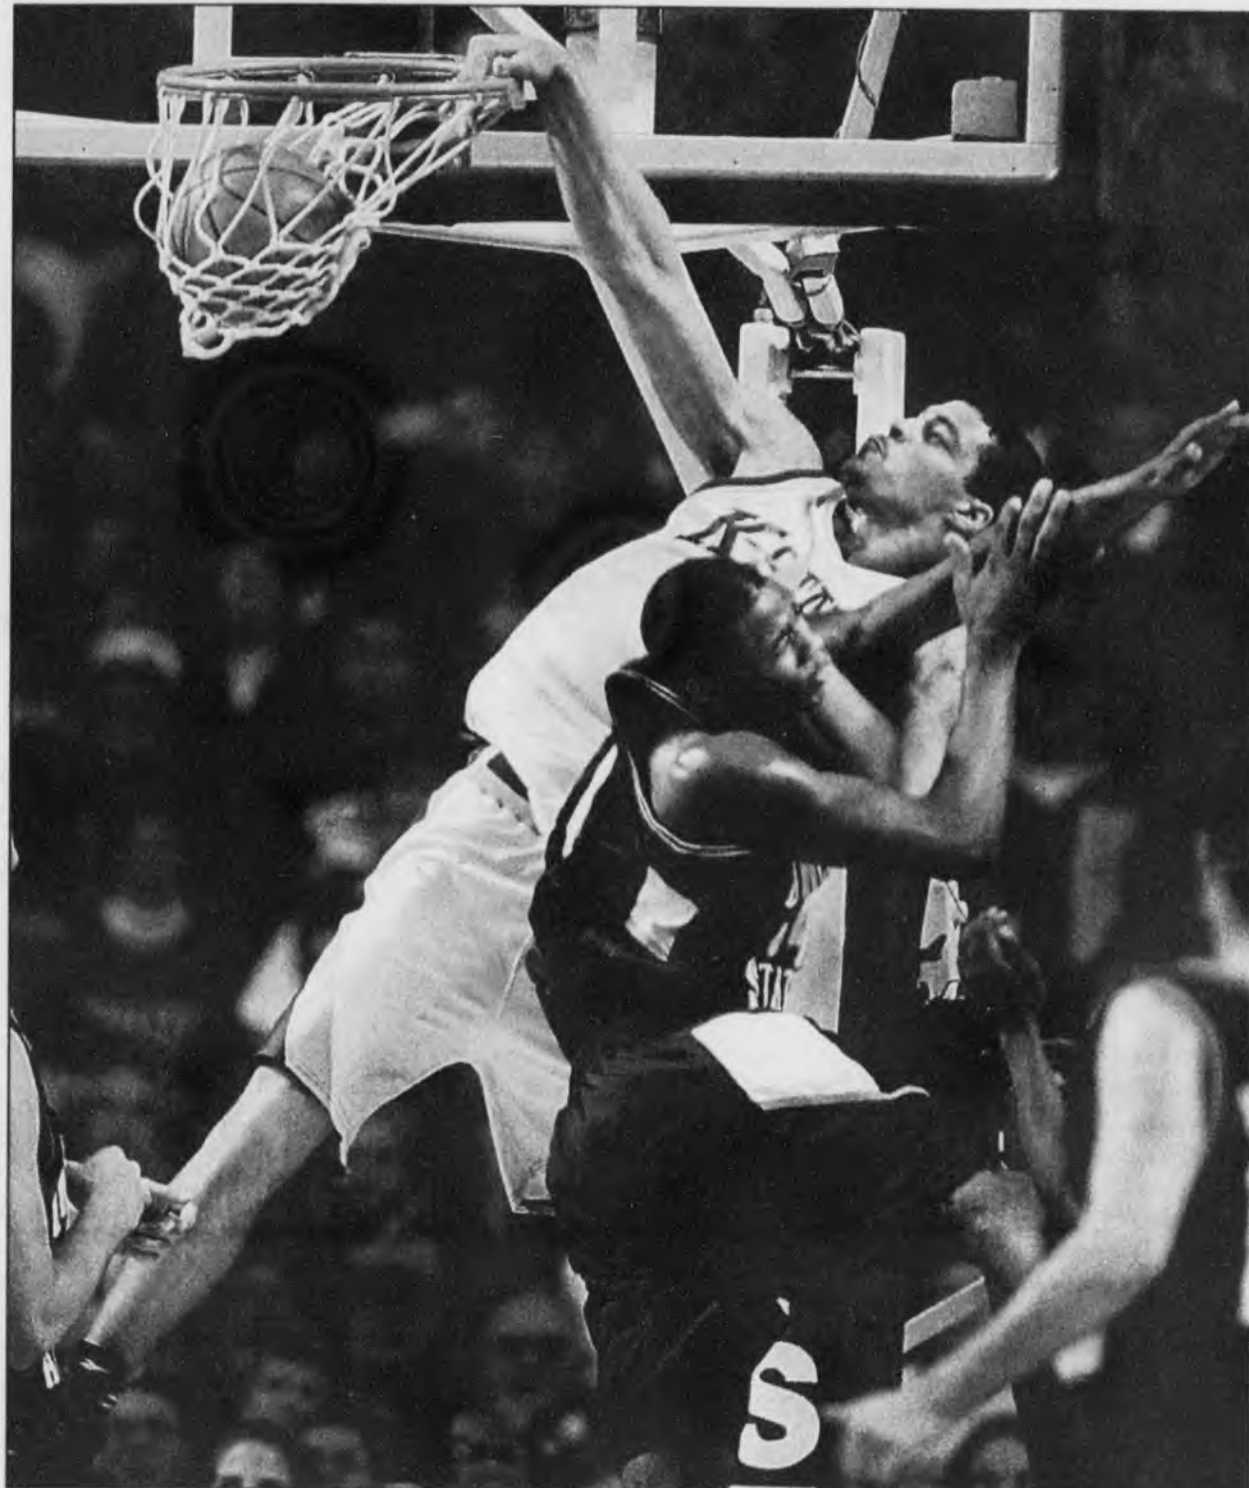

"The call was legit," Dies said. "I probably should've kicked it out, but it's just one of those plays that you have to deal with."

The Cats called a timeout of their own, and Dies came out and fouled Peterson. The Cowboys were in a one-and-one situation because the Cats hadn't reached 10 team fouls yet, but Peterson sank both shots to put the Cowboys up by three.

So, the Cats called a timeout.

"We obviously needed a three," Asbury said. "We wanted to run a set for Shawn, because we thought we could get a good look. They pretty much made sure he didn't get it."

Cowboy 3-point attack foils Wildcats

JOEL WHITE
Kansas State Collegian

K-State faced the firing squad Saturday night in Bramlage Coliseum. This firing squad did not fire rifles — it fired three-point bombs.

The Oklahoma State Cowboys acted as executioner with nine-of-22 shooting from three-point range for 41 percent.

K-State coach Tom Asbury said the Cowboys' three-point shooting compared with the Cats' two-of-12 three-point shooting proved to be the difference in the Cats' 64-61 loss.

"This game isn't a lot more complicated than the fact that they shoot 40 percent, nine-for-22 on the threes vs. our two-for-12," Asbury said. "That's the only glaring statistical advantage, and that's what won the game for them."

The Cowboys' two long-range threats, guard Joe Adkins and forward Adrian Peterson, accounted for eight of the team's nine successful three-point attempts — five coming in a three-minute stretch in the second half.

With 14:35 remaining in the game, Adkins put the Cowboys ahead 37-35 with a triple. On the Cowboys' next possession, he connected from 25 feet to put his team up by five.

Adkins, who made four-of-eight from three-point range and scored 14 points, said when he puts up a shot he never checks where he is on the floor.

"When I shoot, I really don't know where I am," Adkins said.

"When they go in, Coach likes it."

At the 12:30 mark in the second half, Peterson got into the act with a three-point shot to put the Cowboys ahead by four.

The Cowboys' following possession resulted in another triple for Adkins. Then, with 11:23 remaining in the game, Peterson connected again from behind the arc, capping off the string of three-point shots.

Peterson, who scored 26 points on four-of-seven shooting from three-point range, said because Adkins had the hot hand, the Cats' concentration was taken off of him, leaving him with open shots.

"They were helping off on him, and that left me open," Peterson said.

Cat guard Aaron Swartzendruber said he is unsure why the defense was not able to break through the screens set for Adkins and Peterson.

"They set really solid picks during that stretch, and we weren't able to get through them for whatever reason," Swartzendruber said.

"In a game like that, you can't trade three-point for two-point baskets."

Asbury said the Cowboys' shooting was too hot to stop.

"There were a couple of times that we did exactly what we wanted to do defensively, and they still hit it," Asbury said.

Peterson put a dagger in the heart of the Cats with a three-point connection at the 1:26 mark — putting the Cowboys ahead for the rest of the contest.

WHEN I SHOOT, I REALLY DON'T KNOW WHERE I AM. WHEN THEY GO IN, COACH LIKES IT.

Women's team loses road game, 78-47

STILLWATER, Okla. — Cheri Edwards scored 25 points, including 10 of 10 free throws, as Oklahoma State defeated K-State, 78-47, on Saturday.

Devon Magness added 12 points for the Cowgirls (15-9, 8-6 in the Big 12) while Renee Roberts and Jennifer Crow each added 10 points.

Angie Finkes led K-State (10-14, 4-10) with 17 points and nine rebounds. Brit Jacobson scored 10 points and fouled out with four minutes to play.

Two other Wildcat players and one for Oklahoma State also fouled out in a game that produced 49 fouls and 52 free throws.

The Cowgirls hit 26 of 33 shots from the charity stripe while the Cats hit 11 of 19.

"Defensively, I thought we played great," said OSU coach Dick Halterman. "We got beat a couple of times but for the most part, we played solid. In the first half, they beat us bad on the defensive boards. We did a poor job of blocking out but we did a better job on the boards in the second half."

K-State grabbed 20 offensive rebounds to Oklahoma State's 14. But the Cowgirls outrebounded the Cats overall, 39-37.

Off-the-field philosophy should be simple: Just don't do it

Last Feb. 1, K-State signed into a partnership with Nike.

But now, more than ever, Wildcat athletes need to stray from the swoosh philosophy when they're not on the playing field.

Just don't do it.

Keep the program clean — internally and externally in the eyes of onlookers.

In the past 10 years, K-State has developed one of the premier athletics departments in the country, and until Saturday night, it did so without picking up any of the black eyes so common to other sports programs across the country.

On Saturday night, though, the two athletes most responsible for this year's improvement of the football and men's basketball teams — quarterback Michael Bishop and power forward Manny Dies — were arrested in separate incidents.

Bishop was charged with two counts of aggravated battery and one count of battery, while Dies was charged with transporting an open container of liquor, obstruction of legal process, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia.

Although it's a little early to tell, Bishop and Dies, both innocent until proven guilty, might have given K-State one of those black eyes often associated with non-purple schools.

We'll have to wait and find out, but the story is everywhere. It's even on ESPN. Everybody in this country who cares about sports knows now.

Bishop and Dies are the two students most associated with K-State.

Michael and Manny, the two most well-known K-State athletes, don't have to be role models and certainly can have fun in their spare time.

But Michael is K-State football.

And Manny is K-State basketball.

When fans and alumni from all 50 states think of K-State, they're thinking of Michael and Manny. With the prominence the athletics program has gained, Michael and Manny are what people think of when they think of K-State. They're famous.

But with that fame, they're targets now.

Somebody got in a fight, and the quarterback was arrested. Somebody put the power forward in handcuffs.

They're big and strong, but they're in the public eye and the strength of their reputation is fragile.

And they've come too far to set themselves up for these problems.

Michael made the transition from community college football to big-time Division I ball. He's the quarterback for the No. 7 football team in the country. He has people everywhere talking about the Cats making a run at the national championship next season. He was the Big 12 offensive newcomer of the year in 1997.

He's more of a hero to K-State students than anyone else on campus. However, he was allegedly involved in a brawl outside a bar after closing hours. The ironic thing is, he doesn't drink.

He takes his athletic career seriously. He goes out to the bars sometimes, but he doesn't down any beers. He sneaks in an occasional glance at a female and he kicks back with his friends, but he doesn't look for trouble.

Then there's Manny, who's in the middle of his strongest season at K-State. He's the floor leader of a Cats team making a strong drive toward the NCAA Tournament.

He was only a few hours removed from a 21-point, five-block performance in K-State's game against Oklahoma State on Saturday night. He started nine months of probation in

MOTORCYCLES TAKE MANHATTAN

Club displays bikes in annual show

ANDREW WIMMER
Kansas State Collegian

Mall patrons were surrounded by an invasion of Harleys, Hondas and Yamahas this weekend at Manhattan Town Center.

The Blue Valley Riders Motorcycle Club had its annual show Saturday at the mall.

"It's a good way for us to show our bikes and get people interested in our hobby," Tammy Krumm, president of the Blue Valley Riders, said.

The event is every February at the mall, she said.

"It's a great way to beat the winter blahs," she said. "It gets our juices going for the upcoming riding season."

Almost every type of motorcycle was represented at the show, from Honda Goldwing touring motorcycles to BMW scooters to the newest Yamaha street motorcycles. Most of the club's 45 members displayed their motorcycles at the show, including Ken Neff's antique 1936 Harley Davidson EL.

"Our group is really diverse," Krumm said. "Members range in age from 2 to 67."

Steve Mitchell, Blue Valley Riders club member, said safety could not be stressed enough at the two-day show.

"Part of being a responsible bike owner is the maintenance of the bike," he said. "But more importantly, being responsible means being safe. If you don't ride in a safe manner, then you have no business riding at all. Safety has to come first."

Mitchell said motorcycles have come a long way in terms of design and power.

"When I started out, I had a 125cc," he said. "Nowadays I am riding a bike that has a larger engine than a lot of cars. That is how far motorcycles have progressed since my college days. The thing that has not changed is the way that I maintain my bike. It is something that we take great pride in."

Mitchell said he was impressed by the maintenance of the motorcycles he saw on K-State's campus.

"Students really take care of their bikes," he said.

As a group, the Blue Valley Riders traveled a collective 209,000 miles on their motorcycles to places such as Salt Lake City and Daytona, Fla. The group also took part in a challenge to visit all the replicas of the Statue of Liberty in Kansas.

"The challenge was really just something to do," Krumm said. "We were going to be out riding anyway, the challenge gave more incentive to travel down roads that we would ordinarily miss. It was a fun experience."

For Krumm, there is no better feeling then riding her motorcycle across the country, she said.

"I feel claustrophobic when I ride for a long distance in a car," she said. "I can breathe fresher air and see the scenery much better on my bike."

The group meets the first Wednesday of every month at Manhattan Carpet and Interior, 2613 Anderson Ave. The group welcomes visitors.

WOMEN'S STUDIES

STORIES BY DIANA LEE

Students expand views about gender in K-State program

The Women's Studies Program, an interdisciplinary secondary major, minor and graduate certificate, has been influencing the attitude of the campus toward women's contributions for 20 years.

"In 1977, the Women's Studies Program was given the charge to redress imbalances of gender treatment in traditional programs all across the campus," Bonnie Nelson, director of women's studies, said.

Nelson said women's studies focuses on the achievements of women in all areas of society. It also allows students to study the barriers women have faced and allows them to learn more about gender roles and stereotypes and how these affect their lives.

"The presence of the Women's Studies Program has given respectability to research on gender issues and has provided a supportive network for graduate students and faculty engaged in gender scholarship.

It has opened K-State up to new ideas and has broadened the base of students' learning experiences," Nelson said.

While some people are under the impression that women's studies is considered important by women only, men are also giving and receiving information in the program.

"Some people are surprised when they show up for my classes, since my name can also be a woman's name," said Marion Gray, professor of history and member of the women's studies faculty. "I'm interested in people in history, not just kings and princes, and half of people are women. In the 1960s and '70s when people began asking why women aren't included in history, I wondered, too. It's about the broad spectrum of people, not just the elites or men."

There is a variety of ways students can incorporate women's studies into their education.

There are opportunities for students to receive a secondary major or a minor in women's studies regardless of their majors. Students sometimes choose this as a secondary major if they are studying journalism, education, pre-law, family studies and human services, social work and other majors that deal with women, children or families.

Graduate students can receive a graduate certificate in women's studies, a relatively new facet of the program. This prepares students to teach women's studies courses, broadens their perspective on gender issues and allows them to deal firsthand with feminist theory.

This course of study allows students to expand their views of gender.

"We don't understand women or men if we don't understand constructions of gender. We need to understand that gender is cultural, not biological," Gray said.

Women's studies is still misunderstood by the student population and largely viewed in a negative light, Nelson said.

"There are still misconceptions among some people about our program," Nelson said. "We do not engage in male bashing, nor are we all extreme, radical feminists. Education is the only way to eradicate these false ideas."

"Students in our intro classes quickly come to see what women's studies is truly all about. Women's studies core courses are for both male and female students, for an understanding of gender roles can benefit everyone."

Campus events planned throughout March for Women's Studies Program anniversary

In celebration of 20 years on campus, the Women's Studies Program continues to honor the accomplishments of women on its anniversary.

"Women in the Arts: A Celebration," is the chosen theme of the program's anniversary.

The Department of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance production of "Goodnight Desdemona, Good Morning Juliet," a benefit concert focusing on four centuries of women composers, a showing of work by local women artists at Java Espresso and Bakery, and a creative reading by Mary Karr are all campus events that have been included in the celebration.

"There were actually events that just happened to coincide with the anniversary, such as 'Goodnight Desdemona, Good Morning Juliet,' by Ann-Marie MacDonald, a talented female writer. Also, the music department volunteered to perform a benefit concert of four centuries of women composers. Our colleagues in music thought we could celebrate women as well as art," Bonnie Nelson, director of women's studies, said.

The benefit concert will allow the Women's Studies Program to begin the Women's Studies Scholarship and Awards Fund.

"Some of our students are single parents struggling to raise their families, go to school and work, and we would like to help them. Some students have lost welfare benefits for choosing to go to a university instead of a technical college. We would also like to honor our students who excel in the program," Nelson said.

Work by such women composers as Anne-Louise Brillion de Jouy, a French harpsichordist and pianist who lived from 1774 to 1824, Pauline Viardot, a French mezzo soprano who lived from 1821 to 1910, Clara Schumann, a German pianist and American Judith Shatin, will be showcased in the benefit concert.

The benefit, to include faculty and guest musicians, will be March 4 at All Faiths Chapel. Donations for the scholarship and awards fund will be accepted at the door.

The art show at Java Espresso and Bakery will showcase the work of local women artists, in a variety of mediums, during the month of March.

Local artists to be included are Sylvia Cale Beeman, Ann Carter, Harriette Janke, Margo Kren, Janice Lee and Susan Ellis Oviatt.

In conjunction with the Department of English's Colloquium on Violence, Karr, author of "The Liars' Club," will present a public reading on March 12.

The book is Karr's memoirs of her childhood in east Texas. She grew up in an alcoholic family with her mother, who was married seven times, and her father, who swapped stories with a group called the Liars' Club.

"We have tried to include art, music and literature to have a wide variety of women artists' achievements. There will also be a display of the accomplishments of women in different fields on the second floor of the Union, as March is Women's History Month," Nelson said.

Increasing enrollment due to recruitment, scholarships

LORY STONE
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's spring enrollment has increased by 305 students from last year.

Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement, said the increase from last spring's totals is because of a larger freshman class that started at K-State last August.

"Nothing affected the spring enrollment. The fall new student increase is simply carried over," he said.

He credited the fall increase to a rise in the number of scholarships K-State issued through the KSU Foundation. In addition, the number of high school graduates in the state of Kansas is increasing, so it is only natural that the number of undergraduates would rise, he said.

"We knew we would have a bump. Our enrollment should increase gradually through the year 2000," he said.

President Jon Wefald agreed.

"We had a very good increase in the freshman class in the fall of '96.

Then we had another good increase in the fall of '97. These increases start having an effect on overall enrollment as the freshmen become sophomores and juniors," Wefald said.

He also credited recruitment for K-State enrollment increases.

"We do a good job of recruiting the best and brightest students," he said.

To accommodate for the increase, Bosco and Wefald said new classes are constantly being created.

"More classes are always being created to accommodate our growing population within our limited resources," Bosco said.

The increase in enrollment is a positive sign for K-State, Wefald said.

"We are on the way up now and probably will be for the next six to seven years. Students like to come to Kansas State," he said.

Driver must display DUI sticker

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA-If Curtis Mollenelli's eight DUI convictions were a secret, they won't be for long.

A Sedgewick County judge on Friday ordered Mollenelli to display a bright red-orange sticker on the back window of his car with the words "Convicted DUI."

District Judge Eric Yost also ordered Mollenelli to serve five days in jail and be charged $57 a day in incarceration costs.

Mollenelli must post the sticker when he gets his driver's license back in May under the order by Yost, who has developed a reputation for taking a hard line with drunken drivers.

Mollenelli said he did not take offense at being the first Wichitan singled out for such a punishment.

"Hopefully, I will be a lesson to others so they won't get caught up (in drinking and driving) like I have," said the 36-year-old Mollenelli.

Yost said he hopes the sticker will shame Mollenelli into following the law.

"This defendant throughout his life has exhibited a disregard for the law, and he's repeatedly endangered the lives of his fellow citizens and his own life," Yost said.

He cited Mollenelli's 20-year criminal record, including convictions for DUI, burglary, theft, aiding a robber, criminal damage to property, possession of marijuana, driving with a suspended driver's license and driving with no proof of insurance.

If Mollenelli is caught driving without the sticker anytime after May, Yost warned, it will constitute a probation violation and he will be sent to jail for a year.

Yost had the stickers printed himself and gave a box to the DUI Victim Center of Kansas.

Future offenders who are ordered to display the stickers will have to buy them from the victims' group for $10.

Convicted child molester's lawsuit against Chance employee dismissed

BARBARA HOLLINGSWORTH
Kansas State Collegian

A convicted child molester's lawsuit against an Aggieville bar employee was frivolous, a Riley County District Court judge said Friday afternoon.

Daniel Dixon Jr., a Manhattan resident now in a Hutchinson, Kan., prison for taking indecent liberties with a 15-year-old girl, had filed a $50,000 lawsuit against Mike Hodges, assistant manager of Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

His case stated he met the girl at Chance in June 1996, about four months before his conviction, and assumed she was of legal age for consensual sex. He blamed the bar for the crime.

Hodges said Dixon couldn't prove his claim.

"We don't even know if he's ever been there," he said. "It was totally ridiculous."

Dixon, who had planned to represent himself, failed to appear in court. Hodges' lawyer, Troy Huser, petitioned to have the case dismissed Friday and requested sanctions against Dixon for filing an unfounded complaint.

Both requests were granted.

Because Hodges is an employee of Chance and not an owner or stockholder, Huser asked that Hodges be saved from further lawsuits.

"Mr. Hodges has had his name dragged through the Manhattan Mercury and the Collegian," Huser said. "I think the court should defer Mr. Dixon from any more lawsuits or he will continue to run unabated."

Alumni center planning topic of debate

is more of a refinement of a chosen design scheme.

"Obviously, the design itself is being determined by the board," Renz said.

She said no date has been set for a public presentation of the architectural design. She said that would be a decision made in the next few months.

When told of Saturday's presentation of the conceptual architectural design, Kremer said he was puzzled.

"That's clearly quite different from what we were assured was the case," Kremer said. "We were assured there was no design going on and it wouldn't be done until the programming was completed."

Kremer said there was no mention of three architectural schemes at the focus group meeting.

"What I don't understand is what motivated the architects and the president of the Alumni Association to tell us there were no schematics and that activity would not begin until the programming was complete," Kremer said.

Local families share opinions of U.S.-Iraqi conflict

"The embargo hurt the people a lot. We heard a lot about premature babies because of malnutrition, and most students leave school to work," Sinna said.

Before the embargo, the citizens of Iraq had access to free education, medical supplies and could afford a comfortable life.

"The family back home is horrified about a possible war. They already have to work all day from morning to night — two or three jobs — to get the essentials," Sinna said.

"When there is war, there is no food. There is a panic. The people are fearful because they've been there before. They've seen the bombings."

Marwa Khamis, age 12, is in eighth grade at Dwight D. Eisenhower Middle School in Manhattan, where she said other students have teased her about the possible war.

"They ran up to me and said, 'We're going to nuke them,' and it upset me," Khamis said. "I asked them how they would feel if someone said that about here. I don't think they should bomb home. I don't think they have a reason to."

Safa Khamis, age 10, fifth grade, said he misses his grandparents who still live in Iraq. He said he thinks Americans just don't like Iraq.

"I think they should not bomb them because they haven't done anything to Americans. A lot of people can get hurt. Innocent people," Safa said. "Beautiful cities get turned into upside-down watering holes."

Saleh Al-Baghdadi, an Iraq-licensed anesthesiologist, has lived in the United States since July 1996.

"I feel safe here because there is no bomb on me. For sure now I can afford a better life for my family," he said.

In the Islamic culture, obedient Muslims respect their elders and their leaders. During Hussein's tenure in Iraq there were great improvements in the country's education and infrastructure, he said.

"I'm not into politics and cannot judge if he's right or wrong but this is his way to do good for his country," Al-

Baghdadi said.

Al-Baghdadi was a general medical resident at Saddam Medical Center in Baghdad during the Gulf War. A medical graduate of the University of Al-Mustansiriya in Iraq, he eventually hopes to be certified in the United States.

"I was there, I survived the Gulf War. The problem is not the bombing, it's after the bomb," he said. "We lived four or five months without electricity, water or transportation."

The most dire effects of the war and embargo are a lack of necessities including syringes, sutures and anesthetics, he said.

"In the hospital, we had a shortage in the smallest details and needs. The basic essentials," Al-Baghdadi said. "Unless patients bring materials from the black market, we can't do anything."

The limited supply of anesthesiology means each patient is allowed a certain small dosage regardless of the circumstances, Al-Baghdadi said.

"I don't think anyone can believe this, but patients are usually waking up during the last part of surgery. They are not fully conscious, but the body begins to twitch," Al-Baghdadi said. "In the final stages of the surgery, the patient definitely feels it."

Al-Baghdadi said he left Iraq because the embargo meant hardship for his family but definitely plans to return there with his family. He said he's hopeful there will be a peaceful resolution for his country.

"We want the chance to rebuild our country and rebuild our communities," he said.

Cats shot down by Cowboys

The Cats set a high screen for Rhodes, but the Cowboys picked up on it immediately.

With the remaining 16 seconds rapidly disappearing, point guard Chris Griffin held onto the ball, looking for another option.

Without one, he tried to repeat his earlier three-point success — the third one of his career.

But he was unsuccessful at the buzzer.

This loss, the Cats' third-straight, makes the NCAA Tournament hopes look more bleak.

With wins this week against Texas A&M and at Missouri added to a couple of wins in the Big 12 Tournament, Asbury said he thought the team has a shot.

"We need to get wins at the tournament," Asbury said.

"We're not going to get in if we don't get wins at the tournament. We're extremely capable of that."

November, but he's had a clean record and he's answered his critics in powerful ways ever since.

But, sadly for K-State students and fans, both Michael and Manny ended their Saturday night celebrations in the county jail.

Memo to Bishop and Dies:

Just don't do it — don't get yourselves into trouble situations.

Just don't do it for your fellow students and K-State alumni.

Just don't do it for your fans.

Just do it, though — where you're supposed to do it. Manny: Lead the Cats back to the tourney. Michael: You've got 254 days left to prepare for Nebraska.

Questions still abound in Dies, Bishop investigations

STEVE HERBERT/Collegian

K-STATE HEAD BASKETBALL COACH TOM ASBURY LISTENS TO QUESTIONS FROM REPORTERS DURING A MONDAY AFTERNOON PRESS CONFERENCE IN BRAMBLAGE COLISEUM. ASBURY RELEASED A STATEMENT MONDAY ABOUT MANNY DIES AND REFUSED TO ANSWER ANY QUESTIONS ABOUT HIM DURING THE PRESS CONFERENCE. MANNY DIES, JUNIOR FORWARD, IS CHARGED WITH TRANSPORTING AN OPEN CONTAINER OF LIQUOR, OBSTRUCTION OF LEGAL PROCESS, POSSESSION OF MARIJUANA AND POSSESSION OF DRUG PARAPHERNALIA EARLY SUNDAY MORNING.

AMANDA FINGER
Kansas State Collegian

Local law enforcement agencies are bombarded with questions about the battery charges against K-State football quarterback Michael Bishop and the liquor and illegal drug charges against basketball forward Manny Dies.

Max Urlick, K-State director of intercollegiate athletics, responded to inquiries about the charges against Bishop and Dies in a press release Monday.

"In fairness to anyone who might have involvement in these incidents, it would be premature for any judgments to be made before the facts are known," Urlick said. "Our coaches have always responded responsibly, and, in my opinion, with good judgment. The Kansas State University Department of Intercollegiate Athletics certainly does not condone any illegal activities."

Tom Asbury, K-State basketball coach, said a sports conference Monday that further investigations will be made about the personal involvement of Dies in any illegal activities.

"Even if it's eventually established that he had absolutely no knowledge of illegal activity, I must still impose discipline. Our student athletes must make the extra effort to be positive that they are out of harm's way in the event any questionable circumstances arise," Asbury said.

Dies was arrested Sunday morning and charged with transporting an open container of liquor, obstruction of legal process, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia.

Alvan Johnson, director of the Riley County Police Department, said the responding officer approached Dies, who was sitting in his car talking to someone standing beside the car and blocking traffic in the 1200 block of Moro Street in Aggieville. The officer asked him to move, when he noticed the passenger holding an open container. The officer said Dies did not appear to be impaired, which is why he wasn't charged with DUI.

The passenger, Antonio Rodriguez, Wichita, was also arrested and charged with transporting an open container of liquor, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia.

If Dies is convicted on all charges, he could be fined and sentenced to a maximum of 12 months in prison, which would place him on probation for 24 months. Dies is on probation for a criminal damage to property incident last May and could be made to serve his underlying sentence of seven days.

In regard to Bishop's charges on two counts of aggravated battery and one count of battery, Johnson said there are a number of people involved under general headings of victims, offenders and witnesses.

Other football players have been listed as suspects, but names are not yet accessible to the public. There have not been any changes made to Bishop's report.

Derrick Shanks, sophomore in fine arts, said he and Christopher Reed, Wichita, who were both listed as victims in the initial police report, did not suffer injuries caused by Bishop.

However, he said at least two other football players were involved in the fight in Aggieville on Sunday morning, within 30 minutes and two blocks of where Dies was arrested.

If Bishop is convicted on all charges, he could possibly be sentenced to a maximum of nine months in prison, which would place him on probation for 24 months.

Bishop and Dies are both scheduled to make their first Riley County District Court appearances at 1 p.m. Friday.

RETURN TO CAMPUS

Alumni Association to move to area south of Memorial Stadium; controversy continues about design, lack of campus input

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Although there's confusion surrounding the design and programming of the alumni center, controversy has been with this project since its initial conception.

The design for the $6 million, 48,000-square-foot center, planned for the green space south of Memorial Stadium, was unveiled Saturday at the KSU Alumni Association's board of director's meeting. While detailed plans, conceptual drawings and a model exist, they have not been made available to the public.

However, at issue since the early stages of the project is who in the university chose the site. For nearly a year, this has remained an unintentional secret — not a secret, per se, but never part of any public announcement.

Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance, said the decision was exclusively his.

"That alumni site was really discussed centrally," Rawson said. "The Alumni Association president and the board of governors had a desire to return to campus."

Rawson said he met with Alumni Association President Amy Button Renz and the alumni board last summer. After realizing the site south of Memorial Stadium would be significantly altered by the city's plans to widen Anderson Avenue, Rawson said he thought the alumni center could go there.

"In discussion with Amy and the board we concluded if they would design a structure for that site it would go a long way to beautify that part of campus," Rawson said. "It was an administrative decision."

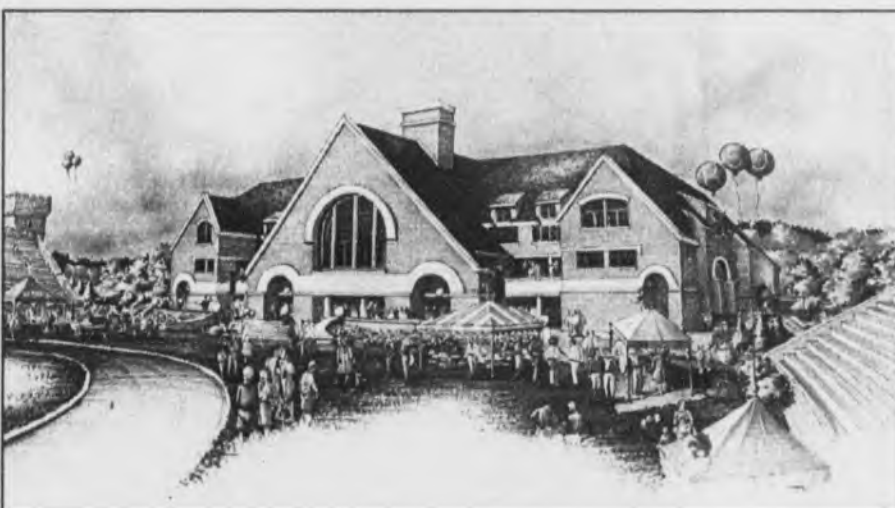

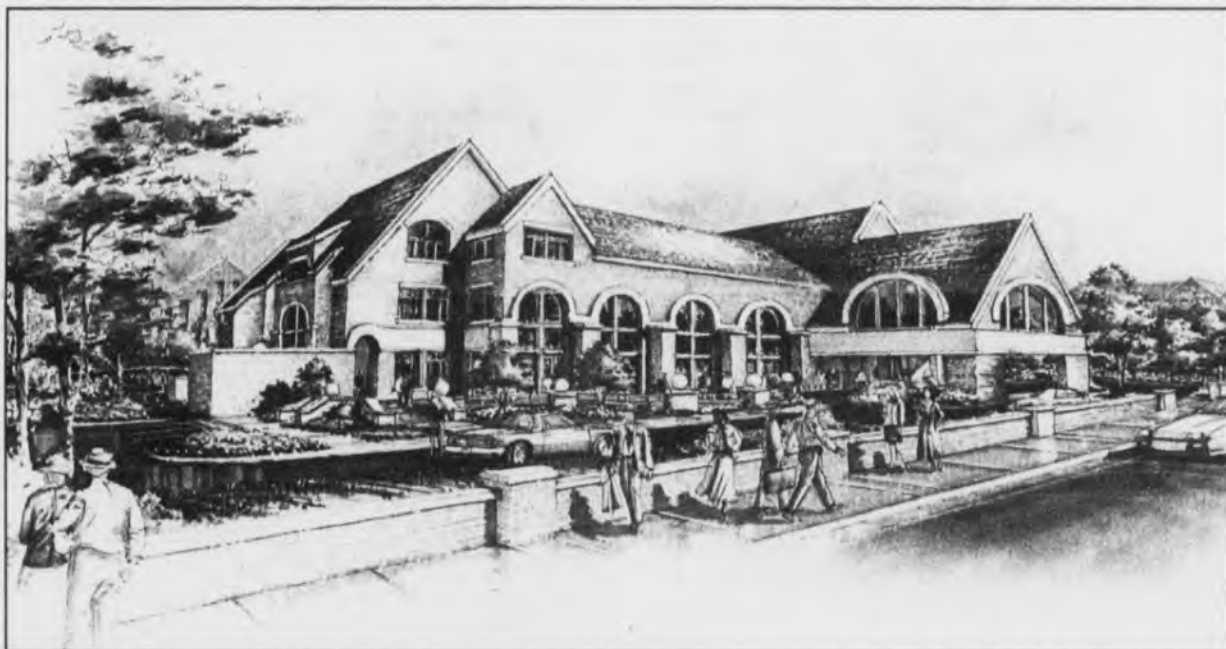

Rawson said he agreed the site selection process was entirely exclusive from the campus community.

Referring to whether the site selection should have been an agenda item for the development committee, Rawson said, "Maybe it should have, but at that point we hadn't revitalized that committee."

The issue has particularly interested many faculty and students on campus since the university has committed to developing a new master plan, "People, Principles and Process."

That plan seeks to open the planning process so the entire campus is allowed the opportunity to participate. The plan is being facilitated by the Office of Facilities Planning, which is under the administrative auspices of Rawson.

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION BUILDING TIME LINE

More than one month after original considerations, the KSU Alumni Association finally unveils its building plans.

JANUARY 1997: The Collegian reports the KSU Alumni Association has begun consideration of a move to a new building on campus. The site south of Memorial Stadium is identified as a possible location.

SUMMER AND EARLY FALL 1997: The Memorial Stadium site is selected by the university administration as the location of the building.

SEPTEMBER 1997: The alumni board votes to commit to building an alumni center at the Stadium site.

OCTOBER 1997: After an extensive interviewing process that at one time included famed architect Michael Graves, the Wichita firm Gossen Livingston Associates was announced as the architectural firm for the building.

NOVEMBER 1997-FEBRUARY 1998: Building programming and conceptual designs in progress.

FEB. 12: An architect from Gossen Livingston and Alumni Association President Amy Button Renz meet with faculty from the College of Architecture, Planning and Design in a focus group programming session. The architect and Renz told them that no architectural design has been started on the alumni center.

FRIDAY: Both Renz and President Jon Wefald tell the Collegian they had not seen the drawings for the center. Renz said no one on campus had seen them and that they will be revealed to the Alumni Board on Saturday.

SATURDAY: Alumni Board meeting. The architects present the conceptual drawings for board approval. Project designer Rick Backus said the architectural design has been ongoing for several months and that the design is a result of a choice among three designs presented to the board earlier in the process.

Course content subject of request from Legislature

JOHN HENDERSON
Kansas State Collegian

K-State officials got a request last week originating from the Kansas Legislature for a list of all academic courses with subject matter directly related to homosexuality or bisexuality.

James Coffman, provost, said the request, sent through the Kansas Board of Regents to all regents schools, was opened in terms of exactly what the list was supposed to include or how far the university was supposed to investigate the content of coursework, if at all.

Coffman said the most anyone from K-State will provide is a list of course titles that refer to homosexuals or bisexuals, but he didn't think there were any such courses.

"I'd consider it very inappropriate to delve into course content," he said.

On Friday, the College of Arts and Sciences passed the request on to department heads, asking for a list of all courses offered this academic year that contain material directly related to the subject of homosexuality or bisexuality by Wednesday.

Some professors and department heads, including James Hamilton, head of the Department of Philosophy, were a little worried.

In an e-mail sent to a long list of professors and university officials, Hamilton said he was disappointed that the provost's office did not send a stronger message against what he considered an "obvious infringement on academic freedom."

"It is astonishing and regrettable that this request ever made it down to the level of department heads and chairs," he wrote in the e-mail. "It was the job of those who are hired to represent us to the outside community to rebuff such a request even before it made it to our dean."

The request, made through Legislative Research Services, could have been made by a few state legislators as one, but there is no way to tell, Coffman said. The service, which routinely sends requests to state agencies including regents schools, ensures that the person making the request remains anonymous.

"We have no idea why the request was made," he said.

Coffman said he talked to officials at the University of Kansas, who told him they would be taking the same approach.

Paul Donovan, president of the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society, said a number of BGSL members and other concerned students and faculty had traded anxious e-mails during the weekend, mostly about the fact that the request was anonymous and that the administration was required to respond.

"It kind of raised red flags all over the place," he said.

George Keiser, professor of English and chapter president of American Association of University Professors, said the request was misguided, and a potential threat to academic freedom.

In an age when gender issues are so prevalent, he said, universities shouldn't have to answer to political will when preparing what they want to teach — especially when so much about homosexuals and bisexuals is worth teaching.

He said an Honors Composition II class he recently taught included analysis of "The Iliad," an epic that in part described the ancient Greek ideal of male-male love among soldiers at war, believed to enhance morale in the ranks.

Coffman said professors still worried about the request should be reassured, and he would be writing a letter to the regents describing K-State's position.

He said a list of class titles involving homosexuality or bisexuality would be made available, except for those courses proposed in the past two years, because they aren't through the computer system yet.

U.S. to support U.N.-Iraq compromise; weapons site inspections to continue

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton gave cautious approval Monday to a U.N. agreement with Saddam Hussein for monitoring suspect weapons sites in Iraq, stepping back from the immediate threat of a U.S. military attack. Clinton said he would keep a potent force in the Persian Gulf.

The president said if Iraq reneged on a commitment to make possible chemical and biological weapons sites subject to inspection, the consequences would be "very very serious."

"What really matters ... is not what Iraq says but what it does," the president said in the White House Oval Office.

Although Clinton did not mention U.N. economic sanctions that have wreaked havoc on the Iraqi economy, it was learned the agreement holds out the promise they would be eased or lifted if Iraq complied totally with U.N. inspections.

Another gesture to Iraq in the accord, which U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan reached Sunday in Baghdad with Hussein, was that the inspectors would be supplemented with a diplomatic contingent. Iraq has contended that American inspectors are spies.

The diplomats would accompany inspectors to presidential complexes, which Hussein has vigorously declared were his private preserve.

"There are details in the agreement that have to be fleshed out," Clinton said. Some might become clear after Annan returns Tuesday to New York.

Then, Clinton said, "We need to test the agreement and verify that the commitments which are made in writing are kept in fact."

White House spokesman Mike McCurry said nothing Annan reported about the deal "would indicate that the United Nations has anything but unfettered capacity to continue its work."

Iraq's deputy prime minister, Tariq Aziz, who signed the accord with Annan, said in Baghdad, "It was diplomacy — wise, balanced United Nations, world diplomacy — that enabled us to reach this agreement."

But Annan, in comments more in line with the American view, said the deal was worked out with "diplomacy backed by firmness and force."

With obvious relief, Clinton said, "All Americans should have a positive reaction to the fact that we have a commitment to open all these sites."

If Iraq fails to abide by the agreement, he said he was confident a forceful U.S. action would have widespread support around the world.

"I believe if it does not keep its word this time, everyone would understand," he said, alluding to the reservations Russia, France and several other nations had registered about bombing the sites during the crisis.

Before making the statement, Clinton conferred with other world leaders as his foreign policy advisers fly-specked the document signed by Annan and Hussein to avert a U.S. military strike.

NATIONAL NEWS

Supreme Court defends Megan's Law, not right of privacy for sex offenders

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Supreme Court rejected a double-jeopardy challenge Monday to Megan's Law, the New Jersey statute that requires authorities to tell communities the whereabouts of convicted sex offenders.

The court also turned away a similar attack on the Megan's Law enacted by New York's Legislature a year later.

Although the actions did not directly affect similar laws adopted in 35 other states, they were welcomed as a significant victory for proponents of such measures.

The court, acting without comment in two separate cases, turned away arguments by sex offenders in New Jersey and New York that the respective laws' notification provisions violate their Fifth Amendment's protection against being punished twice for the same crime. They argued that the notification and the public response it generates amount to punishment.

"The lawsuit we fought so hard to win is over," exulted New Jersey Attorney General Peter Verniero. "The main challenge to Megan's Law is now concluded."

Gov. Christie Whitman, in Washington for a governors' conference, pumped her right arm in triumph when told the law had survived the constitutional challenge.

"This is really a verification of the time we took to get Megan's Law through and put it together," she said. "I'm delighted."

But the issue is not finally decided. Michael Buncher, a state public defender, said the next federal challenge to Megan's Law will contend that community notification violates personal privacy rights.

"We are claiming that the kind of information that is disseminated ... is ... constitutionally protected, and it should not be disseminated," he said.

The New Jersey law, enacted in 1995, was named for Megan Kanka, a 7-year-old girl who was raped and murdered in 1994 by a twice-convicted sex offender who lived across the street from her home. Jesse Timmendequas has been sentenced to death for the crime.

Megan's mother, Maureen Kanka, became a successful crusader for similar laws across the nation.

"I've had faith in this law from day one," said Maureen Kanka said after hearing of the highest court's action. "It is the right thing to do and it is such a prevalent problem in this country."

The law calls for notice to schools, day-care centers and youth groups about moderate-risk offenders. For high-risk offenders, the law requires police to go door-to-door notifying neighborhood residents.

The law also requires sex offenders who have been paroled or released after completing their prison sentences to register with local authorities when moving to a community. That requirement, now the law in all 50 states, was not challenged.

A group of sex offenders who were convicted before Megan's Law was enacted attacked the law in federal court. They argued that the retroactive application of the notification provisions violated their rights.

Their lawsuit also challenged that part of the law allowing prosecutors to rank sex offenders according to their perceived threat to society.

Two cleared of biological weapons charges; 'anthrax' turns out to be harmless vaccine

LAS VEGAS — Two men arrested in an anthrax scare were cleared Monday of all biological weapon charges after tests showed the material was a harmless vaccine and not the deadly germ.

One faced new allegations of probation violation stemming from a mail order of bubonic plague bacteria.

Federal prosecutors withdrew felony charges against William Leavitt Jr. and Larry Wayne Harris, who each had faced counts of conspiracy to possess and possessing a biological material for use as a weapon.

"It's over. It's done. I want to get on with my life," Leavitt, 47, told a news conference before entering the downtown federal court building.

The dismissal order for both men was signed by Judge Roger L. Hunt.

"I believe that the requested dismissal of the complaint is in the best interests of justice," Assistant U.S. Attorney L.J. O'Neale said in a paper attached to the order.

Harris' attorney, Michael Kennedy, said, "He feels elated." Leavitt, who has no criminal record, was a free man. But Harris, 46, remained jailed on a new charge filed in Ohio that he violated terms of his probation for a 1995 wire fraud conviction after his arrest for obtaining three vials of freeze-dried bubonic plague bacteria through the mail.

Board requests funding decrease

STUDENT PUBLICATIONS PROPOSES TO LESSEN AMOUNT OF STUDENT FEE.

JESSI BRUNSON
Kansas State Collegian

A 16-percent advertising increase for Student Publications Inc. was credited Monday night with the decrease in student money requested by the Board of Student Publications.

Finance Committee chair Carlton Getz presented Privilege Fee Committee members with a proposal showing a 15-percent decrease in the requested fee amount of $318,000. Last year, student fees contributed a total of $374,700.54 to the Student Publications budget.

The committee gave preliminary approval to a bill that funds the board's request.

It must still be passed by Student Senate.

Getz said the main reason for the decrease was advertising growth. "It's advertising growth like you wouldn't believe. We've had wonderful advertising growth this year," he said. "Sixteen percent is astronomical."

The growth led to an increase in funds that should allow Student Publications to act more independently of student fee money.

Getz said this was one of the board's intentions.

"Our primary goal over the long term is to become more independent of the privilege fee," he said.

This goal includes the creation of a $55,000 reserve account to provide financial stability in unpredictable circumstances, such as a drop in advertising, Getz said.

"The reserve account provides for a rainy-day fund. It allows us to smooth out expenses over time," he said.

Money was not the only part of the bill discussed.

Two amendments to recommend a change in the makeup of the Board of Student Publications were added to the legislation.

However, the committee has no authority over the makeup of the Board of Student Publications.

Its recommendations, if passed by Senate, still face examination and approval by publications board members.

Committee Vice Chair Aaron Truax moved to amend the bill to read that Student Governing Association would support a change in the chairperson of the Board of Student Publications. It said the chairperson should be an elected student.

The chairman is Todd Simon, director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications. Simon said he agreed with Truax's motion, but such a decision should be made by the board.

"At our last meeting, the board discussed a need to look at the bylaws. Along with that is the intent to look at the heart of the membership of the board," he said.

"I'm not disagreeing with the substance, but I'd rather do it within the board."

Truax also tried to amend the bill with a recommendation that two new voting members be appointed to the board by SGA — one by the student body president and one by the Senate chair.

Getz said he opposed the idea.

"We are working in every respect to become much more an independent corporation. We want to reduce all of the outside influences as much as possible," he said.

"This doesn't allow Student Publications to act on its own recognition."

"Appointed members mesh together the corporation with other organizations. There is no distinct line."

Simon said he wanted to make the board operate more like a corporate board — without political connections.

"We want to make the board more business-focused. I am hoping that we can remove the politics of this board. The more politics there are, the more difficult it is to keep attention on business," he said.

Truax later changed the amendment, eliminating the SGA appointments, but adding that only elected students should be voting members of the board. Student Publications employees, including representatives from the Collegian, Royal Purple yearbook and advertising staff, shouldn't vote, he said.

The amendment also recommended appointing a local journalism professional as a non-voting member.

The amendment passed 6-2.

SCOTT SCHAAFE, LIVESTOCK JUDGING TEAM COACH, SPEAKS AT A LUNCHEON FOR THE FOUR-TIME NATIONAL CHAMPION LIVESTOCK JUDGING TEAM. BEHIND SCHAAFE ARE TWO NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP TROPHIES AND A FRAMED PRINT OF "YEARLINGS" BY FAMED WESTERN ARTIST EARL KUHN. THE PRINT WAS PRESENTED TO THE TEAM BY DEE LIKES, EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE KANSAS LIVESTOCK ASSOCIATION.

Livestock judging team wins again

WEFELD PRAISES TEAM FOR 4-STRAIGHT VICTORY AT NATIONAL COMPETITION.

AMANDA DAVIDSON
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State football team has never done it neither has the basketball team. But the livestock judging team has.

President Jon Wefald gave a luncheon on Monday for the four-time national livestock judging championship team — the only team at K-State to win that many consecutive national championships.

"The university is very proud of the team and the quality they bring to the campus," Wefald said.

The K-State Livestock Judging Team consists of 10 members: Jered Shipman, Dustin Dean, Wade Franklin, Bill Disberger, Lee Stremsterfer, Randy Mullinix, Les Wankel, Chad Breiner, Clay Breiner and Ryan Higbie. Each team member is a senior in animal science and industry and can be on the team for only one year.

The 1997 nationals took place in Louisville, Ky., and 36 teams were present.

Each individual on each team participated alone, and their points added up for a total team score.

The morning of nationals started off with each individual judging 12 classes of cattle, hogs and sheep.

The reason room competition was after the lunch break.

"The reason room is where we excel," Shipman said. "Coach Scott really trains us to speak right."

During the reasoning competition, each individual gave reasons why they placed each animal in a certain class.

Structure, balance, quality and muscle were among some of the reasons and characteristics each individual looked at when categorizing the animals.

Each individual's points were tallied, and they received individual placements as well as overall team rankings.

Franklin placed fourth, Shipman placed sixth and Wankel placed ninth overall.

The luncheon also offered a tribute to two-time Coach of the Year Scott Schaafe.

Schaafe was named Coach of the Year in '95 and '97.

Wefald congratulated the team members, their parents and friends and presented limited-edition championship T-shirts to each team member.

"A coach is always the key to success, and the livestock judging team is very lucky to have a coach with talent, dependability and knowledge," Wefald said.

Schaafe has been coaching the livestock judging team for six years and has done what no other coach at K-State has, winning four national championships in a row.

"This is the best habit I've ever had, and I'm fortunate enough to have some very talented and dedicated young men and women to help me continue the habit of winning national championships," Schaafe said.

Many critical leaders in the agricultural field were present at the luncheon to honor the accomplishments of the team.

Dee Likes was among that top group of agricultural leaders. Likes is the executive vice president of the Kansas Livestock Association and made a special presentation to the livestock judging team and Schaafe.

He presented them with a framed print of "Yearlings" by famed western artist Earl Kuhn.

The portrait will be hung in Weber Hall to remind the university and other students of the success of the 1997 livestock judging team and its two-time Coach of the Year.

THE UNIVERSITY IS VERY PROUD OF THE TEAM AND THE QUALITY THEY BRING TO THE CAMPUS.

Alumni center project embodies failed process

The design for the Alumni Association's planned alumni center on the green space south of Memorial Stadium isn't only almost finished, but has been the source of misinformation the association and the administration have been using to keep the campus out of the loop.

From the very beginning, the alumni center has been an exclusive project — exclusively the right of the Alumni Association's board of directors to control its destiny. The Alumni Association is a private entity. Nevermind that the building will be built on valuable K-State real estate — state property, at least until it will be sold to the association.

We don't argue with the fact the decision to pick an architect and a design should rest with the alumni board. That's only fair, since the board, or more specifically, K-State alumni, are paying for it. However, for the Alumni Association to parade around campus sponsoring focus groups to solicit programming input for a building that is already designed is insulting.

While some worthwhile information no doubt came from those sessions, the fact is that the facilitators of those sessions — including alumni president Amy Button Renz — told the participants that no design had begun. In fact, it had. This makes us even more doubtful that the university's best interests are involved.

We have a campus that wants to be involved in the design process. Past building mistakes have usually resulted in outcry among some faculty and staff. Instead of a superficial programming stage, faculty and students should be allowed to comment on the process during the major stages and be honestly informed of the design's maturity.

Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance, oversees campus development. So why did Rawson choose to make the site selection decision for the alumni center on his own, without feedback from the campus?

Don't tell us on the one hand you want the campus to be involved, and then on the other make a closed-door decision. That's a textbook definition of hypocrisy.

K-State does not deserve to be trampled on with such careless and superficial regard. The planning process either needs to be adhered to or thrown out.

Customers reap questionable value from cable companies

As usual, there were lots of stories making news in the past seven days.

The situation with Iraq keeps rising in intensity. El Niño continues its watery assault on California.

The Winter Olympics have ended. And Monica Lewinsky still traipses across the television.

Could someone get her a better bra? But, alas, it's time to get back to the most important business at hand.

Cable television prices are going up. Again.

Funny thing, though, that the more I pay for cable, the less I get.

I don't want to sound ungrateful, considering that some day I might work in the cable industry, but that doesn't excuse the fact that I'm paying too much for too little.

I'm sure I'll offend someone right off the bat, but I'm not crazy about all the sports networks we have on our system. I was disappointed, but not broken up, by the replacement of Court TV.

I'm sure ESPN, ESPN2 and Fox Sports are great channels. But how much sports does a cable system in a market this size need?

I'm a staunch supporter of our military and understand that the males on post, as well as male college students, need their SportsCenter and sneak peaks at Sports Illustrated swimwear models.

But all of this sports is starting to monopolize an already rinky-dink list of available channels on our local cable provider, TCI of Kansas Inc. It's bad enough paying for one specialty channel that I don't watch, but three?

TCI in Kansas City, Kan., has Comedy Central. Does TCI in Manhattan know nothing of the "South Park" madness we have here on campus? Comedy Central could then find its way to our system — maybe not right away, but sooner than anything redundant we already have.

Nothing says popularity like "South Park" Tuesdays in the K-State Student Union. And that's a channel I wouldn't mind paying for.

I won't complain too loudly about Animal Planet. It might not appeal to the widest number of people, but it's good for children too old for Disney, but not old enough for the sometimes graphic nature of The Learning Channel.

Speaking of The Learning Channel, at times it can be a source of great viewing. But just as our cable system combines other channels, why couldn't we combine the Discovery Channel with The Learning Channel?

We couldn't watch "What Sex Am I" anymore (a show about cross-dressers and transvestites), but adding a channel that would attract more interested watchers could only increase TCI's profit.

I'm also not going to complain about two CBS stations and two ABC stations. It's nice to keep up with what's happening in Kansas City.

Sometimes the news is better on the Kansas City stations, both in content and in production quality than Topeka or Junction City. But I'd be the first to let them go, if TCI put on something more worthy.

How about a Spanish channel? The population in this area is significant enough to warrant it.

These channels have news, movies and soap operas like their American counterparts. It would also be a terrific chance for modern language students to refine their listening comprehension skills.

Remember when MTV first began? Back then it was truly a 24-hour music channel (emphasis on the word music). Now it's everything from "The Real World" to "Lovelace" and everything that's talk in between.

They introduced M2 a couple of years back. I'd pay to have that channel on my cable system. I'd pay even more for VH1. It's not a music channel for fuddy-duddies. It's a channel for music that has a longer shelf life than the Spice Girls. Not everyone in Manhattan wants their MTV.

Channel space in this market is limited. That's where I give TCI the benefit of the doubt. But the channels we do have should change with the times. Especially if once or twice a year we're in for a rate hike.

Of course there are those who would say we have two choices: be satisfied with what we have or get a satellite system.

First, why should we be satisfied with what we have? Because of the way this city is situated, and because many of us live in old homes or apartments, we have poor reception without cable.

In a sense, we're forced to pay. Are we not to expect a little quality of service?

If you don't think so, then you're either living on the other end of town — you know, the $50,000-plus side — or you might want to rethink the value of a dollar.

As for the second choice, well, I guess you don't know my landlord. I can't even have a bird, let alone a satellite system. Most college students, myself included, live in homes or apartments that can't be rewired or have something attached to the roof or stuck in the ground. Even if we could, most of us couldn't afford it.

Paying for TCI cable is like looking for housing in any college town. The big boys know you need somewhere to live, and it's their opportunity to take advantage of you.

Just as word of mouth kept me from renting from certain companies, I hope word of mouth and a lot of noise-making from dissatisfied customers will remind TCI that more changes need to be made.

'Say it ain't so, Joe ...'

After the age of heroes, who does one look up to when all the heroes are dead or disgraced?

MARNY BURKE/Collegian

I hate life. I'm wedged somewhere in a crevice of existence and can't quite seem to pry myself out.

This is the point at which my knee-jerk reaction is to derive inspiration from someone who's trod this road before, someone I can get that ignition spark from. I'm no longer of the age where I feel obliged to feel inferior to someone because of popularly perceived importance. This doesn't stop me from looking up to certain people because of the spirit and qualities they embody, but those people are in short supply. Besides, who are America's heroes today?

Movie stars? Nope. What was the glamour of an exclusive lifestyle has become a prison without bars, a series of cameras pointed over every imaginable line, waiting for them to be crossed, and the people staring down those lenses are all too willing to cross 'em all at once.

Same thing for our politicians, but they seem to have a renewed lemming mindset, bound and determined to shake confidence in ways we (or right-wing conspiracies) can hardly imagine, and take public money with them.

Sports heroes? Isn't that a contradiction now? Players rarely stay in one place long enough to invoke a following, nor is a team as well-anchored in a community as we'd like to think. While players demand to be paid more in alternating breaths than families make in a day and franchises hold communities hostage for the new sporting facility of choice, human interest wanes. If you can show up at work, perform badly and somehow get your boss fired, that's either the sickest perversion or the truest incarnation of the American dream.

There aren't any more heroes in space. The been-there, done-that feeling extends beyond the atmosphere, and the words "Mir" and "Skylab" are finding themselves adjacent more often than ever now.

America's prefabricated media-crafted heroes have been folded, packed up and shoved under the bed like an embarrassing box of second-grade valentines. And you know what? I'm not sure that's a bad thing.

One of the last "heroes" I can remember is poor Scott O'Grady, the American pilot shot down over Bosnia several years ago. I can choose to be inspired by his abilities to forage, to hide and to survive in the face of overwhelming odds. I can choose not to be inspired by his (in)ability to evade surface-to-air missiles. O'Grady's not perfect, but he doesn't need to be.

There are two slots in a person's life for all-aspire avatars of inspiration, and they're (sometimes) filled by a pair of parents to whom that person matters more than anything. Why have a hero who doesn't care if you exist? OK, sure, that illusion of invulnerability fades at about the same time people realize they hold the reins to their own life, and at about the same time the heroes in a young person's constellations lose their sparkle.

Just because people aren't perfect, though, doesn't mean that they can't hold some quality in them that provokes the best in others. The effects are just less overwhelming and more specific.

There are a few athletes I have found inspiration in — flawed to the point of being defined by such flaws. There was Kansas City Chief Joe Delaney, a running back whose attempt to save a drowning child caused him to disregard his own inability to swim and lost his own life. Remember Boston Celtic captain Reggie Lewis? He struggled to return to a playoff game against the Miami Heat even as his heart shuddered and, in the off-season as he shot hoops at Brandeis University, stopped. Or, more recently, San Diego Charger Stan Humphries. Not the perfect physical specimen, but he played with complete abandon and enthusiasm for the game. He's expected to retire after suffering severe concussions — anybody seen his offensive line? — but there's someone who's earned every penny of his salary and pension.

I take my heroes piecemeal now. I wish I could have Delaney's selflessness, Lewis' drive or Humphries' passion in anything I did.

There's no reason to stop with sports figures. I'd like the fortitude of George Burns, the poise of William Cohen, the independence — but not the fashion sense — of Marilyn Manson, the frothing fervor of Hunter S. Thompson, the perception of Sylvia Plath, thechutzpah of Ted Hughes, the vision of Benjamin Franklin, the perseverance of Nelson Mandela, the liver of Keith Richards and the teflon hide of Bill Clinton. And you thought a platypus was genetically confused.

The time of heroes is long dead. They've fallen to their Ozymandian demise, and today's inspirations are much more segmented, merely aspects we can invoke in ourselves.

But this minimal inspiration guarantees that individuality survives and thrives, and that's worth the passing of the heroes of old.

Alumni center project left out college's input

Editor,

I would like to thank Russell Fortmeyer for bringing insightful and honest architectural criticism to our campus and for his article in Monday's Collegian, "Alumni center building plans topic of debate."

I would just like to reiterate the fact that while the College of Architecture, Planning and Design was involved in the programming process, it was apparently only a gestural move by the university and the Alumni Association board of directors.

I was at the Feb. 12 focus group facilitated by Amy Button Renz, Alumni Association president. We were presented with schematic diagrams related to site planning and internal adjacencies and were assured by Mac McKee, architect with Gossen Livingston, that the firm was still strictly in the programming phase of the project.

Saturday, Gossen Livingston project designer Rick Backus presented a set of complete floor plans, a color-rendered site plan, four artist renderings of the interior and exterior of the proposed building, and a small-scale model. It is obvious from this presentation that design development has been taking place for many weeks, and the Alumni Association apparently did not want to involve the Department of Architecture in any meaningful discourse relating to the project.

The creation of a piece of architecture is a complex undertaking, where criticism and input during the programming and design process are of utmost importance. Gossen Livingston was chosen for this project based on the strength of its programming process — a process that is apparently just for show and not really concerned with using the wealth of knowledge of both architecture and campus planning available within our own College of Architecture, Planning and Design.

If they have only pretended to keep us "involved" with the design process, I'm sure they have disregarded much of the information from other input groups they claim to have used as well.

I will be graduating in May from the College of Architecture, Planning and Design. The Alumni Association will come calling, asking for me to donate to its cause. Why would I, or anyone, want to donate to an organization that has shown the lack of respect that the Alumni Association has shown to me? My money will go to Oz, the journal of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, or to departmental scholarships. I ask my fellow classmates to consider the same.

SPORTS ROUND-UP

Sports Round-up is your daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports outside of K-State. Compiled from Associated Press reports.

County clears way for hockey in Topeka

TOPEKA — Shawnee County commissioners approved a contract Monday that will bring Kansas its second professional hockey franchise.

The as-yet unnamed team will play in the Central Hockey League, a 10-team league based in Indianapolis that also includes the Wichita Thunder.

The Topeka team will pay the county-owned Kansas ExpoCentre rent of $3,500 for each of the 37 pre- and regular-season home games. The contract raises the rent during the next three years.

After a 30-minute discussion, commissioners unanimously approved the contract with Flying Cross Check, a company formed under Kansas law that will own and manage the team.

Jonathan Fleisig, a 32-year-old commodities trader from Hoboken, N.J., is the company's chief executive. Fleisig also is president and the largest shareholder of the Bakersfield, Calif., Fog of the West Coast Hockey League.

Sanders is Jim Thorpe Trophy winner

OKLAHOMA CITY — Detroit's Barry Sanders, who became only the third player in NFL history to rush for 2,000 yards in one season, was chosen winner of the Jim Thorpe Trophy on Monday.

Sanders' career yardage in nine years with the Lions is 13,778, including 2,053 last year.

The trophy has been presented since 1955 to the NFL's most valuable player.

Tornadoes damage Astros' training field

KISSIMMEE, Fla. — Heavy winds destroyed a batting cage and a fence at the Houston Astros' spring training camp Mon.

While there was no damage to Osceola County Stadium, where the Astros play spring training games, the ballpark lost power, causing the team to cancel practice Mon., Astros spokeswoman Desta Kimmell said.

One tornado shredded the Ponderosa Park campground behind the stadium, killing seven people. Authorities said the twister struck just 200 yards from the Astros' facility.

Kimmell said all players and staff were accounted for and no one was hurt. Outfielder Moises Alou inspected damage at the field after the weather cleared.

At least 26 people died and hundreds of homes and buildings were destroyed by tornadoes in Florida. At least 14 people died and 200 structures were damaged in Osceola County.

Elway's shoulder surgery successful

DENVER — John Elway, one month removed from his first Super Bowl victory, had minor surgery on his right shoulder Monday and should recover within six weeks.

"It was routine, and it was successful," Broncos spokesman Paul Kirk said.

Elway, who has not said whether he will return for his 16th NFL season, will have better range of motion and less pain when he throws, Denver trainer Steve Antonopoulos said.

The surgery, the third on Elway's right shoulder, was a clavicle resection to remove debris and "clean up stuff," Antonopoulos said.

Elway, 37, injured the shoulder when he was thrown to the ground during a game in October, but did not report the injury until after the Super Bowl.

He has not decided whether to repair a torn biceps muscle in his right arm. The biceps was torn during a preseason game last year but did not bother Elway during the season.

Speculation about Elway's return began before Denver's Super Bowl victory over Green Bay on Jan. 25, and Monday's surgery is a good sign for Broncos fans.

Elway reportedly has said he would not have the surgery if he was planning to retire.

Maxwell loses at Supreme Court

WASHINGTON D.C. — Vernon Maxwell of the Charlotte Hornets on Mon. lost a Supreme Court appeal of his 1995 conviction in Houston for marijuana possession.

It appeared that Monday's action clears the way for state prosecutors to seek a start of Maxwell's sentence — 180 days in the Harris County Jail. The sentence has been held in abeyance pending appeals.

The lawyer who filed Maxwell's Supreme Court appeal — Ronald Wilson of Houston — did not return telephone calls to discuss the case.

The nation's highest court, without comment, turned away Maxwell's argument that his guilty plea had not been made knowingly or voluntarily because he had not received adequate legal help.

Maxwell has played for four other teams in his nine-year NBA career: Houston, San Antonio, Philadelphia and Orlando. During his five years with Houston, the Rockets won two league championships.

The 32-year-old guard, known as Mad Max, is no stranger to on- and off-court troubles.

While with the Rockets, Maxwell was suspended for 10 days for charging into the stands and punching a spectator.

He was suspended during his time with the Spurs for making inappropriate gestures during a game.

Doctor recommends surgery for Van Exel

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The Los Angeles Lakers team physician has recommended Nick Van Exel undergo diagnostic arthroscopic surgery, a procedure that would probably cause the All-Star point guard to be out at least two weeks.

Van Exel has sat out his team's past three games — two because of the soreness and a clicking sensation in his right knee, and the other because of illness.

Dr. Steve Lombardo recommended diagnostic surgery after examining Van Exel on Monday.

"Nick will make that decision in the very near future," team spokesman Raymond Ridder said, adding that Van Exel might seek a second opinion.

"At this point in time, we are not commenting on how long Nick will possibly be sidelined if he undergoes the surgery simply because we don't know what the diagnosis will be," Ridder said. "The one thing we do know is Van Exel won't play in Milwaukee tomorrow."

Van Exel traveled with the team to Orlando, Fla., for the opener of a six-game road trip against the Magic on Sunday — a game the Lakers lost 96-94.

But instead of playing, Van Exel returned home to have his knee examined because the soreness and clicking sensation he had felt previously persisted.

Van Exel, 26, played in his first All-Star game earlier this month. He is averaging 14.8 points and 7.7 assists in 46 games. In four previous NBA seasons, he averaged 15.1 points and 7.3 assists.

Tennis team captures 1 of 2 matches

DAN CATALDI
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State tennis team showed marked improvement this weekend with its performances in a pair of dual meets.

Saturday, the Wildcats took on Utah. The Utes, who are in the Cats' region, are a critical opponent for the Cats' NCAA Tournament bid.

Before the match, K-State Coach Steve Bietau said he thought the two teams were fairly evenly matched.

The Cats did nothing to prove Bietau wrong, losing 5-4 to the Utes.

The meet started off well for the Cats, as Yana Dorodnova continued her streak of wins over nationally ranked opponents by defeating No. 40 Anna Svedenhov 4-6, 6-4, 6-0. This was her third-consecutive victory over a higher-ranked opponent.

At No. 2, Anna Pampoulova lost in three sets to the Utes' Linda Engblom 6-4, 5-7, 6-1.

The Cats won the next two matches at No. 3 and No. 4 as Eva Novotna' and Lena Pilipchak rebounded after struggling the previous weekend. Novotna' beat Megan Payne 2-6, 6-2, 6-4 to give the Cats the lead after the first three matches were complete.

Pilipchak then opened up a lead for the Cats with the most lopsided victory of the day, 6-2, 6-2.

At No. 5, Dinah Watson lost a third-set tiebreaker to Utah's Angie Olson. The match score was 1-6, 6-2, 7-6 (7-2).

Utah's Rebecca Rushforth then defeated the Cats' Natalia Farmer 6-2, 6-4 to even the meet at 3-3 going into doubles.

In doubles, Bietau decided to make several changes to his lineup after three poor performances. At No. 1 doubles, he reunited Dorodnova and Pilipchak, a pair that played together last season at No. 1.

"I feel comfortable playing with Lena," Dorodnova said. "We played together all last year."

The move paid off as they beat the Utes' No. 30 team of Engblom and Svedenhov 9-8 (7-0).

At No. 3 doubles, Olson and Rushforth topped the pair of Pampoulova and Watson 8-5.

This left the No. 2 doubles match as the only remaining point in a 4-4 meet.

The duo of Novotna' and Farmer jumped out to a 5-0 lead but couldn't keep it as they dropped the next eight games to lose 8-5 to Utah's Molly Sanderson and Payne.

"We're playing better," Bietau said. "The vast majority of the team lifted their level of play."

Sunday, the Cats showed more improvement as they took care of the Drake Bulldogs 9-0, not losing a set in the meet.

Again Dorodnova continued to roll, running her record to 6-0 on the season with a 6-3, 6-1 victory over Marianne Motte.

At No. 2, Pampoulova got back on the winning track with a 6-0, 7-6 (7-5) victory over Daria Kotchoubinskaya. Novotna' followed with a 6-0, 6-2 win over Emma Edvardsson. Pilipchak kept things rolling with a 6-0, 6-3 win against Rajasree Kuruvilla. Watson then defeated the Bulldogs Bridgette Komasincki 6-3, 6-0.

Farmer closed out the singles sweep with a 6-3, 6-2 victory over Aleksa Huns.

The doubles were more of the same as Dorodnova and Pilipchak started off with an 8-6 win over Kotchoubinskaya and Komasincki. Novotna' and Chris Schulte beat Drake's No. 2 team of Motte and Edvardsson 8-3.

Watson and Pampoulova then closed out the sweep with an 8-4 victory over Kuruvilla and Motte.

K-STATE'S YANA DORODNOVA CLEANS OFF THE GRIP ON HER TENNIS RACKET IN BETWEEN GAMES WITH DRAKE'S MARIANNE MOTTE DURING A TENNIS MATCH AT THE COTTONWOOD RACQUET CLUB IN MANHATTAN ON SUNDAY.

RUSSIAN ROULETTE

K-STATE'S DORODNOVA AND PILIPCHAK GREW UP PLAYING RUSSIAN STYLE

DAN CATALDI
Kansas State Collegian

Two K-State seniors traveled a long way way to play tennis for the Wildcats.

Yana Dorodnova and Lena Pilipchak came thousands of miles from the former Soviet Union in 1995 to become stars for the Cats' tennis team. Both had an immediate effect as freshmen.

In her first year on the team, Dorodnova played No. 1 singles. She posted an impressive 14-5 overall record including a 5-4 conference record.

Pilipchak started her career playing primarily No. 2 singles. In her debut year, she ran her record to 12-16 with a 2-4 conference mark.

Dorodnova and Pilipchak teamed together in their junior years to play the No. 1 doubles position.

However, this wasn't the first time these two had paired together. They were first joined together years before they had plans on coming to the Great Plains to further their career. They first teamed up for a tournament in the Ukraine.

"We played doubles together once. We were not very successful," Dorodnova said.

However, for the Cats, they had an impressive 12-4 record and posted a 6-4 conference record in the Big 12.

Both Dorodnova and Pilipchak grew up playing tennis in the Soviet Union. Dorodnova was playing in Moscow during her childhood. At the age of 7 she was playing for a club team. In the communist system, there was no cost for the instruction. As a result, the competition to stay on the team was tough.

"When I was accepted at the club, there were 36 girls of my age in the group. And then I was the only one left after a few years of playing," Dorodnova said.

Dorodnova had great success as a junior in Russia, winning several tournaments. However, life wasn't easy being raised as a tennis player in the Soviet Union.

"It was really tough growing up over there. And playing tennis in particular because the competition was so intense. They could kick you out no matter what," Dorodnova said.

After 1991, things changed drastically as the Soviet Union fell apart. Things opened greatly as the communist ideals were replaced with a more open market system.

"There were more opportunities," Dorodnova said. "I could travel more."

This event helped Dorodnova get to K-State. In the years after the Soviet break-up, college-age students were given the chance to come to American universities.

Here, they could both work on their tennis as well as their studies. Previously, they would not have had the opportunity to both play tennis and get an education. They would simply work to improve their tennis after a certain age.

Therefore, in 1995, Dorodnova came to Manhattan to play tennis and work toward her degree. Although she said she was nervous and claimed not to speak English, Coach Steve Bietau said he disagreed.

"She was functional," Bietau said. "She was underestimating herself."

Pilipchak grew up in Kiev, Ukraine. She also lived through the changes in the former Soviet Union, and was also able to come to K-State after travel restrictions were lifted.

Former Cat tennis player Karina Kuregian helped bring Pilipchak to K-State. Kuregian was also from the Ukraine and knew Pilipchak. Kuregian encouraged Bietau to bring Pilipchak to the Midwest.

Given the opportunity to come to the United States, Pilipchak was quick to take it.

Having Dorodnova and Kuregian here helped Pilipchak adjust to life in Manhattan she said.

"Having Yana here to speak Russian was great," Pilipchak said.

Now both players are in their senior years playing out their last semester of eligibility and looking forward to life after tennis.

"I want to go to graduate school," Dorodnova, who's majoring in management information systems, said. "I would like to continue with the game, maybe helping coach as a graduate student."

Annual February swimsuit issue remains part of today's culture

It's February, and it's happening again. High school punks are racing home on their skateboards to check the mail. Fraternity men are staking out the foyer mail boxes, hoping to intercept their brothers' deliveries.

Grown men are lining up outside the Manhattan Public Library at 6 a.m.

All this peculiar activity can mean only one thing — the Sports Illustrated swimsuit issue is back.

'Tis the season when Jerome Bettis' protrusive gut is benched in favor of Vendela's finely sculpted abdomen. The three-dimensional topographical map of the Himalayas that is Randy Johnson's face gets some much-needed bullpen relief from the soft complexion of Elle MacPherson.

Unfortunately, the euphoria surrounding this annual frolic into fantasy land carries with it some nasty byproducts.

Imagine the horror mail carriers face one week later when disgruntled protesters forget about Monica Lewinsky long enough to inundate Sports Illustrated with angry letters. And you thought the chore of toting around millions of double-issue periodicals was daunting.

With a rabid fervor unrivaled even by the Cameron Crazies at Duke University, opponents of the swimsuit issue level scathing indictments at both the producers and consumers of the magazine.

They accuse the "SI" nickname of being an acronym for phrases such as "Sexism Illustrated," "Social Irresponsibility," "Smut Incorporated" and "Selling Inequality."

They invoke other vaunted rhetoric that makes it seem as if the centimeter-thick issue is single-handedly responsible for setting the women's liberation movement back three decades. Never mind that since its inception in 1964, the swimsuit issue has been edited by women. Jule Campbell called the shots on the issue for 32 years before Elaine Farley succeeded her in 1996.

To its credit, Sports Illustrated has made concessions on some fronts. Last year, it began offering the swimsuit issue as a separate companion piece to its regular weekly edition. So now, instead of a commemorative issue in tribute to Dean Smith or Tom Osborne, you can buy a tribute to, say, Tyra Banks. Also, although the swimsuit issue is included in subscriptions, Sports Illustrated offers subscribers the option of not receiving it.

The magazine has also found ways to defend its 34-year institution. For instance, in 1997, the swimsuit issue attempted to shed its "nothing-to-do-with-sports" label by including female athletes such as Steffi Graf and Gabrielle Reece among its swimwear models.

This year, the CNN/Sports Illustrated Web site at cnni.com offers 110 exclusive photos not shown in the printed edition. Internet users can also download 50 video clips of "documentary" footage.

For many people, there's something terribly wrong with female models exercising their right to be photographed, and there's something even more wrong with male consumers exercising their right to pay to see the end product.

Of course, these same detractors think nothing of cover shots showing Troy Aikman in skintight silver pants. They scarcely tremble when a leather-clad Dennis Rodman appears in a photo more appropriate for a Dr. Love's advertisement than a magazine cover. They couldn't care less when the image of convicted rapist Mike Tyson is used to sell issues.

And, well, they shouldn't. Magazines don't exist to massage our gender-sensitive sore spots. They don't exist to soothe our insecurities. They exist to make money. Sports Illustrated puts Heidi Klum in a swimsuit on its cover for the exact same reason New Woman puts Jimmy Smits in an unbuttoned silk shirt on its cover.

Detractors should accept that the swimsuit issue will always be part of our culture. Likewise, the rest of us should concede that every year, the issue's opponents will mysteriously awaken from a 51-week slumber like vampires and thirst for Sports Illustrated's blood.

Year after year, all this furor over one magazine issue is unnecessary and overblown.

Besides, what's more appalling than $142 for a one-piece?

The Cryptoquip is a substitution cipher in which one letter stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words and words using an apostrophe give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is by trial and error.

Vanilla Ice concert sells out in Lawrence; fans pack Granada to see 'Ice Ice Baby'

PHIL KELLUM
Kansas State Collegian

Two sold-out shows. Hundreds of screaming, crazed fans. A Beatles concert in 1966? No. Vanilla Ice this weekend in Lawrence.

It was absolutely hilarious. I just couldn't get enough. I waited 45 minutes in line outside the Granada and once inside, waited two more hours.

There was no opening act, because Lawrence's pop-punk phenoms Danger Bob were only rumored to open. Instead, the Ultra Groove DJs kept the crowd somewhat occupied while they spun classic rap hits from the likes of Public Enemy, Run DMC and House of Pain.

Around 10:15 p.m., some guy hit the stage and introduced Vanilla Ice, the man we'd all been waiting for. He strolled out on stage sporting an entirely new look. Gone were the terrible clothes from 1990 and the big quiff haircut, and in its place were a bleached blonde George Clooney-style haircut and shorts and a tank top. OK.

He had a huge security staff on stage with him, a DJ, as well as some rapper who covered half of Vanilla's lyrics.

The Iceman opened up with some new song that sounded like his attempt at being "hard." He segued from that into "Roll 'Em Up" from his 1994 comeback album, "Mind Blowing."

It seems all of Vanilla's new material features repetitive, boring, mindless choruses that consist of yelling the title of the song over and over and over again.

Vanilla said the crowd Sunday was more "hyper" than the crowd Saturday night. Sure, I bet he told the crowd Saturday night that they were more "hyper" than the crowd in Omaha the night before.

He then said he was gonna take it back to the old school as everyone else left the stage. That meant only one thing.

He broke into the human beatbox classic "Havin' A Roni" from his debut album. The crowd erupted. It was surely the highlight of the show, what little there was of it.

Vanilla and his posse got the crowd to chant "Ice Ice Baby" and then went into a different song. Way to tease us.

He did a song "for all the ladies," so I thought it was going to be the too-funny tune, "I Love You," but instead it was some dumb song with lyrics such as "I want you to ride my pickle like it was a bicycle."

I don't know what it is. I don't know why all the ladies still love Vanilla Ice. Women were flashing parts of their bodies at him that I can't talk about in a family paper such as this. Use your imagination.

When the Iceman broke into "Ice Ice Baby," the entire crowd in the Granada went absolutely insane. It was deafening. And with the opening drum beats, two women from the crowd climbed into the go-go towers and gyrated to the beat. Bizarre.

After that, Vanilla Ice and his crew were gone. A 30-minute set.

That's it. Thirty minutes. Fortunately, they came back on stage for an encore. Ice did some pseudo-dancehall reggae tune with his lame attempt at toasting. The go-go dancers again assumed the position in the towers, and not even 15 minutes later, they were gone again.

I couldn't believe it. Not even a 45-minute set in total. But, then again, most comedians don't perform for that long, so maybe it was normal.

Vanilla knows how to work a crowd. I mean, pretty much all he could say between songs was, "Hell, yeah," again and again. I think he said those two words together about 3,000 times.

I wouldn't go so far as to say the show was good, but at least now I can say, "I saw Vanilla Ice live."

Union Art Gallery displays prize-winning photos in UPC exhibit

TODD PACEY
Kansas State Collegian

Ferris Bueller said, "Life moves pretty fast. If you don't stop and look around, you could miss it."

What he forgot to mention is a photo is a good way to remember it forever. Photography as an art form shows things that would not normally be seen, or puts things in a new perspective.

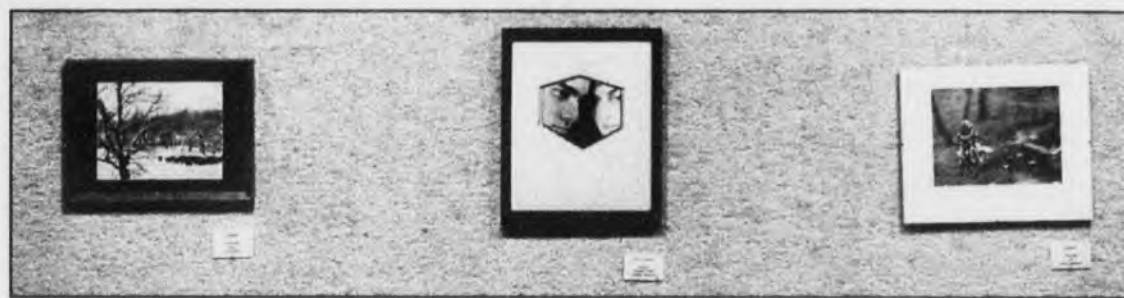

Students, faculty and staff of K-State entered 67 photographs to the Union Program Council's 25th Annual Photography Contest. Twenty-six of these photographs were selected by a panel of judges to appear in the exhibit at the Union Art Gallery.

William Adams, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, had his photo "Lone Pine" selected by judges as the best of show. His photo of a moderate pine in California was a reduction, varying the lightness and darkness of the image.

"The photo was actually from a set which I am doing research on different photo techniques," Adams said.

The exhibit, as a whole, features different photography formats from black and white to color, double exposure and motion blurring. The size restriction was dropped this year, and as a result the entrants had various sizes and shapes for their photos.

Kajsa Stromberg, junior in biological and agricultural engineering, said she would like to pursue photography as at least a hobby. Stromberg, who placed second in the Buildings/Structures category, said she likes to photo-

There were six categories for photo entries. Judges awarded first, second and third places in each of the categories. Josh Galitzer, UPC member and junior in fine arts, said there were also eight photos that the judges felt should be in the exhibit even though they did not place. These photos were given the Judge's Merit.

Alumni center surrounded by questions

In the past two weeks, both Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and university architect, and Dennis Law, dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design and a member of the development committee, said they did not know who originally picked the site for the center.

"When you find out that final decision, I certainly do want to hear it. In all honesty, I don't know. Talk to the folks at the Alumni Association," Carter said.

Carter, as director of planning, reports to Rawson on issues concerning the built environment on campus.

Members of the development committee also expressed confusion.

Law said he thinks there has been a long history of the development committee being used selectively.

"It's an advisory committee," Law said. "I don't have any trouble with that at all. But somebody has to be held responsible for that decision. I don't think the committee should take the place of the decision-makers, but they should influence them. A single individual should not make a decision."

The development committee, which consists of faculty, staff and students representing all nine colleges, has worked in the past two years to create the new master planning document.

The committee also has been refigured to open up the planning process to the campus community at large. The committee has also tried to become more relevant by undertaking a formal recommendation process to have its voice heard in the administration. The committee acts in an advisory manner to Rawson.

The committee also has committed to sponsoring public forums twice a year. A December campus forum — the first to focus on capital improvements and planning — was sparsely attended. The next forum is planned for March 19.

Students struggle to pay for constant fee increases

AMY BICKEL
Kansas State Collegian

Ten years ago, students at K-State taking seven or more hours a semester paid only $655 in fees. Now, 10 years and many bills later, K-State tuition and fees have doubled.

According to the Controller's Office, the average student, taking 14 hours, will pay about $1,168 per semester. With a tuition increase every semester since 1987, more students are working more hours to pay for school and living expenses.

Larry Moeder, director for the Office of Student Financial Assistance, said $65 million in student aid is awarded to students every year, which includes $900,000 in Federal Work Study.

Even with financial aid, some students still have to work to make ends meet.

Steven Sawyer, senior in agribusiness, has been working at Derby Food Center to pay for his college expenses since he came to K-State from Seward County Community College in 1994.

Sawyer works 12 to 16 hours a week as a supervisor. Besides working, he finances his college education with loans. He received more money this year because he recently married. Before that, Sawyer was not receiving money from his parents, and they made too much money for him to receive enough financial aid to cover all of his expenses.

In his first year, Sawyer almost didn't get to finish college.

"I worked 20 to 25 hours a week to pay bills. I also didn't know how to study. My first semester, I went on academic probation," he said.

His second semester wasn't any better. Because of circumstances beyond his control, Sawyer didn't pass a Russian history class. But because it wasn't his fault he failed the class, Sawyer got a second chance.

"John Riley saved my life," Sawyer said.

Riley, who was the assistant director for Academic Programs for the College of Agriculture at the time, made a deal with Sawyer. Sawyer would have to get an A or a B in his summer college algebra class to stay in school.

"That summer, I found out how to work and how to study and how to better prepare myself, and ended up with a B in the class," Sawyer said.

Like Sawyer, 5,321 of the 20,306 students at K-State last semester had on-campus jobs.

According to documents at Human Resource Services, students working on campus earned about $24 million last year. Even more students work off campus.

One of those students with an off-campus job is Latisha Klick, senior in management information systems.

Klick has worked at Wal-Mart for the past two years. While taking 12 hours at K-State, she works 15 to 20 hours a week to pay for expenses financial aid wouldn't cover.

"Because my financial aid doesn't cover living expenses, I have cut back my hours to pay for it," Klick said. "The money I would pay for one class is enough to cover one month's rent."

Students pay $65.60 per credit hour, a $2.50 increase since 1996.

Before coming to K-State, Klick attended Neosho County Community College.

"I received the same amount of financial aid each year, and each year's amount was more than my first year's amount at K-State," Klick said.

She said part of the reason students don't get much financial aid is because of their parents' income.

But she said her parents haven't paid for any of her schooling.

"I feel if parents can't financially support their children, then their children should be eligible to report that so it doesn't affect the amount of financial aid they receive," Klick said.

Even though she must balance her time between working and school, Klick said she was glad she got the chance to come to K-State and get a college education.

"I like K-State because I live with some great people, and at K-State, I'm building a strong foundation to start a career on," she said.

RECALLING K-STATE HISTORY

RUTH ANN WEFALD, RIGHT, IS THE LATEST IN A LONG LINE OF DISTINGUISHED FIRST LADIES AT K-STATE. MICHAELINE CHANCE-REAY, LEFT, INSTRUCTOR OF SECONDARY EDUCATION, IS WRITING A BOOK ABOUT THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS AND CHARACTERISTICS OF K-STATE'S FIRST LADIES.

K-State 1st ladies traditionally serve university, community

AMY EBERT
Kansas State Collegian

The first ladies of K-State each had a role to play in Manhattan and on campus, and they each did something significant of their own while they were here.

Michaeline Chance-Reay, secondary education instructor, is recording the lives of K-State's first ladies in a book she is writing.

She said each one had a unique characteristic or contribution to the university.

"All the women had children and made their families first priority, but they were also active on campus and in the community as well," she said.

Ann Anderson, who was here with her husband from 1873 to 1879, helped some of the female students practice their skills at her home.

"Mrs. Anderson let the girls enrolled in domestic science come to the president's residence and set the table and help prepare formal dinners for her guests, because the school didn't have facilities to allow them to do that then," Chance-Reay said.

Marguerite Nichols taught kindergarten classes during her term from 1899 to 1909.

"Kindergarten was probably a fairly new concept back then," Chance-Reay said.

Besides teaching, Nichols was interested in K-State students. Each year she would be host at a party for the graduating senior class at her home.

"They invited them all over, even though it was probably only 30 or 40 students at that time," Chance-Reay said.

"The Nicholls had a tandem safety bicycle and enjoyed riding it. It must have been unusual to see them riding around campus on it."

Margaret Waters, who was on campus from 1909 to 1917, worked to improve the social aspect of K-State, Chance-Reay said.

"Mrs. Waters got the ban against dancing on campus lifted, which students today might find amusing," Chance-Reay said.

"She also started the KSU Social Club because the faculty was increasing then, and she felt they needed something to get to know each other."

In 1923, Effie Jardine was the first of the first ladies to live in the President's Residence at 100 Wilson Court.

Working to keep the campus beautiful, Mildred Farrell shared her love for gardening with her husband.

"Mrs. Farrell kept a wonderful flower garden at their home and her husband, the president, had his vegetable garden, so they gardened together," Chance-Reay said.

Farrell's time as the first lady is yet to be matched. Despite all the years as such a public figure, she enjoyed the role.

"Mrs. Farrell loved being the first lady. She was really disappointed when her husband retired after serving as the president for 18 years," Chance-Reay said.

Ruth Ann Wefald said there is a common link in the lives of all the K-State first ladies.

"It is a very public life as a first lady. People that have been in these positions must enjoy working with people because that is our job."

Book to recognize efforts of several K-State 1st ladies

AMY EBERT
Kansas State Collegian

All the first ladies of K-State contributed to the campus or the community in one way or another. One K-State instructor is writing a book about those contributions.

Michaeline Chance-Reay, secondary education instructor, is doing research on each of the first ladies and their roles while at K-State. She said each of them did something interesting or worthwhile.

"All of them played many roles on campus and contributed a lot, like Ruth Ann Wefald's work on the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum. Not all the contributions were that stupendous, but they all had a significant role," Chance-Reay said.

Chance-Reay is a member of the K-State

Social Club, and while she was serving as the program committee chair, she learned of Wefald's role in the museum.

"After studying Ruth Ann's work, I thought it would be interesting to know more about the other first ladies, so I decided to pursue the idea, and now I am writing a book," she said.

Wefald said she is honored that someone is taking the time to research and write a book about K-State's first ladies.

"I think the book is an interesting undertaking. Having studied history myself, I think it's a great way to see the changing of the times," Wefald said. "I think the roles of women are changing, and you can see those changes through each of their lives. But you can also see many constants as well."

Chance-Reay began her research by locating descendants of the former first ladies. She has found descendants of all the families, except the Nicholls family.

Some families are helping Chance-Reay by giving pictures, letters and information.

"The descendants are really willing to share stories about their ancestors and offer the information they have. For instance, Ann Anderson's great-grandson sent me a whole box of information to copy and return, such as a family tree, letters and family obituaries," she said.

Since starting the project in fall 1996, Chance-Reay said she has realized the first ladies deserve more recognition than they get.

"It would be nice to have a permanent display of the first ladies and their families to humanize the entrance of the library," she said.

Past leaders review term of Riemann

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

In less than three weeks, K-State will have a new student body president.

In the days ahead, students will focus on the presidential candidates for the 1998-99 year.

But the current student body president's role is not quite over. Tim Riemann still has decisions to make this semester.

Some students and former student body presidents say Riemann hasn't lived up to his job description throughout most of his term.

The student body president is elected to represent and be a voice for the student body. But Riemann has not issued a definite opinion on the possibility of a student fee to fund Hale Library. Last semester, he would not speak for or against a fee to fund the KSU Stadium expansion.

Jeff Peterson, who served two terms as student body president from 1994-96, said the president should be the students' voice on any issue.

"My style, which may have gotten me in trou-

Bill to review SGA election expenditures

KELLEE MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

Limitations on campaign expenditures during K-State's Student Governing Association elections could be eliminated through a bill that Patrick Carney, arts and sciences student senator, introduced at Student Senate on Thursday.

The expenditure limits defined in SGA's election regulations limit student body presidential tickets to $815 for each campaign. Student Senate and college council candidates may spend only $50. Candidates for Union Governing Board, Fine Arts Council and the Board of Student Publications may spend $125.

But some, including Carney, believe a 1976 United States Supreme Court decision makes the spending limits unconstitutional.

In the Buckley vs. Valeo decision, justices wrote that an individual's freedom of expression cannot be restricted in a political arena while running for an office. The use of money during campaigning was found to be absolutely necessary, and restricting campaign expenditures is a violation of the First Amendment freedom of speech.

Campus police might expand jurisdiction beyond university if legislation passes

TOPEKA — A bill that would expand the jurisdiction of state university police officers has gone to Gov. Bill Graves.

The bill would permit police departments on state university campuses to enter into agreements with local law enforcement agencies so that campus officers could exercise their power off campus.

The Senate approved the bill last year. House members adopted amendments before approving it this year. The Senate voted 28-12 Tuesday to accept the House's amendments.

In other legislative news, a proposal to require new drivers to undergo 20 hours of supervised driving is so "watered down" from its original version that Sen. Ben Vidricksen plans to ask it be brought back to committee.

Vidricksen, R-Salina, the chairman of the Senate Transportation and Tourism Committee, said by asking the bill to be returned to committee, where it will die, he could avoid a "big fight" on the Senate floor. He said Senate discussion could have been a "catastrophe."

In its original form, the bill would have raised the age for an unrestricted license to 17 and required 50 hours of supervised driving before a restricted license would be issued. The American Automobile Association helped write the bill. But the AAA and other backers dropped their support after the bill was amended numerous times.

Wichita superintendent to step down after 7-month battle with school board

WICHITA — Larry Vaughn, superintendent of the Wichita school district, will come to work for the last time March 6, ending a seven-month battle with a school board that has been less than receptive to his policies.

After a 40-minute, closed-door meeting, the Wichita school board voted 4-1 Monday night to accept an offer from Vaughn to have his contract bought out. The Wichita School District is the largest in the state.

"I used to believe when I was a little girl that adults could work together ... and then I found out you can't do that all the time," said board president Jean Schodorf, the only person to vote against buying out Vaughn's contract.

Vaughn left the meeting before the announcement was made.

Schodorf estimates that Monday's action will cost the district $200,000, money that has not been budgeted. It will be used to pay off Vaughn's contract, conduct a search for a new superintendent and pay an interim superintendent.

Vaughn will remain a paid employee of the district until June 30, collecting his $112,000 a year salary until then. On June 30, he will receive a lump sum payment of $66,000 for the final year of the contract. The amount of the buyout was the final sticking point between the two sides.

According to the agreement, both sides can only say that Vaughn and the board "have a difference in philosophy and we mutually agree to end our working arrangement on an amicable basis."

Tornado cleanup in Florida increases death toll to 39; some remain missing

KISSIMMEE, Fla. — Rescuers with dogs searched the piney woods near a tornado-devastated campground Tuesday for possible victims of a swarm of tornadoes that strafed central Florida. The death toll was 39.

Three people were missing late Tuesday, one from the Ponderosa Park Campground. Three others listed as missing from the campground were found alive at a hospital.

As hope of finding more survivors faded, searchers changed their commands to the search dogs. Instead of searching for survivors, the dogs were ordered to look for bodies hidden in the underbrush.

"There's nothing in there," said Lt. Mark Bogush of the Tampa Fire-Rescue Canine Unit. "They don't want to shut that door of hope, but this is basically a cleanup."

Rescuers picked through the mass of twisted metal, shattered glass and splintered lumber the day after six to 10 El Niño-driven twisters tore through central Florida from the Gulf of Mexico, destroying more than 900 homes and businesses.

Monday's tornadoes, packing 260 mph winds, were the state's deadliest on record, killing more than Hurricane Andrew in 1992, which left 32 people dead in Florida, Louisiana and the Bahamas.

Divers combing the creek behind a home in Sanford found the body of 21-year-old Penny Louise Hall. Also killed when the twisters hit their house were her parents, Debra and Edward Hall, and her fiancé, 23-year-old Kevin Taylor.

Only her 5-year-old daughter, Ashley, survived. She was hospitalized with serious injuries.

Donations began pouring in as relief organizations estimated that more than $300,000 will be needed to shelter, feed and clothe displaced families. President Clinton declared the region a disaster, clearing the way for federal aid, and the Red Cross provided meals. Clinton also promised to survey the destruction today.

Rescue workers search after El Niño ravages California causing 5 deaths

SANTA MARIA, Calif. — Two highway patrol officers on their way to help a disabled motorist were killed Tuesday when their car was pitched into a gushing river swollen by a savage El Niño storm that killed five others and caused mudslides and tornadoes.

The two-day storm, the worst from El Niño this winter, blew out of the water-logged state just hours after the officers and at least three other drivers were sucked into the muddy river.

Two men were rescued by helicopter, but divers searched for other victims in the Cuyama River near Santa Maria, about 200 miles north of Los Angeles after part of Highway 166 gave way.

The patrol car carrying California Highway Patrol Officers Rick Stovall, 39, and Britt Irvine, 40, was upside down, buried under silt, mud and debris. Crews with cranes attempted to lift it from the river, which washed out 100 yards of the rural highway.

Elsewhere in California, two college students were killed when a tree fell on cars in the Los Angeles suburb of Claremont; a man died in a mudslide in Orange County; one person died in a pileup on a fog-shrouded and flooded highway in the San Joaquin Valley; and one was dead and four missing in a car that washed away in Tijuana, Mexico.

In Northern California, waves chewed into a cliff beneath eight precariously perched homes in Pacifica south of San Francisco, and residents remained barred from 500 homes around Clear Lake north of Santa Rosa as the lake was at its highest level since 1909.

A wall of mud plowed down Laguna Beach Canyon Road in Orange County about 12:30 a.m., tossing about residents as they scrambled from their homes, said police Sgt. Bob Rahaeuser.

At daybreak, rescue workers unearthed the body of Glenn Flook, 25, outside one of those homes. Flook had sought refuge at the home from his flood-damaged house.

Throughout California, roads were closed by mudslides and sinkholes.

Two tornadoes — almost unheard-of in Southern California — touched down overnight. The twisters ripped up storage sheds and carport awnings and knocked down trees and fences.

No injuries were reported.

The storm swept ashore early Monday. It was the strongest — and apparently the last — in a series of rigorous weather systems that have punished the state since Feb. 1, causing more than $475 million in damage statewide this season and prompting 35 of 58 counties to declare states of emergency.

RANDALL BEAGEL, MANHATTAN, WELDS BEAMS ONTO COLUMNS FOR REINFORCEMENT TUESDAY AFTERNOON AT THE CITY HALL BUILDING ON POYNITZ AVENUE. THE CONSTRUCTION IS PART OF A 21,000 SQUARE-FOOT ADDITION.

City Hall improvement plan progresses

► MANHATTAN CITY COMMISSION AIMS TO RENOVATE CITY OFFICES; PROJECT SHOULD BE COMPLETED BY '99, MANHATTAN MAYOR SAYS.

MARY BOSCO
Kansas State Collegian

Construction and renovations to Manhattan City Hall are ahead of schedule and should be finished by 1999, Mayor Bruce Snead said.

"Progress has been good," he said. Manhattan's City Commission decided it was time to reconstruct City Hall, which originally housed a jail and police department when it was constructed in 1955.

"The police department and city jail were no longer needed," Snead said. "They didn't fit with the current needs of the facility."

The $4,140,600 construction project is designed to improve the accessibility for all of City Hall and make adequate space for city departments.

"Everything except the main part of the gymnasium is currently under construction, and the seating in the gym will also be replaced," Snead said.

When finished, the 21,000-square-foot addition will include a large commission meeting room with a lobby, a private meeting area, new restroom facilities, a service lobby and two additional floors of office space for all city departments.

City offices have been relocated temporarily to Manhattan Town Center, Fire Station Headquarters and the Wastewater Treatment Plant.

City Manager Gary Greer said the city is trying to make the relocation as efficient as possible.

"We have made the best out of the relocation," Greer said. "We have invested in technology, so we have a network server, which draws us closer and improves communication among the three different locations."

Greer said that while moving city offices out of the building temporarily is an inconvenience, the improvements to the building are worth the wait.

"City Hall was really inadequate, so everyone is being really patient about moving back in," Greer said. "Most importantly, we are going to be able to serve the citizens of Manhattan more effectively and efficiently."

"MOST IMPORTANTLY, WE ARE GOING TO BE ABLE TO SERVE THE CITIZENS OF MANHATTAN MORE EFFICIENTLY AND EFFECTIVELY."

Campus safety leads requests

MATT KREPS
Kansas State Collegian

The City/University Tax Fund Committee presented seven projects totaling $346,000 to the Manhattan City Commission on Tuesday for preliminary discussion.

The projects include pedestrian safety on North Manhattan Avenue, Anderson Avenue reconstruction, campus lighting and safety, bicycle improvements, the University Gardens project, a pilot recycling project and a contingency fund.

The funds used for the projects stem from when the city annexed the university in July 1994. One percent of all sales taxes and franchise fees collected on campus are redistributed to fund projects benefiting both groups.

Projected revenue from 1998 is more than $445,000. About 25 percent will stay in the city's budget to replace revenue from services, such as fire service, lost in the annexation.

The committee's recommendations include $60,000 for the city to improve pedestrian safety along North Manhattan Avenue. The project will specifically focus on the intersection of Manhattan Avenue and Thurston Street.

Mark Taussig, university architect, said the project still needs planning, but safety concerns prompted the decision.

"We don't know exactly what is entailed there," he said.

The city will also receive $122,000 for the Anderson Avenue expansion.

Tom Rawson, K-State vice president for administration and finance, said the committee suggested the $122,000 in 1999 be followed by $123,000 in 2000.

The committee recommended budgeting $30,000 for campus lighting and safety. The money will pay for lighting improvements at 10 sites around the campus. The university will administer the project, and the university will own and operate the lighting equipment.

The sites include three crosswalks on Denison Avenue between Hunting Avenue and Claflin Road, crosswalks between Ackert and Durland halls and between Umberger Hall and the parking lot north of Cardwell Hall. Crosswalks on 17th Street between the K-State Student Union and Ahearn Field House, between Holton and Bluemont halls, on Lovers Lane between Justin Hall and the President's Residence, and the two crosswalks between Shellenberger and King halls are also included.

Taussig indicated the lights were part of an overall plan to improve campus safety using city/university funds.

"We've lighted sidewalks on campus. We've added emergency telephones. We've added cameras, and now we're lighting crosswalks," he said.

Improvements in bicycle parking and paths are also included. The committee recommended $25,000 to support these improvements brought on by increasing bicycle traffic on campus, Taussig said.

The University Gardens Project will also receive $35,000 for the construction of a volunteer center within the visitors center. The total cost of the ongoing project is estimated at $10 million and will be funded mostly through private donations.

The committee focused the bulk of its presentation on the $64,000 for a pilot recycling program. The program would incorporate existing recycling efforts and increase recycling participation in a four-year period, Rawson said.

The university hopes to reduce landfill fees and even generate enough money to pay for expenses associated with collection and hiring student employees to collect the materials from sites both on campus and in the community.

"The fact of the matter is if we're going to have a recycling program, we have to be prompt in emptying the containers," Rawson said.

OURview

Our View, an editorial

selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other staff members. Our View is the Collegian's official opinion.

Riemann fails to demonstrate leadership, advocacy

A promise for change and leadership went unanswered despite the convincing campaign platform that placed Tim Riemann and Jennafer Neufeld in office.

Last March, the editorial board of the Collegian endorsed this ticket for student body president and vice president.

But if Riemann has heard the concerns of the student body during his tenure, he has not acted. If he saw opportunities to act and use his position for the improvement of this campus, he let them go unexplored.

If he cared about issues and had opinions, we never heard them.

His term showed promise. He was impressively vocal about an honor code for student senators and continued to foster support until it passed. He followed through on advocating a plus grading system, although a plebiscite vote failed to gain student body support.

Riemann's most prominent stance has been one of non-action and no comment. He's been a fence-straddler on issues of incredible importance to the focus and future of this campus.

As president of the student body, the entire university is his realm. By virtue of being elected, he's involved in campus issues. A largely apathetic student body has no reason to get involved when even the president refuses to take a stand.

The president should be the student voice on any issue and his repeated refusal to comment on particular situations perpetuates suspicion and the second-guessing of his motives.

On important issues such as the creation of a privilege fee for the library and student contributions in a proposed stadium expansion, Riemann expressed sympathy. He conceded points and qualified his involvement but never took a stand.

The introduction of his opinions in public would have promoted further discussion.

Publicly, Riemann said it would be too risky to comment on the Board of Student Publications' decision to terminate its director's position because he was not involved.

However, he didn't express any concerns about a conflict of interest when he passed around a letter calling for the special board meeting where Ron Johnson was dismissed.

Earlier this semester, he said he and Neufeld were proud of their work in making the Course Information Proposal a reality. However, the success of the Course Information Proposal is really due to the hard work of former student body president Chris Hansen and Academic Affairs Chair Rhett Trujillo.

Part of leadership is being accountable and answering direct questions with clarity and commitment. Generating upbeat, non-controversial public relations answers will only allow elected officials to skirt real issues and avoid being a part of the solution.

A president in touch with the concerns and opinions of his constituents has a responsibility to represent them with energy and commitment.

Former student body presidents Ed Skoog and Jeff Peterson will be remembered for their leadership on issues they cared about, no matter how unpopular, and the courage to take a stand.

Riemann, like all presidents immortalized in the Hale Library plaque, has a legacy. Unlike quieter, less issue-oriented terms, Riemann had significant opportunities to make a difference and fulfill his campaign promises to bring about leadership with a vision.

Riemann's term is essentially over. We hope his greatest accomplishments will be as a catalyst for future presidential candidates will define and follow through on their platforms and reinforce a commitment for positive change.

ENGINEERS need historical perspective

Those who don't know history are doomed to repeat it, so the saying goes.

And so it also goes with the profession of engineering. From the student's beginning in elementary college science courses to the middle-aged practitioner's design review, the history of this noble profession is rarely discussed.

Ask engineering students their favorite 20th-century engineer, and you're likely to see eyes glaze over. Engineers, although always on the so-called cutting edge of the latest technologies and innovative design strategies, are out of touch with their own field's history.

Not only is history noticeably not a significant part of their education, it isn't even something they care about greatly once out of school. The one history class the K-State architectural engineering degree requires emphasizes the work of architects with some degree of time spent on historical construction techniques.

There's nothing wrong with knowing architectural history. Engineers, particularly building engineers, need to understand the role architecture has played in society and the contexts of different modes of building. However, it's even more important for them to understand their own legacy.

Perhaps this lack of appreciation stems from the newness the modern profession seems to have. The engineer, as we know it today, did not exist until the 18th century with the creation of "civil" engineers. These early engineers came about in response to the industrial revolution, when new building techniques based on scientific methods became too specialized for architects.

Engineering, in abstract terms, has existed since creation. Perhaps the earliest example of an engineering golden age is the Roman city — a nexus of highways, plumbing, sewers and monumental buildings.

It's true many architects before the 19th century were more "master builders" — a combination of engineer and architect. It's also true that engineers since the 19th century have been singular voices in the construction industry. The great models of 20th-century construction are fundamentally grounded in engineering: the skyscraper, the transportation system, the hydroelectric dam and the megastucture (mall, convention center, factory).

One could easily argue the great examples of this century's architecture depend in large part on the simplicity of the structural solution. Advances in the design of steel structures yielded New York's Seagram's Building. Engineering is responsible for the cantilever at Fallingwater. The Astrodome is a marvel of structural roof design.

The popular architectural press, such as newspapers, have largely ignored the contributions of engineers. However, the professional journals do an excellent job of reporting contemporary projects, although engineering journals tend toward the very dry and poorly written side of journalism. Museums, even the Museum of National History at the Smithsonian Institution, push engineering aside in favor of the showier sciences.

And so people, including engineers, are at a loss for good analysis of engineering.

Unlike architecture, where even a lay person can understand and appreciate the work of at least one great architect, engineering is almost unknown. OK, there's Gustave Eiffel. That's too easy. His work, however, is known only because it's part of two national monuments, the tower of his name and the Statue of Liberty.

There are some rare examples of accessible studies of engineering as a profession, aside from such chain-store fodder as big color books of bridges.

The most eloquent collection of essays on the subject of engineers' lack of self-awareness was made by Samuel Florman's 1976 "The Existential Pleasures of Engineering." This book should be required reading for all engineers — perhaps even a specific class studying Florman's career would be in order.

Florman celebrates the engineer's spirit, rails against the critics of 20th-century technology, celebrates the creation of objects throughout history and argues for passion in engineering.

Florman writes, "Analysis, rationality, materialism, and practical creativity do not preclude emotional fulfillment; they are pathways to such fulfillment. They do not 'reduce' experience, as is so often claimed; they expand it. Engineering is superficial only to those who view it superficially."

He also writes, "The main goal has always been to understand the stuff of the universe, to consider problems based on human needs (or desires), to propose solutions, to test and select the best solution, and to follow through to a finished product. Existential delight has been the reward every step of the way — for the observer, the user, and particularly for the doer."

This existential pleasure, at the center of the engineer's being, has not been universally found since Florman wrote these brilliant insights. The contemporary engineer, especially the student, who knows not of history is less inclined to believe Florman than ever before.

In a collegiate world that is increasingly dominated by résumés, pure practical concerns, job-hunting and calculated career moves, where is the passionate philosophy, the excitement of practice and the very soul that Florman has so easily come to know?

Need reasons to make you happy? Try these on for size. C'mon get happy

With so much bad news in the news these days, I wouldn't be surprised if everybody were depressed. I mean, day in and day out, we get a close look at the latest scandal, conflict or disaster, from the president's alleged infidelity to K-State athletes throwin' down or getting busted. Lately people have been watching and reading with their eyebrows raised, wondering if Saddam's gonna snap, if Bill's gonna crack or if Michael really did scrap.

On a global, national and campus level, we are faced with news event after news event, and lately they all just seem to be filled to the brim with bad vibes. Now, I realize that coverage of such events is necessary. I'd be in the wrong business if I thought otherwise. But I think the people need a pick-me-up. Some rays of sunshine, if you will. So I did some thinking and came up with a list of things that make me happy. I hope some of you can identify.

The world's still spinning. Something we take for granted, but important nonetheless.

Spring break is only a month away. Whether you're going south for the sun, west for the slopes or crazy because you're still here, any time off school is time well spent.

There aren't any serial killers on the loose in Manhattan. That one's always a plus.

The Club Karrington fire didn't burn my house down. OK, that's a given. But I'm still happy about it.

The other bars in Aggieville are still open. This one's self-explanatory.

My school mascot isn't some stupid, fictional bird that can't even fly. Boy, wouldn't you be depressed if yours were?

Letterman is funny again. He sputtered for a while, but the boy is back.

No matter how bad today is, tomorrow isn't far away.

I think it's good to keep things like this in mind. People say we live in a cold, cruel world full of heartbreak and despair. I say the people who think that don't take enough time out to enjoy the warm, happy things. Beauty is in the eye of the beholder. The same goes for happiness.

Alumni center design needs additional input

Editor,

The recent events surrounding the clandestine design and presentation of "our" new alumni center might be — at best — disappointing, but by no means surprising to anyone on this campus. As a fifth-year architecture student, participant in one of the alumni center focus groups and future alumna of this university, my first response was that of disgust toward both the architect and the administration of this university and the alumni center.

I question an architect who shows such little pride in his work and profession that he literally hides his building design from a group of his peers and passes up the opportunity to further educate students and future architects about the entirety of the building design process.

I question the leaders of our KSU Alumni Association who blatantly lied about the progress of the design for a building that will become a part of our campus and maintain a part of it for the next 100 years.

Maybe I am an idealist, but since when is honesty no longer the best policy? Amy Button Renz, is it so difficult to explain that design schematics and renderings with floating K-State balloons will be disclosed at Saturday's board meeting and not before?

Finally, I have and will always continue to question an administration that has little, if any, regard for the spaces and environments that its Campus Development Committee or Vice President for Administration and Finance Tom Rawson develops and "maintains." I must wonder if Rawson has ever had to spend hours drawing in a room without natural light, plenty of ants, and bats overhead. Maybe Rawson has spent hours practicing, learning or playing a musical instrument without knowing if it is day or night because the back half, or educational section, of McCain Auditorium was designed, built and developed without windows. Perchance Rawson has recently toured Bluemont Hall. It also seems to mysteriously lack windows. So much for a humane learning environment.

I can honestly say to Rawson, Renz, the Alumni Association and the student body that the future alumni center siting, design and blatant disregard for student and faculty input is not surprising; it is simply disappointing.

Student challenges site, design of center

Editor,

I must admit my interest in the design and location of the new alumni center has been small. However, when I finally saw a few of the details behind the new building, I was curiously trying to understand how the location and design were decided upon.

Initially, I thought the alumni association building is and was to be "centrally located." The very edge of the southern tip of campus is not exactly centrally located. If that is really not an issue, why not put the new building next to or very near to the two athletic stadiums? There is already an incredible amount of parking located there, access to and from the lots is very easy and there seems to be plenty of open land. Why must we give up any more open space already being taken by the city for the Anderson Avenue expansion?

Another issue I would like to raise is the overall design of the building. I thought it was university policy to try and incorporate new buildings to accent and improve the overall appearance of the campus.

I cannot recognize any distinct architectural features from the two printed images in the Collegian that would tie to any other building anywhere on campus. In fact, if the images had not been labeled, I would have thought them to be retirement community villas. Is the campus now in the business of creating future homes for elderly K-Staters?

Absolutely no disrespect to the architects, alumni or anyone else involved in any decision processes is meant, but I beg of you to please re-evaluate several of the design processes. If the location must be where it is planned, then at the very least please go back to the drawing board before a building is constructed that will continually be the butt of many jokes to come.

Cal-Fullerton student charged in hoops point-shaving scandal

FULLERTON, Calif. — A Cal State Fullerton student arrested on suspicion of trying to bribe a member of the school's basketball team into throwing a game last week was formally charged Tuesday.

Jack Oh of La Verne, Calif., was charged with one felony count of point shaving a day after being arrested and will be arraigned today in Central Court in nearby Santa Ana, according to Sgt. Dave Stanko said.

Oh was being held in lieu of $25,000 bail at the Fullerton jail, Stanko said.

Oh, 21, allegedly approached a member of the basketball team who wasn't identified and offered him $1,000 to throw Fullerton's home game against Pacific past Thursday night, Stanko said.

Pacific, which leads the Big West Conference and has won its last 12 games, was a 10-point favorite against Fullerton and beat the Titans 71-57.

Stanko said Oh told the player he would be paid $100 for each missed free throw and the player could make as much as $75,000 the rest of the season.

Oh told the player to think about it and call him, Stanko said. The player immediately went to Fullerton officials, and authorities arranged to have the player call Oh and ask for details while the conversation was taped.

During the call, Oh claimed he planned to wager up to $11,000 per game and offered the same deal to other interested players, Stanko said.

The player was directed by police to meet Oh and accept a payoff, but Oh failed to keep the appointment.

However, Stanko said the taped conversation was sufficient evidence to make an arrest.

"Our people responded properly," Cal State Fullerton spokesman Mel Franks said Tuesday. "The police did their job, and now it's in the hands of the judicial system. We have no further comment."

Arnie Wexler, an expert on the subject of compulsive gambling issues, said he believes colleges "have had their heads in the sand on this issue."

"This is not something that's isolated to Cal State Fullerton or Arizona State or Boston College or anywhere else in the country," Wexler said from Pompano Beach, Fla. "When I talked about this three years ago at the NCAA Forum, all the media people snickered. Since then, we've had four or five colleges blow up."

Future hall-of-famer Allen released from jury duty service

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. — Kansas City Chiefs running back Marcus Allen was released from jury duty Monday so the court could focus on the case — not the star in the jury box.

Allen took a 1 a.m. flight from his winter home in California on Monday and drew a frenzy of autograph seekers and Chiefs fans as he walked through the Jackson County Courthouse in Independence.

Allen didn't plan to stay. He asked Circuit Judge Jack E. Gant to be excused because of obligations in California, and Gant agreed, but for a better reason.

"No one would have paid attention to what was being said in court" if Allen was sitting on the jury, Gant said.

Even judges can't resist the excitement a football hero like Allen creates, as Gant proved. Before the running back left, the judge got autographs for himself and his two grandsons.

SEC reprimands Gator player, suspends Gamecock for elbow

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — BJ McKie, South Carolina's leading scorer, was suspended for a half-game Tuesday by the Southeastern Conference because of "intentional and flagrant unsportsmanlike conduct" last weekend against Florida.

Florida's Brent Wright was reprimanded by SEC commissioner Roy Kramer for unsportsmanlike conduct after the end of Saturday's game.

McKie, averaging 18.4 points per game, was forced to sit out the first half of Tuesday night's game against Georgia.

McKie was called for a foul when his elbow struck Wright during the Gamecocks' 79-74 victory. Wright and McKie also exchanged words at the end of the game while others exchanged handshakes.

NFL, players union argue case of Minnesota running back

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Minnesota Vikings running back Robert Smith should be given the freedom to test the free-agent market, the NFL Players Association argued at a hearing.

The NFL, however, claimed Smith is the Vikings' franchise player.

Special master Jack Friedenthal, the dean of the George Washington University Law School, had a two-hour hearing Monday to determine whether to overturn the franchise designations placed on Smith and Buffalo nose tackle Ted Washington, rendering them free agents.

Friedenthal is not expected to rule on Smith's case until today at the earliest.

The NFLPA believes the franchise designation should be kept by Vikings guard Randall McDaniel, who had the designation in 1997.

The NFLPA and Vikings disagree on whether McDaniel received an extension or renegotiated his entire contract last summer.

"It's an argument about the terms used in the collective bargaining agreement," said Richard Berthelsen, general counsel for the NFL Players Association. "It's the difference between the word 'renegotiate' and 'extend.'"

Baseball team ready to take on Creighton

JEREMY KELLEY
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State baseball team will use its last preseason home game and the remaining days after it to prepare for its conference opener against Missouri on Friday.

K-State Coach Mike Clark said the main thing he wants the Wildcats to accomplish the rest of the week is to get some batting practice outside.

"As inexperienced as we are, we just need a lot of batting practice outside," he said. "The weather has put a damper on our practice time, and this week we just want to get some repetitions in."

The Cats (4-5) are coming off two losses in Louisiana and will face a Creighton team that improved its record to 3-2 with two wins at Air Force in Colorado last weekend.

The Bluejays are led by first baseman Kevin Frederick, who is batting .450 through nine games. K-State has won the past two meetings between the ballclubs.

Clark said his squad struggled in Louisiana with breaking-ball pitches and wanted to improve this week.

"I thought we had some trouble particularly with the breaking pitch," he said. "The only way you can work on that is go out and hit and take a lot of batting practice and get into a good routine."

The Cats have been plagued by bad weather. Their final game in Louisiana, scheduled for Sunday, was canceled because of rain, a game Clark wished he could have gotten back.

"When you schedule games in Louisiana and Arizona, that's going to happen," Clark said. "That's just part of baseball, and that's why we over-schedule a little bit."

Clark said he was pleased with the progress of his team so far and said the Cats just need to concentrate on a few areas before getting ready for conference play.

The Cats are batting .297 and have posted an on-base percentage of .404. Through nine games, the defense has committed 19 errors, but Clark said most of those were mental mistakes.

"The defense, and even our pitching, and the things which we have to have in order to succeed are there right now," he said. "We just have to get better in practice because we have competed good in games."

"Once we get outside and get into a routine, every facet of our game will get better."

Wildcat teams to hoop it up against Aggies

► MEN'S LAST HOME GAME COMES AGAINST TEXAS A&M.

STAFF REPORTS
Kansas State Collegian

Texas A&M might be winless in the Big 12, but that doesn't make Coach Tom Asbury feel any better about tonight's game in Bramlage Coliseum.

"I don't want to be the team that gets beat by these guys," Asbury said. "They're not that bad. I've watched a couple of their games. It was a fluke that they lost."

The Aggies played Colorado and Texas to one point at home and lost to Texas Tech at home Saturday by three points. But A&M hasn't won a road game — conference or non-conference — all season.

A&M's Shanne Jones is averaging 19.1 points and 7.6 rebounds in conference games. He is the only Aggie to post a scoring average in double figures, but he is sixth in the Big 12 in scoring.

The Aggies don't have the depth the Cats are fortunate to have this season, and Asbury said he would rely on that tonight.

"We hope our depth will be a factor," he said. "They have a horrible record, but they've played tough. They've had some injuries and lost a lot of close games."

The playing status of the Cats' leading scorer, Manny Dies, who was arrested early Sunday morning on four charges, was unknown at press time. Dies has been practicing this week.

If he is benched, he will be the second Cat to be out in a week. Starting point guard Duane Davis learned he'd be out for the season last week after injuring an ankle in the Feb. 14 game against Kansas.

Asbury said he would settle on a starting lineup sometime Tuesday and hoped not to let the incident make the team lose focus on the task at hand.

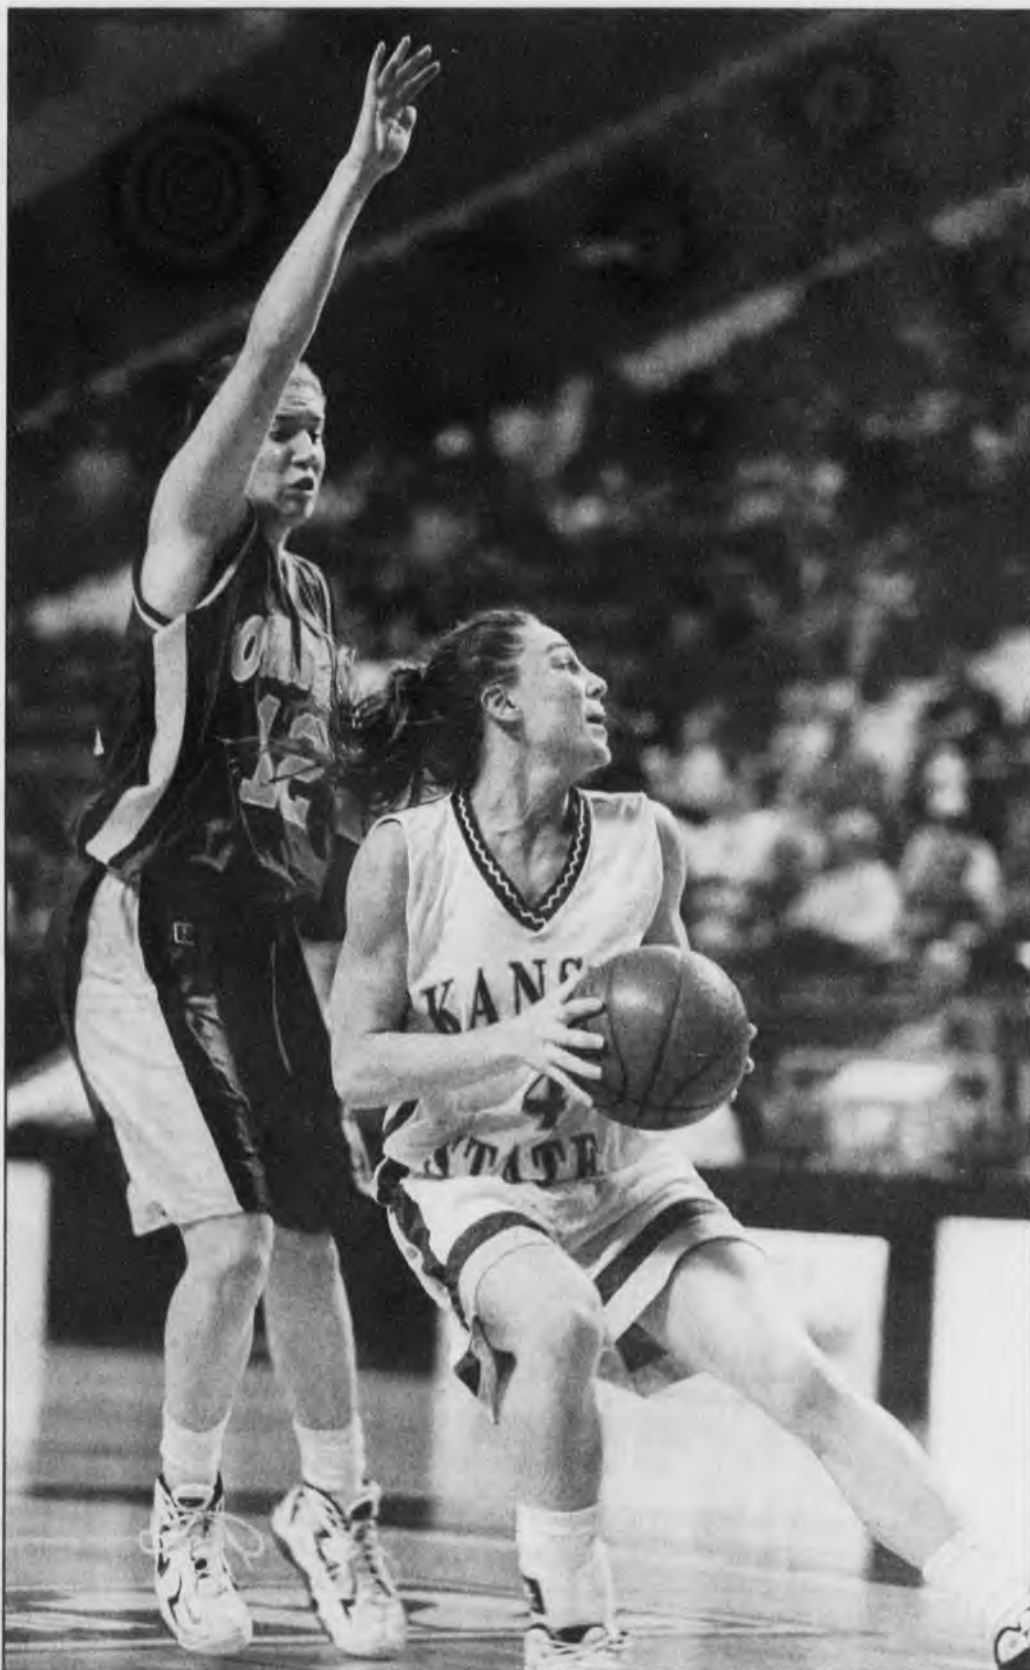

"Hopefully, we'll be prepared," he said. "I think kids are more resilient about these things than coaches are. I think they'll bounce back faster than we do."

Two Cat seniors — Marcus McCollough and Aaron Swartzendruber — play their final game in Bramlage tonight, adding to the emotion of the game.

"It will be an emotional night," Asbury said. "They both have had different but pronounced influences on the program. I hope they both go out in style."

The sense of urgency to win is hanging heavily on the team as well. Asbury said it will now be necessary to win some games in the Big 12 Tournament to continue on to the NCAA Tournament.

"We need every win we can get our hands on," Asbury said. "We have to win more games, and we have to do something in the tournament now. We've fallen off the bubble, and we need wins to get back on."

► WOMEN TRY FOR 5TH BIG 12 WIN TONIGHT IN COLLEGE STATION.

SUN DEE MILLS
Kansas State Collegian

Senior Wildcat guard Brit Jacobson remembered a game against a Lone Star State team last season as one of her most memorable — but not the team the Cats will face tonight.

"I'd have to say the game that stands out in my mind is the Texas win at home last year," Jacobson said. "Coach (Deb) Patterson stepped in and helped us earn more respect than we had."

The defeat of then-No. 12 Texas was monumental for the program, and the Cats went on to knock off five more ranked teams by the end of the Big 12 Tournament.

Defeating Lone Star State school Texas A&M at home (7-17 overall, 3-11 in the Big 12), might be as monumental a game if the Cats (10-14, 4-10 in the conference) can pull it off — they have yet to win a Big 12 game on the road this season.

"Texas A&M is hot right now," Patterson said. "They played Texas Tech to 12 points in Lubbock last week."

No. 5 Texas Tech will be the Cats' final home game Saturday, but the Cats have no time to plan for what could be the toughest game of the year. The team must concentrate on playing good basketball in College Station, Patterson said.

"We've been having concentration errors, mental errors, bobbling the ball, not making layups and not setting good screens," Patterson said. "Our focus should be on the fundamentals of the game."

The Aggies' three conference wins include Missouri and two teams the Cats have recently dropped games to — Oklahoma and Texas. Forward Prissy Sharpe came off the bench at Texas Tech to score 15 points and grab nine rebounds.

"A&M is playing to the level of their ability right now," Patterson said. "For us not having played quality basketball lately, where A&M has played well, presents a big challenge for us."

Excluding a home win over Missouri Feb. 15, the Cats have lost the past three games by an average of 26 points.

After losing 80-50 to Iowa State on Feb. 18, the Cats took to the road and lost to Oklahoma State by 31 points, something Patterson said she didn't expect.

"I'm surprised we didn't come back against Oklahoma State better," she said. "It's not like this team to come back from a big loss and not respond."

But winning and losing at this point in the season isn't as important to some players as how the team plays as a whole, Jacobson said.

"If I can come off the court and say, 'I had a good game, I did what I was supposed to do and the team did what it was supposed to do,' then I'll feel good," she said.

To an extent, Patterson said she agreed.

"I refuse to think this is the level that we should be playing at," she said. "We don't have to end the season with this feeling, and we have an opportunity to answer it at A&M."

Good-guy McCollough set to take final curtain call in Bramlage

Marcus McCollough is not an actor. He's a basketball player. And a darn good one at that. He has heart, a good jumpshot and has dealt with a horrible on-court dilemma all season.

While the K-State basketball program copes with another off-court tragedy surrounding one of its stars and Coach Tom Asbury directs his team through a seemingly never-ending saga of a basketball season, McCollough takes center stage tonight.

He will star in a personal success story that has been buried beneath ashes of off-court incidents during a majority of his final season.

He will lace his Nikes and celebrate his 25th game in Division I basketball, concluding his bittersweet drama with a final home appearance in Bramlage Coliseum.

McCollough knows he will play tonight. He's played in 24 career games at K-State and missed 25. He wasn't predicted to play last season, but he renounced his redshirt 13 games into the season.

He wanted to play. He wasn't expected to finish this season. But he's still going strong. He's going to play. Mark my word. He's going to start.

You remember the story. McCollough averaged nearly nine points after playing in five of his team's first seven games this season.

McCollough played against Coastal Carolina on Dec. 6. A day later, McCollough and teammate Chris Griffin were traveling home with two girls from a heavy day of Christmas shopping in Topeka. One of the girls, the driver, was by the intersection of Kansas Highway 177 and Interstate 70 when their car was struck by another vehicle. McCollough heard a loud crack in his neck. Nothing would be the same again.

McCollough sat near the end of the bench on Dec. 14 when his team played University of Arkansas-Little Rock. He was dressed in his jersey and warm-ups, and a white brace was around his neck with a metal rod jutting down to his padded chest.

What you never knew was the pain McCollough felt. Not from the brace, but from having to take the bench. You see, this was his final chance, his final season to shine. All he wanted to do was play basketball.

The brace kept his head high like a brave soldier. The brace was worn every minute of every day except when he showered and ate meals. The brace was uncomfortable, but doctors told him it was his only chance for the neck to heal. He wanted to play. Boy, he wanted to play. He stood outside the locker room after the game and said he wanted to be back in the lineup six days later against Virginia Commonwealth.

"It's better," he said. "I'm ready to get back."

But Asbury shook his head. "No, no, no," he said. "He knows better than that."

So, McCollough went to another doctor in Kansas City, Mo., that following Wednesday, just to make sure. Heck, a second opinion never hurts. His optimistic face frowned when he heard results similar to the previous diagnosis. He was told he'd have to sit out six to eight weeks until the ligaments completely healed.

McCollough sat the bench against VCU, dressed in uniform and warm-ups again. Again, hoping and wondering.

"For me, it's a good luck thing," he said. "Wearing the jersey gives me confidence and lets me know I'm still a part of the team."

He stood and cheered during games. He grinned. He laughed. He high-fived teammates. He frowned in front of the locker room after the game. He looked at teammate Duane Davis, who had an ocean of television cameras surrounding him, but remained optimistic.

"The guys really help me out," McCollough said. "They know how bad I want to be out there."

Nine more games passed. No chance. None. Then McCollough emerged from the locker room before K-State played Nebraska on Jan. 28, and the brace was gone. He saw one doctor, then another. He was finally cleared to play and laced his Nikes before his team played Colorado, knowing he finally had a chance.

Then, Asbury gave McCollough a nod, pointed at him, tapped him on the shoulder, and he stripped off his warm-ups and scored 11 points against Colorado.

McCollough has made 25 of 38 shots since his return six games ago. He has the best shooting percentage on the team. He is averaging nine points and smiles each time down the floor.

Tonight, McCollough envisions a victory. He has beaten the odds. He has lived through a scary season that wasn't dictated by legal terms such as "DUI" and "probation," but medical terms such as "injured" and "will not play."

In McCollough's situation, he was the victim. Tonight, he closes his case.

City Commission plans to build fire station to alleviate slow responses to emergencies

TIM RICHARDSON
Kansas State Collegian

Seven-minute response times by the Manhattan Fire Department to parts of the city's west side could soon decrease as the city plans for additional fire stations.

Manhattan's three existing fire stations cannot maintain a low response time because of the city's population. City Manager Gary Greer said his administration was involved in a study to determine the city's fire protection needs.

"We had an indication that we probably were going to have some need for more fire stations," he said.

The plan, passed by the City Commission on Feb. 17, will make a station near Manhattan Regional Airport a top priority.

According to rules set by the Federal Aviation Administration, a station must be able to reach the center of an airport's longest runway in three minutes. Construction is scheduled to begin in 2000, with the possibility of three additional stations later. Greer said the construction will take about 18 months to complete.

The station will cost about $2.4 million, including staff, equipment, construction and property costs. City Commissioner Steve Hall said the project will be funded by revenues from sales taxes, property taxes and possibly federal grant money for improvements.

"We just don't have enough money to build three fire stations at the same time," he said.

Hall said development of residential areas will play a role in deciding when the other stations will be built. A station in the southwest part of the city, to be located at Kansas Highway 18 and Miller Park Roadway, is to be constructed in 2001 to increase response times in the Stag Hill area.

According to the Manhattan Fire Department's Fire Services Plan, average response time for the city's stations should be three minutes and 23 seconds. In this area, response times typically exceed seven minutes.

"The overriding concern is the response time to the fire," Hall said. "As the city continues to expand, it's really putting pressure on existing stations."

A station in the northwest part of the city could be constructed in 2004 if that area of the city continues to grow, particularly in the Colbert Hills area. A northeast station could also be constructed if development continues north of Marlatt Avenue or east of Northeast Community Park.

With the current system, the southeast station annually receives more than 600 calls for assistance, compared with about 200 at the other two locations. Manhattan Fire Chief Larry Reese said aging buildings are a significant factor in the cause of fires.

"It's the oldest part of the city," he said. "It has the oldest mechanical and electrical systems and the densest population."

Hall said the city also wants to improve its rating with the Insurance Service Office, a nonprofit organization that provides insurance companies with fire department ratings to assist in determining insurance rates. Manhattan ranks with Class 4, Class 1 being the best and Class 10 being the worst.

"I'm hoping to improve coverage and make it so our rating gets better," he said.

With the additional stations to improve response times, Hall said the community will be better served, cutting some response times by a few minutes.

"There are some things that are just basic, like fire protection and police protection," he said. "When a fire happens, they'd better be there quick."

Foundation surpasses expectations

SARA ZENGER
Kansas State Collegian

Two scheduled nights of calling remain, but the KSU Foundation Telefund has already blown away last year's fund-raising total.

The pledge amount after Monday night was $961,227. Gordon Dowell, director of annual giving for the KSU Foundation, said the pledge total at the end of last year's Telefund was $890,000. Last year's total was surpassed on Sunday.

"This is an awesomely incredible year for Telefund. We're having a huge year," Dowell said.

The colleges of Agriculture and Human Ecology both set fund-raising records Monday night.

"We have one more night of calling, and we've already raised $136,016," said Larry Erpelding, associate director of academic programs for the College of Agriculture.

This amount is $11,000 more than last year's total for the college and $23,000 more than its Telefund total in 1996. Erpelding said alumni becoming more aware of Telefund is one reason for the increase in pledges.

"Not only do we have more dollars this year, but we also have a significantly larger number of pledges," Erpelding said. "The alumni may be more responsive because more of them have called for Telefund as students. They understand what the students are going through and are willing to help them out."

The College of Human Ecology's total pledge amount after Monday night was $87,869. This amount surpasses last year's pledge total by $6,000 and is $13,000 more than the total in 1996.

"Telefund has gone very well," said Karen Pence, assistant dean for the College of Human Ecology. "Everyone seems to have a lot of fun and works hard at it. We're having a good time."

Pence said the Telefund is an important source of funding for the college.

"This money is very helpful to student and academic programs. It goes toward scholarships and student leadership activities," Pence said.

Heather Wootton, junior in agricultural journalism, spent two nights calling for the College of Agriculture. She said Telefund is a fun way for the college to raise funds.

"They made it exciting, and competing for prizes helped keep up the energy level," Wootton said.

Telefund will give away $40,000 in prizes to volunteer callers. Prizes include T-shirts, food and other items donated by area businesses.

The KSU Foundation is now seeing the results of Telefund. Dowell said it has already received 11 percent of the 19,421 pledges.

"Alumni are responding rapidly," Dowell said. "Everyone at the Foundation is working double time. We've had more than 1,000 envelopes come back."

The colleges of Agriculture and Human Ecology wrapped up calling Tuesday night. Tonight is the last scheduled night of Telefund.

U.N. chief predicts support for Iraq deal

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — U.N. chief Kofi Annan predicted Tuesday that key nations would give his deal with Iraq their unanimous support. A wary United States said it was looking for clarifications and an early test of the accord that Annan said "I will defend anywhere."

Annan returned triumphantly to the United Nations with an accord that he says meets the demands of Security Council resolutions: unfettered U.N. access to all sites suspected of harboring weapons of mass destruction.

He acknowledged that the agreement needed further definition, as requested by several Security Council members, but predicted after his first council meeting Tuesday that it would have "unanimous and strong council support" and that Iraq would comply with it.

President Clinton and his top advisers gave a generally favorable view to the accord, and the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Bill Richardson, called it "a step in the right direction."

But the United States is concerned about clauses that leave open the role of the U.N. Special Commission, which carries out the inspections, and the composition of a new team of diplomats who would accompany the UNSCOM inspectors to sensitive sites, Richardson said.

"We need clarifications on a number of issues, namely the importance of the U.N. inspection team and UNSCOM having the key role in any agreement," Richardson said.

Britain's U.N. ambassador, John Weston, said a key concern was that the "professional integrity of the inspection process remain intact and is at the center of this process."

A Security Council resolution could be drafted in the next few days to endorse the document, Weston said, though it wasn't clear if such a resolution would threaten force if Iraq failed to comply, as the United States and Britain have done.

A resolution endorsing Annan's accord isn't strictly required but would be "desirable in political terms," U.N. Spokesman Fred Eckhard said.

When asked what he hoped for in a council resolution, a visibly tired Annan replied: "I have done my work. I trust the council will do its duty."

The United States and Britain called Tuesday for "a quick test" of the agreement, but it wasn't clear when such a test would come. Inspectors would only request access to the eight presidential sites that had been declared off-limits if they had a reason and an "investigative trail" led them there, Eckhard said.

Annan didn't give a date when he would choose the diplomatic team or when the disputed inspections would take place, saying only "as quickly as possible." He said his advisers were still working out details.

Russian Ambassador Sergey Lavrov said the U.N. chief should move quickly to appoint the team.

As to what nationality the leader should be, Lavrov said, "Frankly, I don't think the leader of this group should be representing any permanent member" of the U.N. Security Council. "I think a neutral country would be much more appropriate."

Permanent council members are the United States, Russia, Britain, France and China. In the past, Iraq has complained that U.N. inspection teams were weighted with Britons and Americans.

For the time being, the agreement has averted a threatened U.S. military strike to force Iraqi compliance with U.N. resolutions demanding that it destroy its long-range missiles and biological, chemical and nuclear weapons.

U.N. sanctions imposed after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait can be lifted only once U.N. inspectors have certified Iraqi compliance.

Annan said there was a "qualitative difference" about his agreement because it was negotiated with Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, unlike others that have been negotiated by other Iraqi officials and subsequently violated.

"This one was negotiated with the president himself. And the leadership has got the message that he wants cooperation and he wants it done," Annan said.

When asked if he could trust Hussein to keep his word, Annan said, "I think I can do business with him. I think he was serious ... and I think I'm perhaps not as pessimistic as some of you are."

Manhattan Emergency Shelter offers housing to more families

NATE JENKINS
Kansas State Collegian

The Manhattan Emergency Shelter housed 70 more families last year than it did in 1996.

Shelter director Junell Norris said she isn't sure why the number increased, but something needs to be done.

"The increase in families that we take care of really scares me," Norris said. "It's very difficult under the new welfare act for people to find a job within three months, have food stamps taken from them, and be expected to find a job when they can't begin to afford day care."

In the past, Norris said most people who came to the shelter were single men who came back repeatedly, hoping the shelter could give them a hot meal and help them find a job. Norris said times are changing, and any hopes that things will get better without change in the system are blind ones.

"There needs to be some kind of assessment done on welfare reform so that we can track individual people and meet their specific needs," she said. "Single parents just have it too tough — no public transportation, no day care."

"Studies show that in Manhattan, without public housing, you have to have between $800 and $1,000 in your pocket to get an apartment. The expectations in some cases are just too much," Norris said.

Norris said that while the Manhattan Emergency Shelter is doing the best it can with its 26-person capacity — allowing some homeless people to stay between six and 12 weeks while providing job-search services, individual and group counseling and life-skills classes — there are some services it isn't equipped to provide.

Medical attention for homeless people who are mentally challenged is one of those services.

Matt Lambert, the night supervisor at the shelter who controls admissions and dismissals, said he's seen an increase in mentally challenged people in the three years he's been there.

In the past year, two mental health institutes, one in Winfield, Kan., and the Kansas Neurological Institute in Topeka, have closed.

"Since KNI in Topeka closed last year, we've had quite a few more mentally ill people checking in. It's something that is pretty difficult for us," Lambert said.

Norris said she has begun only recently to track the number of mentally challenged clients who come to the shelter. She said she normally refers them to Pawnee Mental Health Center where they can receive adequate attention.

The shelter isn't the only place in Manhattan that's seen an increase in the number of homeless people and mentally challenged clients. Though its main function isn't to house homeless people, and it doesn't have the facilities to do so, the Manhattan Salvation Army does what it can.

Salvation Army Director Sharon Wudtke said they pay for less-fortunate people to stay in local motels for up to two days, but the increase in mentally challenged people she has seen lately concerns her.

"Our hands are tied because we don't have the training we need to deal with some of these people," Wudtke said. "We could really use some additional input from mental-health institutions on how to deal with explosive individuals."

In the meantime, both Wudtke and Norris said they try not to get discouraged by focusing on the positives.

"Over half the people who work here have been homeless at some point," Norris said. "A lot of times old clients will come back and donate clothes and blankets they've bought with bonuses from new jobs. They don't forget."

Former K-State leaders reflect on student body president

ble sometimes, was to give my opinion. I usually had an opinion and would usually tell people. That's OK," Peterson said. "Regardless of the issue, no one has to apologize for opinions."

Ed Skoog, 1994-95 student body president, said Riemann should have commented on the issue involving Student Publications Inc., because as president he is involved in some way.

"He has an opinion and a role in what's happening even if the role is small. He's in a position to say something," he said. "Without a doubt there is no way he wasn't involved in some way."

"When reading the Collegian, I found it very disappointing that he tried to pretend that he was above it. By not speaking it looked like he was ashamed of the whole affair. Being a leader is answering questions when they are asked, especially on important issues."

Chris Hansen, senior in nuclear engineering and 1996-97 student body president, said there is definitely a time when the president should not comment on an issue.

"There are times in a university setting where you have to be confidential to protect the process, to protect the people. There have to be times when you do reserve comment until the appropriate time," Hansen said.

Riemann said he and Vice President Jennafer Neufeld chose not to comment on the Student Publications issue because it wasn't in their area.

"Jennafer and I took the philosophy of this as a Board of Student Publications concern, not a student government one," he said. "Our concern is in the funding realm and not in personnel."

"I just didn't think it was my place to comment," Riemann said. "I kind of felt that if I did comment it would have been perpetuating the issue."

Riemann still refused to comment after other senators said in the Collegian that he had helped organize a special meeting of the board to discuss Johnson's employment.

Student Sen. Carlton Getz, also a member of the Board of Student Publications, said it was a good decision not to comment on the Student Publications issue.

"It's a touchy issue when someone is not involved," he said. "It's always a risk to speak on something when you're not involved."

Riemann also hasn't taken a stance for or against a library privilege fee. He said he could definitely see both sides of the issue. Riemann said he understands the library's need for funding, but he also understands students not wanting to pay more money.

"I'm very sympathetic to both sides. When representatives at the library ask me, I have told them that if Student Senate passes a library fee, then I would give it a serious consideration," Riemann said.

Getz also said the library funding is a touchy issue.

"I think Tim's position is that there are still lingering questions that need to be answered. I think those are his reservations about supporting or going against," Getz said.

Getz said Riemann, in general, has done a good job as president, especially as a proponent of Student Governing Association's Code of Ethics.

The Code of Ethics, as passed by Student Senate, requires a vote of impeachment for any member of SGA who is convicted and sentenced for some misdemeanors or any felony.

"The signing of that bill showed good leadership on Riemann's part," Getz said.

"I think he's gotten a lot done although he hasn't really taken a vocal role. He's done a good job of trying a lot of stuff even if it was not implemented."

When asked if Riemann had accomplished a lot during his term, Hansen declined to answer. Hansen did say Riemann has done a good job of representing K-State at the Kansas Board of Regents level.

"He has served as one of the key leaders among Kansas' student body presidents," Hansen said.

"He's done a good job of approaching those issues very rationally and sharing some of the big school concerns with the regents."

Sen. Leo Prieto said Riemann has definitely been an effective leader and represents students well.

"I think just in general he has established a lot of credibility throughout the year," he said.

"He's open-minded. Throughout the year he has taken big steps to implement things. Even when not successful, he stands by his idea and is open to new ideas."

Neufeld said she and Riemann looked into quite a few issues. There were accomplishments during their term, she said.

"Has everything been accomplished that we ever wanted? No, but it's something you work for, and some things fall your way and some things don't," Neufeld said.

Riemann said one thing he and Neufeld pushed was adequately funding social services, including Lafene Health Center.

"We were proponents of increasing their budget, and that happened. We were very proud of that," Riemann said.

Spending limits might violate 1st Amendment

Carney said.

Carney said he doesn't necessarily agree with the court's decision, but if K-State is in violation of the decision, problems could arise.

"It's a delicate issue that won't go away soon unless we make a change to our code," Carney said.

Carney said there have been 23 cases on this issue, and all have reaffirmed the decision.

"I think we need to come to a conclusion quickly. This case and all that have preceded and followed it have reiterated the same statement," Carney said.

The elections code, which governs all general and special elections, was updated this year by the Election Committee. Carney said it was unfortunate the committee did not have this information earlier, but it is necessary that action be taken now to revise the code.

"We have to act in this election now and for the future," he said. "We need to fix the mistake now."

The proposed legislation would eliminate spending limits for this year's elections, as well, even though campaigning already has begun.

Senate Chair Jeff Dougan said the bill has been filed with the university attorney's office. Senators are waiting on an opinion from them to see if the Supreme Court decision applies at the collegiate level.

"If it is true, then we will have to abide by that law," Dougan said.

He said the elimination would reduce the amount of confusion about reporting campaign expenditures.

"It will remove one of the things that candidates have to do," Dougan said.

Taking out spending limits could, however, allow students to buy an election, he said.

"There are pros and cons on both sides, but it would definitely make things more competitive," Dougan said.

Gayle Spencer, coordinator of the Office of Student Activities and Services, said the elimination of campaign expenditures won't affect the election outcomes. However, those people with more money would get their name out there more.

"Ross Perot couldn't buy his election. I think people are smart enough to vote on issues and not what they see," Spencer said.

Carney said the elimination of spending limits would allow the widening of campaigning on campus. But he said he doesn't think the candidate who spends the most necessarily will win.

"Students will vote for the people that truly represent them," Carney said.

Election Committee Chair Ryan

Kerschen said it isn't unfair to establish an equal playing ground for elections at an institute like K-State, but he must respect the Supreme Court's ruling on election spending caps.

"At KSU the phrase 'We don't want to price ourselves out of an education' is often passed around. And at an institution where we value affordability, it is a scary thing to allow a person no limits during an election," Kerschen said.

But Kerschen said his main job revolves around supporting the election code Senate passes.

The new bill would also eliminate spending limits for coalitions. If the bill passes Thursday, Carney said he would offer legislation that would limit campaign contributions.

MARDI GRAS meets Manhattan

JAZZ BAND CELEBRATES MARDI GRAS WITH SHOW IN DANFORTH CHAPEL.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Part concert, part spiritual celebration, the Jazz Vespers celebrated Mardi Gras Tuesday night with a packed house at Danforth Chapel.

More than 50 people representing all of K-State's campus ministries came together for song, prayer and reflection.

Beginning the evening was a performance by K-State's Monday Jazz Combo. They set the mood with a raucous sound that reverberated throughout the tiny chapel.

The combo interacted with the Rev. Cathy Chittenden-Bascom, of the St. Francis Episcopal Campus Ministry, in an interesting variation on beat poetry.

Bascom talked about the joys of giving life as a mother and how Jesus Christ gives us life.

This was interjected with a conversational trombone performance by Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies.

"We remember we are responsible for those sparks out there," Bascom said. "We rub off on them. Tonight we fan the flame and remember that Jesus had something to do about this spark, this light."

The Jazz Vespers is that kind of experience — unexpected, introspective and, above all, fun. As Wilson said before the event began, "Feel free to enjoy yourself. I have no idea what's going to happen musically — that's the genesis of jazz."

A southern air was provided by the jazz combo which, with Doreen Comerford standing in on vocals, gave a mellow, sensual interpretation of Gershwin's "Summertime," from his classic show "Porgy and Bess."

Comerford, who may be next year's vocalist for the K-State Jazz Quintet, has a subtle voice, but rich enough to make this very sultry song hit the right buttons.

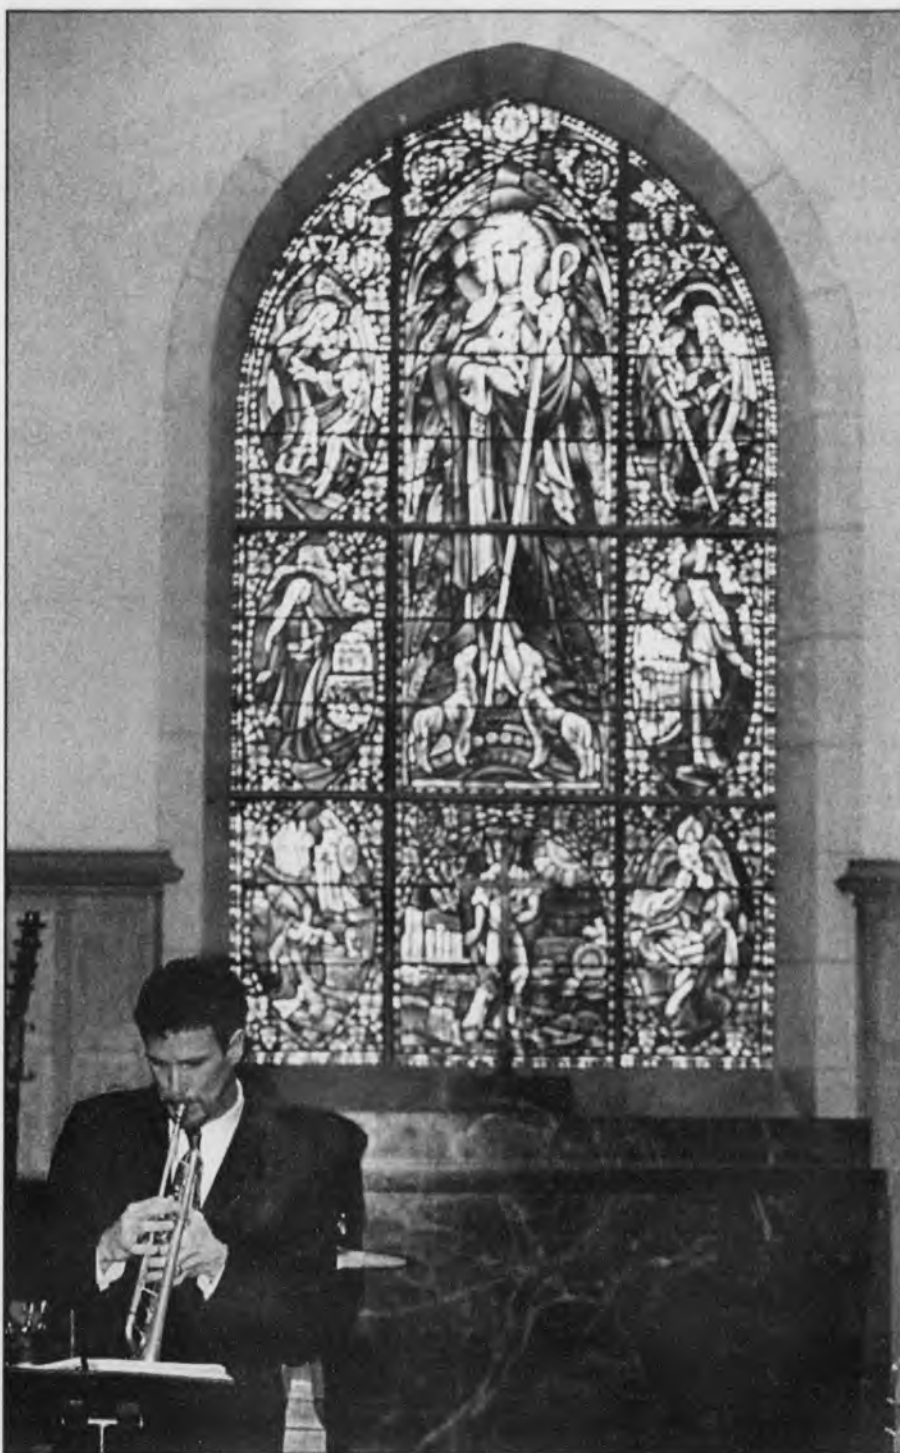

Although some might think Mardi Gras is an outrageous holiday in New Orleans, for Christians, Mardi Gras signals the beginning of a religious season. Marking the last day before Lent begins, Mardi Gras is French for Fat Tuesday.

Lent is the 40 days before Easter. This Wednesday, referred to by some Christians as Ash Wednesday, is the beginning of Lent.

Following the festivities, the Lutheran Campus Ministry hosted a Fat Tuesday Feast at its house on the southwest corner of campus.

Vegetarians have meatless lunch options in Union

AMY MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

People from all over campus trek to the K-State Student Union at lunchtime in pursuit of a decent meal. But among the pizza and the pork au jus, vegetarians are looking for a meal without meat.

Barb Depew, dietitian and food production manager at the Union, said these people don't need to search in vain.

"We are offering what I feel are quite a few options," Depew said.

One vegetarian entree from a rotational menu plan is available daily at the Slicers Deli, open Monday through Friday 10:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. in the Union Stateroom. Past entrees have included cheese enchiladas, broccoli and cheese strata, lentil Creole casserole and tofu fried rice.

Depew said vegetarians might not know about the meatless options because they don't know their locations. The vegetarian entrees were moved around at the beginning of this semester. After people complained about paying a full entree price for them, the dishes are now priced according to content, some as entrees and some as vegetables.

The Union also serves veggie bagels and veggie sandwiches daily from the sandwich case, which is adjacent to the bottled beverage cases. The sandwiches consist of vegetables, cheese and cream cheese on bread or a bagel. Depew said the veggie bagels and sandwiches are popular items.

In the saute area, the national wrap trend has caught on in the Union, and a meatless wrap such as veggie, or broccoli and cheese is on the menu daily.

Depew said after the Union expansion is complete, the dining area will still consist of a food court concept, but it will be "bigger and better than it is now." She said the salad bar will be expanded to have cold and hot foods, such as fried vegetables.

Upstairs from the Stateroom, the Bluemont Buffet offers buffet dining weekdays from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Depew said the buffet always has a vegetarian entree available, served with salads, hot rolls, desserts and beverages, and there is a good customer return rate for the vegetarian dishes.

Union Food Services also sends sandwiches and salads to the Arch Cafe in the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, open 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Tuesday through Friday, and to the Bookplate Cafe in the 24-hour study area in Hale Library, open 8 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. Friday.

Depew said veggie bagels are sent to the library cafe every day, along with other vegetarian sandwiches such as egg salad, but the cafe offers no daily vegetarian specials. The museum's cafe operates on a much smaller scale, and only occasionally has the veggie bagels, if anything meatless, Depew said.

The Union also houses Sbarro, which serves cheese, broccoli, or mushroom pizza, spinach lasagna, and spinach- or broccoli-stuffed pizza.

Elise Lambert, freshman in sociology and American ethnic studies and Sbarro employee, said the stuffed pizza in particular has sold well in the short time Sbarro has been open.

"A lot of people get the stuffed pizza. We've only been open a little while, but we made it once and it sold out," she said.

Sbarro is open 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Friday.

Subway, in the Union basement, sells a vegetable sandwich with or without cheese. The Union Subway is open 9 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 9 a.m. to 11 p.m. Friday and Saturday, and noon to 10 p.m. Sunday.

Number of reported AIDS cases in Kansas drops by nearly 50 percent in 2-year period

CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

The medical world may now take a brief sigh of relief. Don Brown, public information officer for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said the rate of AIDS has slowed in recent years, on both the local and national scale.

Local physician Dr. Karen Tappin verified this. "The information I get is the same," she said. "It's nationwide. It's not just here in Kansas."

Brown said in 1995, a total of 286 cases of AIDS were reported in the state of Kansas. Two years later, in 1997, that number dropped to 145.

"Statistically, two years is the blink of an eye," Brown said. "These numbers should actually be looked at over a period of five to 10 years. But this is definitely good news."

Brown said that while the number of reported cases is decreasing in number, it is not assured to continue.

"We don't know if this is long term or not," he said. The Nov. 14 issue of "Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report" showed that 49.1 percent of college students nationwide have received information on preventing AIDS and HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, from their college or university.

Also on the nationwide scale, 38.8 percent of college students have had their blood tested for HIV infection. Tappin said people of college age are at risk, not just college students.

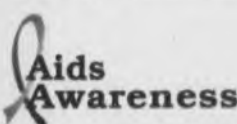

Brown said these statistics might be the cause of the gradual decrease of cases, but he also supported another possibility: the possibility of drug therapy. Drug therapy simply prolongs the onslaught of AIDS.

Tappin said drug testing is still in its infancy. "It's too soon to tell," Tappin said. "Besides, we have a short history of drug therapy."

Brown said testing for HIV is most important among those in at-risk groups, namely those who are sexually active or using drugs.

Brown said those who are tested for HIV can expect the procedure to be both simple and confidential.

"It's not a difficult procedure for testing," he said. "There's full confidentiality, which is required by federal and state law."

Study, Lafene employees report increase in cases of genital warts

JAMI BOYLES

Genital warts are on the rise among college women. In a recent New Jersey study, an average of 43 percent of sexually active college women showed signs that they were infected with human papilloma virus, the virus that causes genital warts, the New England Journal of Medicine reported.

Although the virus remains with an infected person for life, signs of the disease don't always show up in clinical examinations, said Reita Currie, registered nurse and health educator with Lafene Health Center.

For a maximum of three years during the New England study, 608 college women reported their sexual behavior at six-month intervals and had annual Pap smears.

At any given time, between 20 and 60 percent of these women showed signs of infection.

The incidence of genital warts among college-age women is alarming according to many studies. The K-State campus is not immune.

"I have been here 10 years, and that would probably be the most common sexually transmitted disease I see," said Carole Diamond, nurse practitioner at Lafene's Women's Clinic. "It's a high percentage."

Younger women, especially when alcohol consumption is involved, are at a higher risk, according to the National Institutes of Health.

This is due to both behavioral factors and decreased immunity, Currie said.

Certain strains of the virus can cause cancer. There are more than 80 different strains, and only about six of them cause cancer, Diamond said.

Women infected with the virus are advised to have regular Pap smears to monitor any changes, Currie said.

Millions of people are infected with the virus and don't know it.

Currie said the only accurate DNA testing method for the human papilloma virus is very expensive and difficult to find. The test results may not be accurate.

College-age students face increased chance of STD infection

KELLY REDDING
Kansas State Collegian

According to recent statistics, one in every four Americans will have a sexually transmitted disease at one time during life. The chance is even greater for college students.

"Students are driving a good portion of the trend in STDs," said Dr. Corinne Miller, assistant state epidemiologist for Kansas.

"In Congress, there is a swing toward abstinence, but sometimes that's not very realistic with the college-aged group."

The National Institutes of Health recently reported that more than 12 million cases of STDs occur each year.

About two-thirds of all people living with STDs in the United States today are younger than the age of 25.

The state of Kansas recently issued its 1997 summary of reportable diseases. With more than 20 STDs reported in the state, the two most common were chlamydia and gonorrhea.

The number of chlamydia cases increased from 4,448 cases in 1996 to 4,698 cases in 1997. A reported 2,935 of the cases, or 62.5 percent, were college aged (ages 18-25).

The state also saw a similar increase in gonorrhea cases. The 1997 figures show that 2,094 cases were reported in Kansas, while 2,043 cases were reported in 1996. College-aged individuals represented 1,138 of the cases, or 54.3 percent.

A spokeswoman for the National STD Hotline who could not release her name said the problem with the recorded state and national statistics is that reportable diseases are more dangerous.

"Reportable diseases are ones that can be life-threatening or can cause great bodily harm. Those types of STDs are gonorrhea, chlamydia and AIDS," she said. "The problem is, certain STDs, like genital herpes and genital warts, are not reportable, because they do not become life-threatening and seriously harmful. They usually just make life a little more annoying. But, hands down, they are the two most common STDs today."

Both the STD Hotline and the Kansas Department of Health and Environment recommended abstinence as the best policy to avoid infection. Men who are sexually active should always wear condoms. The spokeswoman at the STD Hotline also warned that condoms don't always protect people from everything.

"Condoms don't necessarily prevent all STDs," she said. "Herpes and genital warts can be passed even with a condom because the rest of the genitals are exposed."

"Testing negative for the virus does not guarantee that you do not have it," Diamond said.

The virus is not always active, although it can never be cured. It is possible for it not to show up on the test, she said.

Currie said the most common testing method is clinical examination, but the patient might not have visible warts at the time, which makes diagnosis difficult, she said.

Women often find out they are infected with the virus at their annual Pap smear, Diamond said. Many times it will cause the Pap smear to come back atypical or abnormal.

An atypical or abnormal Pap smear does not always indicate genital warts, Diamond said. There can be other signs. She said she discusses those possibilities with her patients.

Currie said practitioners have an obligation to tell their patients if they suspect genital warts. She said patients also have an obligation to report any symptoms.

Some common symptoms are lumps, itching and irritation, but these are not always present or recognizable.

"They look differently on different people and different skin types," Currie said.

Not everyone has recognizable symptoms. In some women, they may be on the inside of the vaginal wall, she said.

The disease can be passed on through most skin to skin contact. This includes sexual intercourse, oral sex and childbirth, Currie said.

One million new cases are diagnosed each year, although many more people are infected with the virus and do not know it.

For a patient, learning they have genital warts can be very difficult. "It is emotionally devastating," Diamond said. "It's hard to erase the emotional scars."

Lafene offers counseling and support for these women, said Eileen Swanson, director of the Women's Clinic and registered nurse.

She said the diagnosis is not the end of the world for patients.

When following the recommended guidelines, the virus is not usually threatening.

Different types of STDs

Here is a brief description of diseases:

CHLAMYDIA Some people have no signs, but when symptoms are present they include a yellowish discharge and burning during urination. Women might have lower abdominal pain. Men might have pain or swelling in the testicles. If untreated, women might get pelvic inflammatory disease, which can prevent childbearing. Chlamydia is curable.

GONORRHEA Symptoms are often mild or absent but might include burning during urination and a discharge for both men and women. If untreated, it can lead to pelvic inflammatory disease, and pregnant women can transfer it to babies during delivery. Gonorrhea is curable.

SYPHILIS The first signs are painless sores in the genital area or near the mouth. The sores will go away. Advanced stage symptoms include rash, fever, sore throat and hair loss. Ultimately it can lead to brain damage and even death if untreated. Syphilis is curable.

HERPES Early symptoms include burning while urinating, and pain in the buttocks, legs or genital area. Small red bumps might also appear and then turn into painful blisters. Eventually they heal and fall off. Outbreaks will continue to occur without treatment. Herpes can also be passed to the baby during birth, causing irreversible birth defects. Linked to cervical cancer, herpes is treatable, but not curable.

GENITAL WARTS Can produce small warts or bumps near the genital area. Men's appear on the penis, women's can be inside the vagina or outside. Sometimes they are not visible (for both men and women). Human papillomavirus, which causes warts, can lead to cancer. Women can pass it on during childbirth. There is no cure, but it is treatable.

HIV/AIDS Most people with HIV show no symptoms for years but can still transmit the virus. Symptoms can include recurrent fever, unexplained weight loss, swollen glands, fatigue, diarrhea, appetite loss, white spots or unusual blemishes in mouth. It can lead to AIDS. Medication can help sustain life, but there is no cure.

Students might think they are immune to infection, but two K-State women are

LIVING WITH STDs

Student discovers genital herpes strikes victims indiscriminately, seeks solutions

KELLY REDDING
Kansas State Collegian
"It can't happen to me."

That's what most college students think when it comes to sexually transmitted diseases.

Sarah, a K-State student whose name has been changed because she wished to remain anonymous, said she never thought she would get an STD.

She is now living with genital herpes, caused by the herpes simplex virus type II.

"Things like this weren't supposed to happen to me," she said. "It's only supposed to happen to people who are really promiscuous."

After dealing with the initial shock of finding out she had genital herpes, Sarah said she decided to become as informed as possible.

"I asked my doctor what I need to know to keep herpes managed," she said. "I couldn't just pretend like I didn't have something wrong with me. I had to confront it, become knowledgeable about it. I wanted to know how to take care of myself and any partners that I might have after this."

Reita Currie, a registered nurse in the Health and Education Department of Lafene Health Center, said knowing the right information is the right initial step to take when dealing with STDs.

"So many students think that they are invincible to STDs because they are a 'good girl or boy,'" she said.

"We need to look at the behaviors that cause this and take the moral and social stigmas off of it."

Currie also said it's important for people to get tested if they think there might be the slightest possibility they might be at risk.

"You can't tell who has an STD just by looking at them," Currie said.

"If you don't get tested and you have been exposed, you can infect other people."

There are many options available for students who would like to get tested or who would like to talk to someone. Lafene's Health and Education Promotion department offers individual consultations, a video library and educational material, support groups and peer health education programs that are done by the STD, HIV/AIDS Peer Educators group, or SHAPE.

Lafene offers a variety of confidential tests for STDs.

The tests can range from $10 for a gonorrhea test to $40 for a herpes simplex virus culture. HIV tests are also available.

The Manhattan/Riley County Health Department also offers confidential testing services for students.

Costs of tests run on a sliding scale, which is based on salary.

The maximum cost for a complete test is $35, which tests for four diseases — gonorrhea, chlamydia, herpes and HIV.

Genital warts victim recounts destroyed relationship

JAMI BOYLES
Kansas State Collegian

Genital warts are something that one K-State senior, who wished to remain anonymous, has learned to deal with.

There is no cure for the virus that causes genital warts. It remains with a person for life, although there aren't always physical signs of the virus.

It was not until she was in a relationship, two years ago, that she realized she had the virus. Her boyfriend developed warts on his penis several weeks after first sleeping with her. "I was in denial," the student said. "I just tried to convince myself that he had already had them."

She said it took a long time for her to admit she had genital warts and had passed them on to someone else without even knowing it.

"It was humiliating for me," she said. "It was hard for us to continue the relationship."

She said he ended the relationship one month after he realized he was infected with the virus.

She said she probably contracted the virus during her freshman year when she had unprotected sex a couple of times. But she said it might have even happened during protected sex; the virus can be transmitted in areas of skin that condoms don't cover.

She said she has only seen the warts once, but knows there is always a risk of infecting new partners.

She said she has an obligation to tell all her sexual partners about the virus.

"It changes everything," she said. "I will never have one-night stands."

The senior said there are good points to the virus. She said she waits longer to have sex in relationships now.

"I have to feel comfortable enough to have the talk with them," she said. "That's not easy."

She said she has only slept with one person since finding out she had the virus, but has felt comfortable telling some of her friends about the infection.

"A lot of people have this," she said. "I hope that by telling people they will feel more comfortable about it."

The student said she has become more comfortable and informed about the virus as time has gone by.

"At first it was really hard," she said. "Now I don't think of it as being that bad."

IT WAS HUMILIATING

FOR US TO CONTINUE THE RELATIONSHIP.

She said she thinks genital warts are a lot like cold sores and are only looked at differently because they are located in the genital area.

The student said she had to learn to accept herself because society has placed a strong social stigma on the disease.

Committee recommends hiring campus consultant

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

If the Kansas Board of Regents and the Kansas Legislature approve, a planning consultant could be on campus developing a master plan for campus development as soon as July 1, 1999.

The decision to hire a consultant, at an estimated cost of $500,000, is the culmination of three years of work by the Office of Facilities Planning and the Campus Development Committee.

The consultant is only one component of a comprehensive master plan for K-State, which includes the draft document "Campus Planning: People, Principles, and Process."

The committee recently passed a formal recommendation to the administration to hire the professional consultant, who would use the committee's document to develop a long-range master plan.

That recommendation went to Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, who has included the capital improvements request in a five-year plan he'll submit for approval to the regents in April. The committee acts as an adviser to Rawson.

"This is long overdue," Rawson said. "It's probably something we should have done several years ago."

Rawson said a professional consultant would verify that the general planning document was appropriate and relevant, computerize a site plan of campus with utilities and infrastructure shown and help get campus input for future campus development.

He said the university's involvement in the city's traffic-flow study, which will be finished in the fall, will enhance the consultant's campus study.

"The Campus Development Committee will be a key steering committee working with the consultant," Rawson said.

Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and university architect, said he expects a consultant would help develop the general master planning document, an executive summary of planning objectives to be given to the campus and a broadsheet.

The broadsheet would be an explanation of all building projects at K-State for the year and would be published in the Collegian at the beginning of the fall semester.

"Everyone would have the chance to see what is going on campus and how it would affect them," Carter said.

Carter said he also expects the consultant to develop a comprehensive map of campus.

Acting as the development committee chair is Richard Hayter, associate dean of engineering.

Hayter, who has been involved in city politics, has served on the Manhattan Area Regional Planning Board, a sort of city development committee.

Hayter said he expects the committee to approve the master planning document at its meeting on March 5. The committee has made a commitment this semester to make the document available to the public for feedback.

More info?

Attend the next Campus Development Committee meeting at 2 p.m. March 5 in the Anderson Hall conference room.

"We see the process as something the committee can suggest, but planning must be done by the professionals," Hayter said. "We certainly have the expertise in the College of Architecture. I would envision us asking for their professional oversight."

The development committee has no authority on capital projects, even though the recommendation will be administration-approved.

Hayter said the new recommendation process has been a success with the administration.

"There's been no indication we're just an academic exercise," Hayter said.

He said the committee is free to discuss any development issue, regardless if the administration has asked for its input.

"We can be proactive as well," Hayter said. "And again, I think the administration would be receptive to our recommendations."

Hayter said he agreed the community needs to have a means for addressing campus development. He said there are plans to appoint a community member, who could also be K-State faculty, to the development committee.

As head of the Department of Architecture, Mark Shapiro has been a vocal proponent of inviting architecture faculty into the planning process.

"We are not using our strengths," Shapiro said. "Because we are involved in the physical environment, our presence should be strengthened."

Shapiro said there are opportunities for architecture faculty to undertake design research for the university.

"I would not want to advocate that student work ever substitute for professional work," Shapiro said. "But the powers that be certainly could benefit enormously by seeing the possibilities the students generate."

Coaching against cancer

► K-STATE COACH ADVISES CHILDREN ABOUT SUCCESS, GENERATES MONEY FOR RESEARCH.

JENNIFER LUCKE
Kansas State Collegian

K-State men's basketball coach Tom Asbury spoke to children at Lee School on Monday about how to prepare for their futures.

The speech was part of Coaches Versus Cancer, a national program started by Norm Stewart, basketball coach at the University of Missouri. The program raises money for children's cancer research and cancer education.

Asbury is one of about 250 coaches across the nation involved in the program.

"We, as coaches, are glad to participate in this kind of effort, and we hope we raise lots and lots of money," he said.

Applebee's Grill and Bar donates money to Coaches Versus Cancer and sponsored Asbury's speech. Jarrod Laudemann, manager of the Manhattan Applebee's, said the restaurant is donating a percentage of sales from its Skillet Sensations promotional menu to the program.

Applebee's is also selling basketball stickers. Customers can put either their own names on the stickers or the names of someone they know with cancer.

Nationally, Applebee's is trying to raise $500,000. Laudemann said the Manhattan store's goal is to raise $1,000. The program started this week and is scheduled to last four more weeks. The restaurant is already halfway to its goal, he said.

"I'd say we're definitely going to exceed that," Laudemann said.

As part of the program Monday, Asbury told Manhattan school children about balancing academics and activities. Asbury told students they need to balance class work and academics with sports. He said their life plans might change throughout the years, but the key to being successful is what they do right now in the classroom.

"Listen to your teachers. Work hard, decide what you're going to be," he said.

In this age of computers and video games, children need to make sure they get 30 minutes of exercise every day, Asbury said.

"Get up off the couch," he said. "Get up and do something."

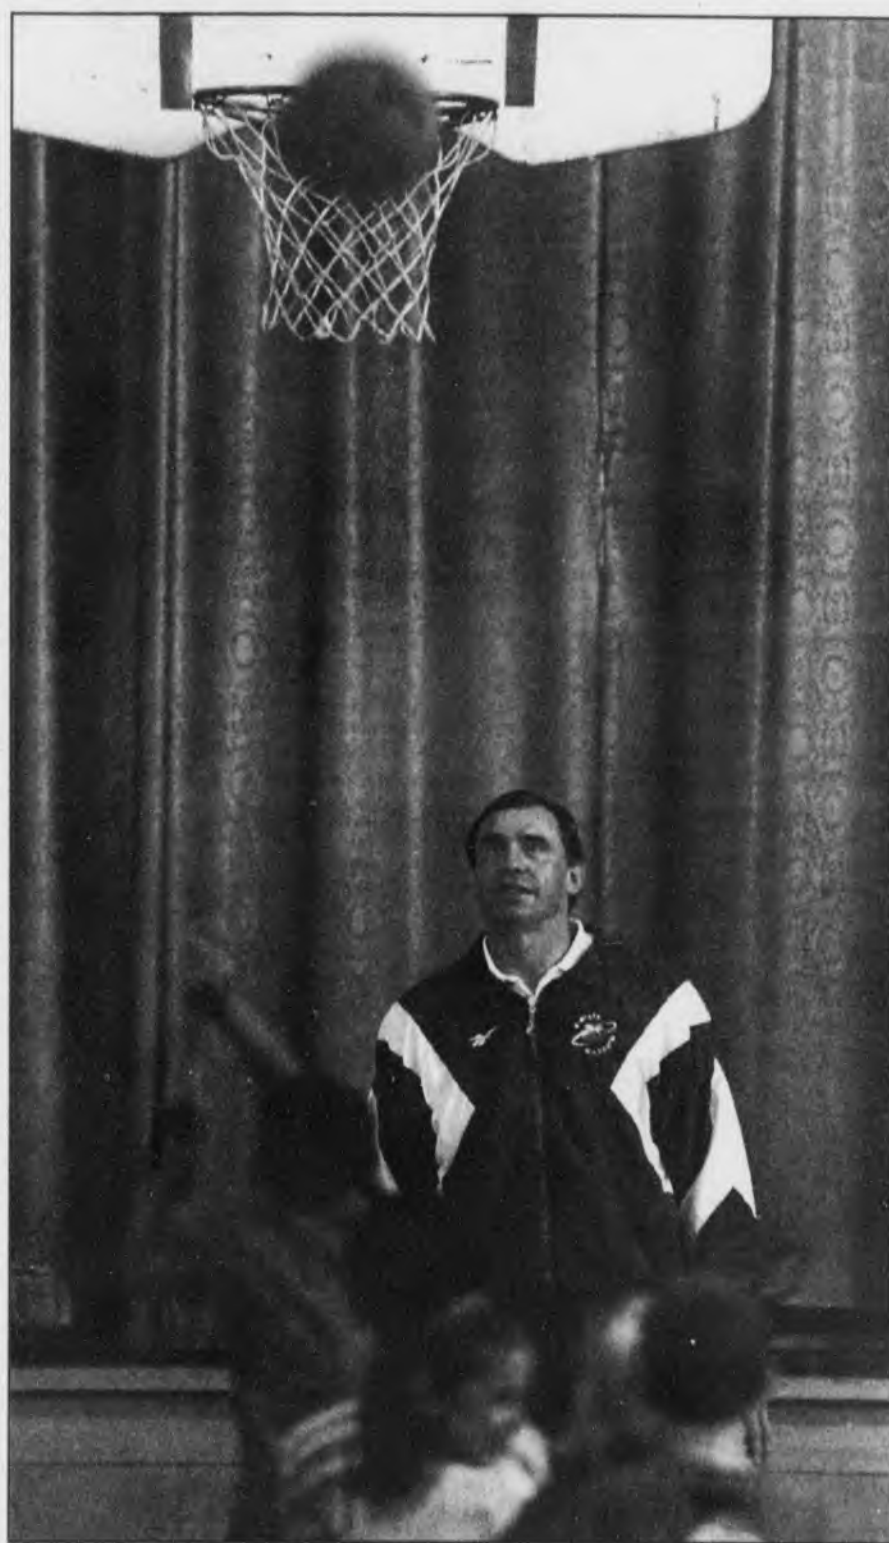

Asbury's final piece of advice was for students to have fun. He said children should play sports for themselves and not for their parents.

"Don't let anybody take the fun out of it. At your age, every day should be fun. Every single day should be fun when you're playing a sport or an activity," he said.

Assisted by Aaron Swartzendruber, senior point guard, Asbury helped students shoot baskets for prizes. In return, the students sang "I Believe I Can Fly" for Asbury and Swartzendruber.

Alumni Fellow praises college

► 1965 K-STATE ALUMNUS EARNs RECOGNITION FROM COLLEGE OF VET MED.

JOHN STOUS
Kansas State Collegian

K-State alumnus Bruce W. Little said last week the College of Veterinary Medicine probably has the most pride in its college than any other in the country.

Little, who graduated from the college in 1965, was on campus Feb. 17-20 with his wife as the College of Veterinary Medicine's 1998 Alumni Fellow, which he said was an honor.

"Receiving the letter asking me to come back and be the 1998 Alumni Fellow is the second most important letter I have ever received from K-State," he said. "The first most important was my acceptance into vet school."

Little returned to K-State as the executive vice president of the American Veterinary Medical Association. As the chief executive officer of the organization, Little performs functions to implement association policy and administrative programs.

Little was appointed by AVMA Executive Board Chair Dr. Leonard Seda in January 1996, after having spent nearly 10 years as the assistant executive vice president. AVMA is based in Schaumburg, Ill., and is composed of 63,000 members throughout the United States.

Interim Dean of Veterinary Medicine Neil Anderson said for Little to go from his own animal practice to administration showed he had made the most of his opportunities to get where he is today.

"Bruce is at the height of his powers. He has reached the top of our profession," he said.

Little was also the central figure in the AVMA Building Committee that searched for and purchased the AVMA's 76,000-square-foot office building. The building has now tripled its purchase value since it was built in 1991.

AVMA only uses half of the building and rents out the other half to generate $534,000 a year of income.

During his stay at K-State, Little toured the college's three departments and also the Food Animal Health and Management Center. While on these tours he also reviewed the programs with the department heads.

LITTLE

Little commended K-State and said it is on top of what is happening in veterinary medicine.

He also said the projects dealing with animal health and proficiency in the Food Animal Health and Management Center were on track.

"I think they are focusing exactly on what the future holds for vet medicine, actually they may be 10 to 15 years ahead of the game," he said.

Little also said veterinary medicine can't slow down. He said more and more public relations needs to be done so society knows what veterinary medicine can do.

He said the amount of knowledge it can lend to society is not based solely on how to care for animals, but also to help regulation and awareness of proper health.

Little also commented on the buildings, which have been standing for 20 years. He said they still look like they did when they were new.

"By the condition of these buildings, I can understand and see the pride that we as K-Staters take in what we do," he said.

"The pride we have not only sits with the faculty, but the students, janitorial services, to the alumni contributing money to continue to make the school better."

Campus groups gather daily to pray for peaceful solution to crisis in Iraq

CLAUDETTE RILEY
Kansas State Collegian

Interfaith campus groups are gathering each afternoon in the K-State Student Union until Friday for a prayer vigil as a stand against military action in Iraq.

The call to peacemakers for prayer and action began Monday. Students from interfaith campus groups will be available from 2 to 5 p.m. all week in the south end of the Union on the first floor.

Students can stop by for a moment of prayer, discuss the conflict in the Persian Gulf and sign letters urging the U.S. government to pursue diplomacy.

Cara Knutson, senior in family studies and human services, said the idea for a prayer vigil emerged from a Lutheran Campus Ministry meeting.

"We were discussing all the things occurring over there and wondered what we could do," Knutson said. "We hope to help the campus become more aware of what is going on."

Knutson said some people think the United States has already gone to war, and others are unaware of any conflict in the Persian Gulf.

"People are talking like we've already gone to war and don't question the loss of innocent lives that might happen," Knutson said. "I don't necessarily think Saddam is right, but I feel very strongly that there has to be another way."

Knutson, a peer minister for LCM, said all students from different faiths within the campus community are welcome.

"This is an interfaith gathering," Knutson said. "It's for people who aren't necessarily religious, but for humanity, and want to see a solution."

Knutson said she hopes interest in the prayer vigil gathers in momentum throughout the week.

"As people get more concerned, hopefully they'll join us and take this seriously," Knutson said.

Joel Thompson, junior in computer engineering, said he is working for a peaceful solution to the crisis and believes the sanctions are oppressing the people, not the regime.

"It does seem far away, but this is something that needs to be done. I don't think we're getting anywhere by attacking Iraq," Thompson said. "We won't get anywhere by being a bully. Iraq wants respect and an end to the sanctions."

Eldon Epp, pastor of Manhattan's Mennonite Church, said he's not totally optimistic about the successful U.N. negotiations with Iraq over the weekend.

"For the Iraqi people, the sanctions are an act of war. Hopefully, we can end the sanctions," Epp said. "War is always destructive, and we ask that there be another way found. They would respond better to a carrot than a stick."

Conflicting reports surface surrounding Bishop arrest

BRANDON R. GROSSARDT
AMANDA FINGER
Kansas State Collegian

Conflicting arguments surround the Aggieville incident involving starting quarterback Michael Bishop.

Bishop will make his first court appearance at 1 p.m. Friday. He has been arrested for alleged aggravated battery and battery for allegedly attacking Jeff Moore, senior in finance; Derrick Shanks, sophomore in fine arts; and Christopher Reed, Wichita.

Larry Woodyard, assistant director of the Riley County Police Department, said there is an on-going investigation of victims, witnesses and offenders.

K-State's Sports Information office said it is letting the legal process continue and is still waiting for the authorities who are handling the case.

Bishop's appointed defense attorney, Bob Pottroff, said he could not comment on the case other than to point out that Bishop still has yet to be charged with what he was arrested for.

"I can tell you that it has been a difficult case to follow," he said. "This is very, very confusing."

Pottroff said he was cooperating 100 percent with the Riley County Police Department, providing information and evidence as soon as he becomes aware of it.

"When the truth comes out, I think people are going to realize Michael didn't have anything to do with it," he said.

Four K-State students said star quarterback Michael Bishop is innocent of the battery charges for which he was arrested Sunday morning and even tried to help keep one of them out of harm's way.

Crystal Turgeon, junior in pre-law, and Moore were both at the scene in Aggieville where the fight took place. The information they gave Wednesday conflicts with the information media agencies were told the morning after, Moore said.

"I never said that Bishop hit me. I know that Bishop did not start the fight.

He was there, but the guy that hit me first was not Bishop," Moore said.

Moore said he talked to Bishop on Tuesday and asked him about the fight.

"He said he didn't hit me, and I believe him," Moore said.

Turgeon supported what Bishop told Moore.

"I asked Michael for a ride to my car. He said he could give me a ride. We were walking to his car when the fight started," Turgeon said.

Shanks, who was also at the scene of the fight, and Moore were confronted by two other men. Turgeon said she didn't know who they were.

"There were four guys all in a line. There was Shanks, Moore and two other guys," Turgeon said.

Shanks and Moore were standing together and one of the men was facing Moore, Turgeon said. The other man was directly behind the first man, she said.

"The next thing I knew, the guy from behind reached around and hit Jeff in the face," Turgeon said.

"I saw Jeff stumble into the street on the north side of Varney's. I started walking toward the fight but Michael caught me."

"He just wrapped his arms around me and when I told him I knew one of the guys he just said 'No, no, you'll get hurt.' He was being a good role model by keeping me out of the fight and by him staying out of the fight."

"After the fight, Bishop gave me a ride to my car," Turgeon said. "After that, Bishop said he went to Burger King, where he was confronted by police officers and arrested on the spot."

Turgeon didn't find out about the Bishop arrest until the 5 p.m. news on Sunday, she said.

Jason Walker, senior in finance, asked Turgeon for a ride shortly before the fight. Turgeon explained that she was getting a ride from Bishop. Bishop said his car was full, Walker said.

"I walked about 5 feet away before I heard the punch," he said. "I turned around and saw Jeff. Bishop was holding Crystal."

Moore said he doesn't want Bishop to get in trouble if he wasn't involved.

"I just want the people that were there to be the ones that get in trouble," Moore said. "If I can help Bishop out and make things right, then I will," he said.

Bill changes guidelines for elections

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Student Body President Tim Riemann signed a bill Wednesday that changes spending rules for this year's elections.

Some candidates have yet to be informed of the change, which was passed by Student Senate last Thursday.

The bill amends election guidelines passed by Senate last semester. It allows candidates not to report the expense of T-shirts or articles of clothing if they are sold to supporters, although the silkscreening costs are still required to be reported.

The guidelines passed by Senate this fall would have required all expenses to be reported, whether or not campaign supporters would purchase the T-shirts.

All candidates face campaign spending limits set in the elections code. When they file for office, candidates sign a statement that states they have read and understand the code.

Riemann said changing the elections guidelines during the campaign is not something that should be done every year, but he thought the bill corrects

Controversial inquiry causes flood of e-mail

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — It was being viewed here as a tempest in the Topeka teapot, but an anonymous request asking Kansas universities what academic courses they offer relating to homosexuality and bisexuality set off alarm bells at the schools.

Several leading social conservatives in the Legislature said they didn't know anything about the request. They weren't even aware on Wednesday of the controversy it has stirred at the six state universities.

Some faculty members view the request as a potential infringement on academic freedom at best and a witch hunt at worst. University officials said the inquiry on sexually oriented courses created a flood of e-mail messages within the academic community.

"It was bouncing all over the country by Saturday," said Dana Britton, assistant professor of sociology at K-State.

It was quickly viewed by some as a potential threat to academic freedom and a possible effort to root out sexually sensitive material in university courses.

"I would consider it very inappropriate to delve into course content," K-State Provost James Coffman said.

"The concept of academic freedom is a pretty universal concept in our society," said John Ginn, University of Kansas journalism professor who

Manufacturing solid careers

► ENGINEERING STUDENTS PREPARE FOR FUTURE INDUSTRIAL CAREERS.

SHERYL WILLIAMS
Kansas State Collegian

The Manufacturing Learning Center is the evidence of research dollars working to provide K-State engineering students with real-world experience and to give Kansas companies a better opportunity to be competitive.

Since April 1995, the center, with a work force that includes engineers and student interns, has offered engineering services for a fee to Kansas companies that need help with manufacturing problems and ideas.

Farhad Azadivar, director of the College of Engineering's Advance Manufacturing Institute, which owns the MLC, said there are not many operations like the MLC in the nation.

"The National Science Foundation, which is one of the main organizations that funds this operation, would like to use this as an example nationally, to show how engineering education and service to the community can be combined," Azadivar said. "This is kind of a national event that is happening here."

Azadivar said the MLC is much like a medical school's teaching hospital.

"Here we have experienced engineers who are like doctors, and the interns, our students, provide service to the manufacturing community," he said.

The MLC's relationship with a company can vary, depending on what the company needs.

"Sometimes they bring their projects here, their problems, or if they have an idea for a product, sometimes we invent the product for them, and we find a way to manufacture the product," Azadivar said.

"We actually manufacture the prototype and sometimes the product itself here, and after every bug is out of the system, we deliver products, plans and the whole manufacturing process's documentation to them."

Developing relationships with manufacturers to help them improve their operations is a big part of what the MLC is all about, Jeff Tucker, operations manager of the MLC, said.

"We have the educational mission of the university, but our research and our technical assistance is to help manufacturers be more competitive, more productive," he said.

The MLC, housed in a 22,000-square-foot facility at 510 McCall Road, has $800,000 to $1 million worth of up-to-date machinery. Each piece of machinery is different, because the MLC is concerned with producing small lots of prototype products, rather than mass production.

"There's nothing in here that our manufacturers do not have access to, because if we design something around a particular piece of equipment that no one else in industry has, it's not going to do our client base any good," Tucker said.

Some of the machines are hooked up to their computer network, so programs can be downloaded and used to perform tasks and to detect problems before they arise.

"One piece of equipment, used to bend metals, is linked to a program that allows simulation of bends, considers how much tonnage we're going to apply, and whether or not the material is going to hit the tool and have an interference," Tucker said. "It avoids having to run and rerun things on a regular basis."

Tucker said the idea behind the MLC is different than the traditional senior design projects on campus, in which industries participate to further the educational cause, not

KU Student Senate encourages K-State to support lowering drinking age to 18

The University of Kansas Student Senate passed a resolution on Feb. 18 that supports lowering the alcohol drinking age from 21 to 18.

Tonight they'll encourage K-State's Student Senate to do the same.

KU senators John Colbert and Sam Pierron introduced the legislation and said their main goal is to gain support for their resolution at universities across the country.

"We want to raise awareness that the drinking age is a joke, and it hasn't curbed college drinking," Colbert said. The vote in the KU senate was 21-20. Pierron said many minors voted against the measure.

"There was a lot of hypocrisy involved, and only three people had logical or philosophical reasons to oppose the resolution," Pierron said.

Colbert and Pierron plan to present their resolution at tonight's Senate meeting, asking Senate to write and pass a similar resolution.

"Both of us have believed in this lowering for a long time," Pierron said. "We are both over 21 so this is not a personal interest."

Pierron said most arbitrary rights are given at age 18, and the way the drinking law is treated lends it to abuse.

"Alcohol is held out from you past other significant rights," he said.

The drinking age was changed from 18 to 21 in the 1980s. President Reagan signed a federal highway act, which stated that states would lose money for highway projects if they didn't raise the drinking age, Colbert said. Pierron said when the law changed to 18, society didn't change with it.

"Drinking is still considered part of the college experience," he said. "The law criminalizes a normal action." Overall, Colbert and Pierron said they aren't optimistic about the effect their resolution will have on changing the drinking law.

"I don't think there will be any changes on the state level," Colbert said. "The state isn't going to give up millions in highway money."

Colbert said their goal is to raise awareness that the drinking law is ineffective and make an impression on the national level.

First they hope to find a K-State senator to sponsor their resolution, Pierron said.

"This is our opportunity to put our beliefs out there and to try and start something," he said. "Hopefully, after we gain support from a second school, we can move onward and upward."

Minor sentenced to 2 years probation for stabbing local man during summer

A jury sentenced a 17-year-old on Monday to 17 months in prison for stabbing a Manhattan resident in a parking lot across the street from Ahearn Field House in July.

Brenda Jordan, assistant Riley County attorney, said Michael Stephenson was granted probation for 24 months. Stephenson will only have to serve 15 days of his prison term in addition to 100 hours of community service.

He will also have to undergo random drug and alcohol testing, stay out of the Aggieville area and make payment of restitution that includes the victim's medical expenses, Jordan said.

Jordan said Darrin Soper was stabbed on July 15, sometime after Soper and Stephenson exchanged glances near Dillons in the Westloop Shopping Center. Stephenson followed Soper to the campus Natatorium where Soper's wife was waiting.

In the parking lot, Stephenson produced a knife and stabbed Soper in the chest.

Stephenson and his passengers followed Soper for almost two miles, Jordan said. As a result, the prosecution aimed for a higher level of aggravated battery, one that included intentional infliction of bodily harm.

The jury found Stephenson guilty of a level eight offense. The crime, according to Kansas law, involves "recklessly causing bodily harm to another person with a deadly weapon in a manner where great bodily harm could have occurred."

Jordan said she was disappointed with Stephenson's sentence, which she called ludicrous.

"If you stab someone you shouldn't get probation," she said.

Parents may receive college funding help under bill endorsed by state committee

TOPEKA — The Senate Education Committee on Wednesday endorsed a bill authorizing a study of college savings plans by the state treasurer's office to see if such a program would be feasible in Kansas.

Under a college savings program, parents could pay into a fund established in the treasurer's office, have the money invested for them and use the principal and interest to pay tuition and other expenses when their children are ready for college.

The treasurer's office, soon to be led by former state Rep. Clyde Graeber of Leavenworth, Kan., will look at college savings plans already in effect in Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana and Utah and at plans pending in 10 other states, including Oklahoma and Missouri. It will report to the 1999 Legislature.

Graeber, appointed by Gov. Bill Graves to replace Sally Thompson who resigned to accept federal appointment, will be sworn in as state treasurer on Friday. He attended Wednesday's Education Committee meeting.

The study will not include a review of prepaid college tuition plans, which 16 states have.

Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said tuition increases while children are growing up mean prepaid tuition plans usually wind up falling short of meeting tuition costs by the time they reach college.

The study proposal replaced a bill that would have authorized the treasurer's office to set up both prepaid tuition and college savings programs.

Peggy Hanna, assistant state treasurer, said the study will examine existing savings plans, determine participation guidelines, see how to maximize tax benefits, look at a range of coverages and review investment procedures.

The office also is asking for a $30,000 appropriation for the study, most of it to cover costs of staffers traveling to other states to investigate their programs.

U.S. Mint to offer commemorative coins to honor black Revolutionary War soldiers

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A silver coin commemorating the 5,000 black Americans who fought in the Revolutionary War was offered for sale Wednesday to help finance a new memorial to black patriots on the National Mall.

The dollar coin features escaped slave Crispus Attucks on one side and a black colonial family on the other. A total 500,000 coins will be minted and offered for sale through by the U.S. Mint at prices beginning at $30 each.

In a ceremony at the National Archives, Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin said that it is fitting that the coin honors Attucks, who was the first person killed by British soldiers during the Boston Massacre on March 5, 1770. The event is credited as one of the flashpoints that led to the Revolution.

AN EGG DROPS TO THE GROUND IN ITS PROTECTIVE APPARATUS WEDNESDAY DURING AN EGG-DROP CONTEST SPONSORED BY THE COLLEGE OF ENGINEERING. SEVENTY-ONE MIDDLE SCHOOL STUDENTS PARTICIPATED IN THE CONTEST.

Contest teaches design, makes students think

KELLY REDDING
Kansas State Collegian

Seventy-one seventh and eighth graders gathered Wednesday in Durland Hall to drop some eggs.

The egg-drop contest is part of Engineers Week, sponsored by the College of Engineering and the National Society of Professional Engineers.

Four junior high schools competed in this year's competition, including Eisenhower and Susan B. Anthony junior high schools from Manhattan.

Cory Cochran, sophomore in electrical engineering, was the chairman of the contest.

"We give the students one and a half hours to design an apparatus with a sheet of posterboard and some glue," he said. "We drop the eggs from the third-floor balcony, which is about a 40-foot drop."

Winners are selected from the eggs that do not break on impact. The apparatuses that carried the unbroken eggs are weighed, and whichever design weighs the least is the winner.

Leg'go My Egg's, a group of seventh graders from Wamego, created a parachute-like device and packed their egg inside a tube stuffed with torn paper.

"We had two different ideas," said Kristen Burns, a seventh grader from Wamego Middle School. "So we combined them and made a parachute with a capsule. We put torn paper in the capsule to keep the egg from breaking on the bottom."

Unfortunately, the group's final result was a little disappointing.

"The top came off, and it fell down faster," said Kate Deines, another member of the Leg'go My Egg's team. "That made it fall on its side, and it broke the egg. But we want to improve our machine and be in this again next year."

The winning group, The Spiffy Eggheads, consisted of three eighth graders from Eisenhower Middle School.

They said the shape of their design was what won it for them.

K-State Rodeo team plans special events for local performance

AMY EBERT
Kansas State Collegian

It's time to get out the boots, hats and belt buckles. The K-State Rodeo will be in town this Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Before the actual rodeo starts, the competing cowboys will have a special rodeo on Thursday night.

"The Exceptional Rodeo is a rodeo where mentally and physically impaired children work on all the different aspects of the rodeo," Steve Frazier, K-State Rodeo coach, said.

Frazier said each child participating in the rodeo is paired up with one of the college cowboys who will be competing on Friday and Saturday.

"They get paired up with a cowboy and get to do what the big cowboys do. It's their day, and the cowboys get a lot out of it, too," he said.

Ben Janssen, junior in agricultural technology management, said he thinks the children participating enjoy it.

"I think it's good for impaired kids who don't get a chance to be exposed to things like that," he said.

Admission to the Exceptional Rodeo is free and begins at 7 p.m. Thursday in Weber Arena.

Another rodeo specialty for children is Kids Day on Saturday. The rodeo, along with KXBB-FM 104.7 and McDonald's Restaurant, sponsored a birthday contest. Children with a February birthday could register to win a birthday party at the rodeo.

"The winner gets to bring 10 of his buddies here, and they will get special recognition. The birthday group will also participate in a clown act during the rodeo on Saturday afternoon," Frazier said.

Another children's attraction is scheduled for the Saturday afternoon performance in order to bring in more community people.

"The first 300 kids in will get a free Frisbee sponsored by Farm Credit Services," Frazier said. "The public really turns out Saturday, and they bring their kids because it's their day."

Frazier expects a full house at the Friday night performance and said the Saturday night performance will probably sell out.

"We've been real tickled at the turn out in the last few years," he said.

Janssen, who will compete in the calf- and team-roping competition, said the rodeo is a good way for K-State to gain recognition.

"It's really a good chance for K-State to showcase our own rodeo athletes," he said.

The rodeo stock is some of the best and well-known on the national rodeo circuit, Frazier said.

"Copenhagen Gunslinger, who was the 1993 National Finals Rodeo Bull of the Year, will be here. He very seldom ever gets ridden, so he'll bring some excitement to the arena this weekend," he said.

Prior to the Saturday night action, Miss Rodeo K-State will be crowned.

"We had all the competition for that last Saturday, and the girls are all waiting for this Saturday night to see who gets the crown," Frazier said.

Senate should not have changed election rules

If you've never been in Student Senate or active in Student Governing Association before, good luck trying to break into the club.

That's the message senators and Student Body President Tim Riemann sent this week when they approved legislation that changed the rules for elections in the middle of the election game.

So far, candidates who aren't already in SGA haven't even been notified of the change.

Last fall, senators spent hours debating and approving a revised elections code. Last week, they noticed a mistake — a clause about campaign T-shirts wasn't in the regulations.

Hurriedly, they wrote and passed an amendment that reinstated the clause, which allows candidates to spend as much as they want on articles of clothing for their campaign. If the clothing is sold to supporters, it doesn't have to be reported as a campaign expense against presidential candidates' $815 spending limit.

During last week's debate, some senators said they supported the bill because they knew some presidential candidates had already spent more than $815 on T-shirts.

Senators said they didn't want to see good candidates knocked out of the race because of a mistake.

Too bad.

At the beginning of the election process, candidates signed a statement saying they had read and understood the election regulations. Did they lie? Or did they not read the regulations thoroughly, spend money on T-shirts, and then use their Senate connections so they wouldn't be knocked out of the race?

Senators changed the rules in the campaign, using an advantage that other candidates who aren't already a part of SGA don't have. By doing so, they encourage campus-wide apathy.

Why should students outside the system want to become involved with senators who serve their own interests, not those of students? The election process loses credibility when SGA changes its rules to benefit candidates who are already part of the system. It's no wonder voter turnout is historically low.

Sadly, in the age of modern politics, we've come to expect false campaign promises. But we shouldn't expect candidates to buy things to help their campaigns and then work from within the system to make it legal.

WHERE IN HALE ARE THE BOOKS?

A library is only as good as the books in it, and last time I checked Hale Library came up way short.

SCOTT ANDERSON/Collegian

With Student Governing Association elections kicking off in the near future, the campus will soon transform, with everyone heralding you with their song and dance. Knowing that I would need to compete with such influences for a moment of your time, I am willing to offer this ditty (sung to the tune of "Alma Mater"):

*I know a spot
full of shelves.
Tis not in forest
but it ain't doing well.
Many may whine it's an empty shell.
I can't agree. It just needs:
More volumes*

*K-S-U
Journal prices are too high.
K-S-U
The time for a privilege fee is nigh.
Fail, this to see,
and your children will surely cry:
Hail a hale Hale
with more volumes!*

The reasons to offer adequate financial support to a library are numerous.

Several objections have been raised to the idea of using a student privilege fee to support the library, but most of them are not defensible. Arguments include:

1) The library only benefits faculty and graduate students, so they should cover the rising cost of journal subscriptions. First and foremost, the library is indeed the heart of an institution of higher learning. The library is a resource for faculty and students of every single major, discipline and interest. The argument that the library resources of K-State are of no benefit to undergraduate students is an argument as shallow as those who support it. On the most direct level, let me say, if you are an undergraduate who has somehow managed to avoid entering Hale Library during your tenure at K-State, there's a 90-percent probability that you're as short-sighted as the Kansas Legislature.

Furthermore, all undergraduates benefit from a strong core of faculty, right? Take a good look at the faculty who teach your classes — what have they dedicated their life to? Faculty positions aren't given away in the bottom of cereal boxes — faculty earn their positions and gain tenure by demonstrating a desire and ability to contribute to the scholarly pursuits of their discipline. Knowing this, job-hunting Ph.D.s try to obtain positions with institutions that provide them the tools necessary for such research.

The better candidates end up at institutions better able to provide those tools. Make sense? It should.

It's no different than the process most graduating students put themselves through when seeking employment.

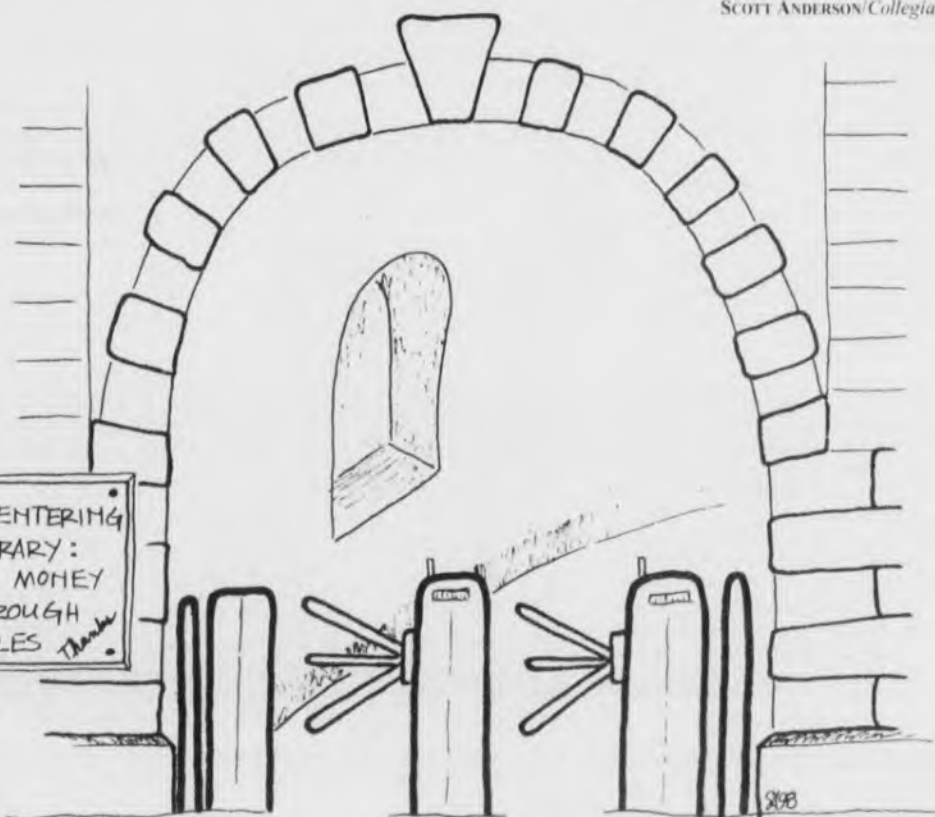

Tying it all together — a university that fails to adequately fund its library system will experience difficulty retaining and acquiring faculty. Without a large-enough pool of faculty, professors are called up to teach too many courses each semester, allowing them too little time to devote to each student, each course and their research. The assault of too little time devoted to research, combined with inadequate library resources to assist them in the process of applying for grants or writing papers, eventually results in a loss of reputation for the university. This loss of reputation, along with the lower quality instruction, results in lower starting pay offers to recent graduates, fewer offers overall, less opportunity for alumni and fewer new students attracted to K-State.

What's the most insidious part of this downward spiral? It's slow, laden with inertia and doesn't happen in a vacuum. One could find a dozen different reasons for the same downward spiral, so the effects of inadequate funding a library aren't necessarily obvious until the consequences are already being felt and are costly, if not impossible, to completely repair.

2) It's not a privilege to use the library, it's a right. I couldn't agree more. But is it a privilege to allow ourselves to get hit by a slow-moving bus? If we as students allow journal subscriptions to be cut due to our unwillingness to contribute, we are only defending our privilege to obstinately refuse to do what's right. The Legislature has shirked its responsibility for many years, and while it's shameful, a refusal on our part to shoulder part of the burden will not garner its support. Only direct, forceful lobbying will garner the additional support post-secondary education in the state of Kansas requires.

3) Hale Library shouldn't have been built, and the money could have been used to cover the rising cost of journals. That's fine and dandy, except that the Hales offered K-Staters the chance to markedly improve upon what we had before. A library that offers students comfortable, quiet study spaces should be valued, not despised. Although it might not seem prudent to spend money creating such a large architectural space, that's only proper planning at work. Where are those study spaces going to be 50 years from now? Gone. If one builds a library just large enough to hold the volumes one has on hand, where does one put next week's shipment of journals? Most of what is now empty space will be filled with books and journals acquired in the future.

Assuming we find a way to provide the library with adequate funding, that is.

Student body president cares about students, reader says

Editor,
I would like to show my support for the work that Tim Riemann has done as student body president. He is a leader who cares more about student well-being than for gaining personal glory.

Instead of sticking his head in other people's business, like Student Publications Inc., he stayed focused on what he was responsible for. Riemann worked hard to keep the Lafene Health Center fee in place, which will benefit all students at some point during their time at K-State.

He also tried to benefit K-State by implementing the plus-system, which was unfortunately voted down. He has weekly "Wildcat Chats" where students can voice concerns to him.

Riemann has also increased communication between Student Governing Association and campus organizations, such as the residence halls and multicultural groups.

As far as comparing Riemann to Jeff Peterson, I say thank goodness Riemann is not like Peterson. Riemann cares about the students, Peterson cared about himself.

So when gauging the success of a student body president, students should look at what that person did for the students, rather than how much controversy or headlines he/she made.

I commend Tim Riemann on a successful year and hope that other students realize what he has done for them.

Stacy Meredith environmental awareness director on Tim Riemann's cabinet junior in geography

Reader condemns coverage, says Collegian unfair, biased

Throughout this semester I have read the Collegian with mounting aggravation. The time has come that I use my voice allowed me by the First Amendment. I find the Collegian's continued biased coverage deeply tiresome.

The Collegian's accusations of fence straddling and poor leadership located within the Editorial Board's comments and the front page article quotes do not make Tim Riemann a bad student body president. It makes him an average politician. Does a promise for change and leadership ever go answered by any elected official?

Moreover, when was the last time any president did not take credit for something that was not necessarily the fruits of their labor, (think of any economic boom)?

By commenting on his pride in the Course Information Proposal he was merely following status quo. Riemann has done no more or less than any other student body president during my time at K-State.

The attempts to cover the true reason for Riemann's poor reviews are thinly masked. The Collegian, and more specifically its staff and editors, are still smarting from the sting of the recent clash with the Board of Student Publications.

Considering the amount of coverage it received, one would think Student Publications Director Ron Johnson's dismissal and subsequent rehiring was truly an important campus-wide issue when it was little more than a political power struggle within Student Publications and their funding source. The Editorial Board's portrayal of Riemann as the man behind the scenes out to get to the Collegian and Johnson is unfair and unsubstantiated.

The editors and staff of the Collegian need to step back and analyze the coverage of "relevant" issues. The Collegian is the only mass publication that the apathetic student body reads, and it's mainly for the crossword puzzle, the comics and to check where tonight's beer specials are (not necessarily in that order).

However, the Collegian is the only source for campus-wide news. Student fees help fund the Collegian, therefore, students deserve to hear the whole story in appropriate order of importance to K-State. The American media have lost most, if not all, of the respect the public once had for it. Do not make the same mistake.

Emily Johnson
senior, animal science and industry

Former student disappointed with state of K-State athletics

Editor,
I am an alumna of K-State, and I usually take pride in that fact, especially when it is regarding the education I received at K-State. However, I cannot say the same for athletics.

Although I was very happy with the successful 1997 football season and the success thus far with the basketball season, I am very disappointed with the news I've heard.

Michael Bishop was charged with battery, and Manny Dies was charged with possession of alcohol and marijuana.

I have one question for these athletes — are you as stupid as it sounds?

You are extremely lucky to have the athletic abilities that you possess, which most likely landed you a free ride to an excellent education, yet you choose to do drugs or get involved in fights. If you are such strong, powerful athletes why can't you say no to drugs or ignore some smart ass in the bars? I understand that what you do is your own business, but not when I, as an alumna, help pay for the education that you choose to make a mockery of.

Unfortunately, many people base their respect for a university on what they hear in the news, and that is usually sports related.

Bishop made a name for himself in the Fiesta Bowl as an outstanding athlete, yet he obviously doesn't care about his reputation if he chooses to assault three people in Aggieville — please grow up. Dies has also made a name for himself, yet he can't give up a simple thing like alcohol or drugs.

I don't respect any athlete who is so weak that they can't say no to drugs.

What kind of an example do they set for future athletes?

I just hope the future students of K-State base their opinion of my alma mater on the education they can receive rather than what they have heard about our star athletes in the news.

Julie Hennes
1993 K-State alumna

Student disturbed by ESPN misidentification of athlete

Editor,
I happened across SportsCenter on ESPN last night, and they were talking about the Manny Dies incident, but instead of showing a picture of Dies, they showed a picture of Ayome May.

This is a bit disturbing to me. I would feel sorry if May ends up with any stigmas due to the actions of Dies.

I would hope that ESPN might clear up this matter, but I doubt they will ever see their error.

Glenn Manning
senior in biology and biochemistry

Middle East protests will continue until U.S. finds oil addiction cure

"We don't want your racist war!" That was the plea thrown upon U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright in the town meeting at Ohio State.

The signs read "No more blood!" as hundreds picketed in front of the White House.

Anti-war sentiment was so bad in South Carolina that Albright had the audience hand-picked for her visit.

It might appear that the nation is divided in its views about how to cope with Iraq. However, the leaders of these anti-government outbursts are Middle Easterners. They are Middle-Easterners living in the United States, taking advantage of our freedom of speech. Of course they will support Iraq.

The leader of the outbursts at Ohio State was obviously from the Middle East. Whether he was Muslim is unknown, but the accent was difficult to hide in his short interview with CNN.

This trend permeates newspapers and TV, where numerous articles and segments are devoted to this type of bias presentation. The thinking behind it is easy — Who better to speak out against Iraq than an Iraqi, or Jordanian or Palestinian? Their motives go far beyond the current crisis with Iraq. I have yet to see an American not associated with the Middle East leading the charge on Washington.

I think my sign would read "Stop giving us a hard time!" if I picketed the White House. America has had continuous problems with the Middle East at least since the establishment of Israel in 1948. Countries surrounding them support us one day and not the next. We bounce from conflict to conflict throughout the region. How long ago was it that we bombed Libya or worried about Iran?

Once the United States understands that everyone in that area hates us, the better off we will be. Oil keeps us addicted, somewhat like black cocaine, so that we keep coming back for more. America will always be in the Middle East. We should not be surprised when Middle Easterners in America speak out against our policy. They will not be happy until the United States pulls out entirely, and Israel is crushed.

Middle Easterners have always been picketing in the United States against our foreign policy and will continue long into the future. These people get front page news in time of crisis, but they represent the vast minority of Americans. The majority of Americans remember the hostage crisis in Iran, the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103, the invasion of Kuwait and the Arab-Israeli War. If I could picket in Iraq, I would. I don't think I would make it onto front page news.

The next time CNN has a segment on anti-U.S. foreign policy against Iraq, count the number of Middle Easterners presented. Likely, they will outnumber other nationalities. Realize that many countries in that area have despised the United States well before the Iraqi confrontation. Their nonsupport in the current crisis should be no surprise.

Contest teaches design, makes students think

KELLY REDDING
Kansas State Collegian

Seventy-one seventh and eighth graders gathered Wednesday in Durland Hall to drop some eggs.

The egg-drop contest is part of Engineers Week, sponsored by the College of Engineering and the National Society of Professional Engineers.

Four junior high schools competed in this year's competition, including Eisenhower and Susan B. Anthony junior high schools from Manhattan.

Cory Cochran, sophomore in electrical engineering, was the chairman of the contest.

"We give the students one and a half hours to design an apparatus with a sheet of posterboard and some glue," he said. "We drop the eggs from the third-floor balcony, which is about a 40-foot drop."

Winners are selected from the eggs that do not break on impact. The apparatuses that carried the unbroken eggs are weighed, and whichever design weighs the least is the winner.

Leg'go My Egg'os, a group of seventh graders from Wamego, created a parachute-like device and packed their egg inside a tube stuffed with torn paper.

"We had two different ideas," said Kristen Burns, a seventh grader from Wamego Middle School. "So we combined them and made a parachute with a capsule. We put torn paper in the capsule to keep the egg from breaking on the bottom."

Unfortunately, the group's final result was a little disappointing.

"The top came off, and it fell down faster," said Kate Deines, another member of the Leg'go My Egg'os team. "That made it fall on its side, and it broke the egg. But we want to improve our machine and be in this again next year."

The winning group, The Spiffy Eggheads, consisted of three eighth graders from Eisenhower Middle School.

They said the shape of their design was what won it for them.

"The cylinder is supposed to be the strongest structure to absorb shock, so that's why we used it," said Sheena Nagaraja, a member of the winning group.

Senate should not have changed election rules

If you've never been in Student Senate or active in Student Governing Association before, good luck trying to break into the club.

That's the message senators and Student Body President Tim Riemann sent this week when they approved legislation that changed the rules for elections in the middle of the election game.

So far, candidates who aren't already in SGA haven't even been notified of the change.

Last fall, senators spent hours debating and approving a revised elections code. Last week, they noticed a mistake — a clause about campaign T-shirts wasn't in the regulations.

Hurriedly, they wrote and passed an amendment that reinstated the clause, which allows candidates to spend as much as they want on articles of clothing for their campaign. If the clothing is sold to supporters, it doesn't have to be reported as a campaign expense against presidential candidates' $815 spending limit.

During last week's debate, some senators said they supported the bill because they knew some presidential candidates had already spent more than $815 on T-shirts.

Senators said they didn't want to see good candidates knocked out of the race because of a mistake.

Too bad.

At the beginning of the election process, candidates signed a statement saying they had read and understood the election regulations. Did they lie? Or did they not read the regulations thoroughly, spend money on T-shirts, and then use their Senate connections so they wouldn't be knocked out of the race?

Senators changed the rules in the campaign, using an advantage that other candidates who aren't already a part of SGA don't have. By doing so, they encourage campus-wide apathy.

Why should students outside the system want to become involved with senators who serve their own interests, not those of students? The election process loses credibility when SGA changes its rules to benefit candidates who are already part of the system. It's no wonder voter turnout is historically low.

Sadly, in the age of modern politics, we've come to expect false campaign promises. But we shouldn't expect candidates to buy things to help their campaigns and then work from within the system to make it legal.

WHERE IN HALE ARE THE BOOKS?

A library is only as good as the books in it, and last time I checked Hale Library came up way short.

With Student Governing Association elections kicking off in the near future, the campus will soon transform, with everyone heralding you with their song and dance. Knowing that I would need to compete with such influences for a moment of your time, I am willing to offer this ditty (sung to the tune of "Alma Mater"):

*I know a spot
full of shelves.
Tis not in forest
but it ain't doing well.
Many may whine it's an empty shell.
I can't agree. It just needs:
More volumes*

*K-S-U
Journal prices are too high.
K-S-U
The time for a privilege fee is nigh.
Fail, this to see,
and your children will surely cry:
Hail a hale Hale
with more volumes!*

The reasons to offer adequate financial support to a library are numerous.

Several objections have been raised to the idea of using a student privilege fee to support the library, but most of them are not defensible. Arguments include:

1) The library only benefits faculty and graduate students, so they should cover the rising cost of journal subscriptions. First and foremost, the library is indeed the heart of an institution of higher learning. The library is a resource for faculty and students of every single major, discipline and interest. The argument that the library resources of K-State are of no benefit to undergraduate students is an argument as shallow as those who support it. On the most direct level, let me say, if you are an undergraduate who has somehow managed to avoid entering Hale Library during your tenure at K-State, there's a 90-percent probability that you're as short-sighted as the Kansas Legislature.

Furthermore, all undergraduates benefit from a strong core of faculty, right? Take a good look at the faculty who teach your classes — what have they dedicated their life to? Faculty positions aren't given away in the bottom of cereal boxes — faculty earn their positions and gain tenure by demonstrating a desire and ability to contribute to the scholarly pursuits of their discipline. Knowing this, job-hunting Ph.D.s try to obtain positions with institutions that provide them the tools necessary for such research.

The better candidates end up at institutions better able to provide those tools. Make sense? It should.

It's no different than the process most graduating students put themselves through when seeking employment.

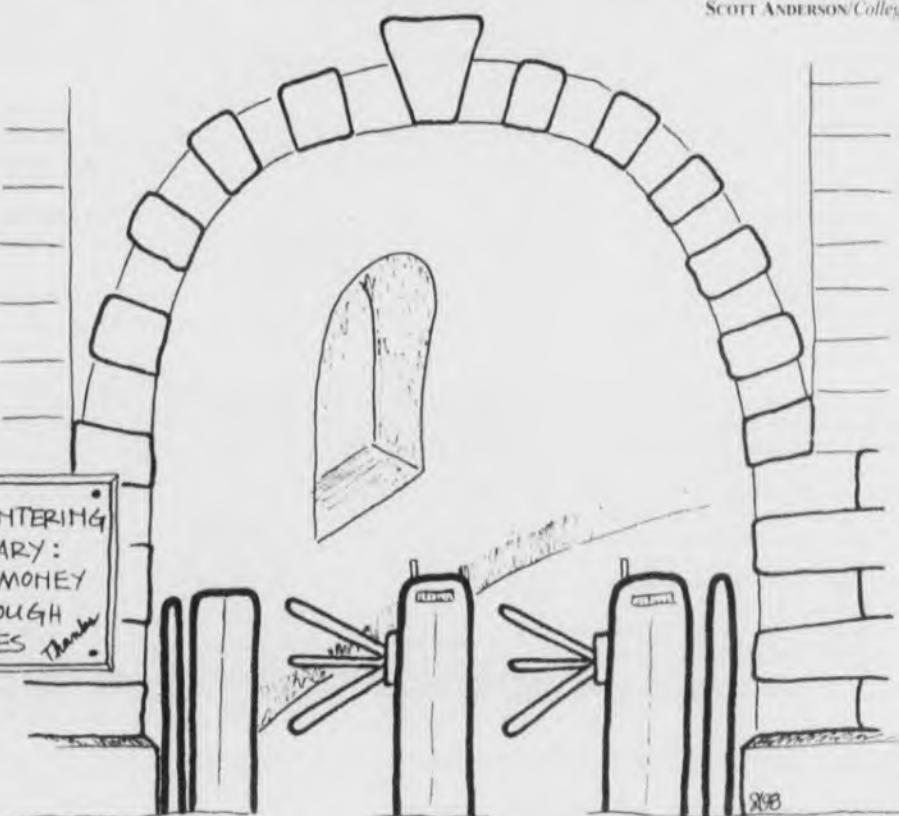

Tying it all together — a university that fails to adequately fund its library system will experience difficulty retaining and acquiring faculty. Without a large-enough pool of faculty, professors are called up to teach too many courses each semester, allowing them too little time to devote to each student, each course and their research. The assault of too little time devoted to research, combined with inadequate library resources to assist them in the process of applying for grants or writing papers, eventually results in a loss of reputation for the university. This loss of reputation, along with the lower quality instruction, results in lower starting pay offers to recent graduates, fewer offers overall, less opportunity for alumni and fewer new students attracted to K-State.

What's the most insidious part of this downward spiral? It's slow, laden with inertia and doesn't happen in a vacuum. One could find a dozen different reasons for the same downward spiral, so the effects of inadequately funding a library aren't necessarily obvious until the consequences are already being felt and are costly, if not impossible, to completely repair.

2) It's not a privilege to use the library, it's a right. I couldn't agree more. But is it a privilege to allow ourselves to get hit by a slow-moving bus? If we as students allow journal subscriptions to be cut due to our unwillingness to contribute, we are only defending our privilege to obstinately refuse to do what's right. The Legislature has shirked its responsibility for many years, and while it's shameful, a refusal on our part to shoulder part of the burden will not garner its support. Only direct, forceful lobbying will garner the additional support post-secondary education in the state of Kansas requires.

3) Hale Library shouldn't have been built, and the money could have been used to cover the rising cost of journals. That's fine and dandy, except that the Hales offered K-Staters the chance to markedly improve upon what we had before. A library that offers students comfortable, quiet study spaces should be valued, not despised. Although it might not seem prudent to spend money creating such a large architectural space, that's only proper planning at work. Where are those study spaces going to be 50 years from now? Gone. If one builds a library just large enough to hold the volumes one has on hand, where does one put next week's shipment of journals? Most of what is now empty space will be filled with books and journals acquired in the future.

Assuming we find a way to provide the library with adequate funding, that is.

READERSwrite

Student body president cares about students, reader says

Editor,
I would like to show my support for the work that Tim Riemann has done as student body president. He is a leader who cares more about student well-being than for gaining personal glory.

Instead of sticking his head in other people's business, like Student Publications Inc., he stayed focused on what he was responsible for. Riemann worked hard to keep the Lafene Health Center fee in place, which will benefit all students at some point during their time at K-State.

He also tried to benefit K-State by implementing the plus-system, which was unfortunately voted down. He has weekly "Wildcat Chats" where students can voice concerns to him.

Riemann has also increased communication between Student Governing Association and campus organizations, such as the residence halls and multicultural groups.

As far as comparing Riemann to Jeff Peterson, I say thank goodness Riemann is not like Peterson. Riemann cares about the students, Peterson cared about himself.

So when gauging the success of a student body president, students should look at what that person did for the students, rather than how much controversy or headlines he/she made.

I commend Tim Riemann on a successful year and hope that other students realize what he has done for them.

Reader condemns coverage, says Collegian unfair, biased

Throughout this semester I have read the Collegian with mounting aggravation. The time has come that I use my voice allowed me by the First Amendment. I find the Collegian's continued biased coverage deeply tiresome.

The Collegian's accusations of fence straddling and poor leadership located within the Editorial Board's comments and the front page article quotes do not make Tim Riemann a bad student body president. It makes him an average politician. Does a promise for change and leadership ever go answered by any elected official?

Moreover, when was the last time any president did not take credit for something that was not necessarily the fruits of their labor, (think of any economic boom)?

By commenting on his pride in the Course Information Proposal he was merely following status quo. Riemann has done no more or less than any other student body president during my time at K-State.

The attempts to cover the true reason for Riemann's poor reviews are thinly masked. The Collegian, and more specifically its staff and editors, are still smarting from the sting of the recent clash with the Board of Student Publications.

Considering the amount of coverage it received, one would think Student Publications Director Ron Johnson's dismissal and subsequent rehiring was truly an important campus-wide issue when it was little more than a political power struggle within Student Publications and their funding source. The Editorial Board's portrayal of Riemann as the man behind the scenes out to get to the Collegian and Johnson is unfair and unsubstantiated.

The editors and staff of the Collegian need to step back and analyze the coverage of "relevant" issues. The Collegian is the only mass publication that the apathetic student body reads, and it's mainly for the crossword puzzle, the comics and to check where tonight's beer specials are (not necessarily in that order).

However, the Collegian is the only source for campus-wide news. Student fees help fund the Collegian, therefore, students deserve to hear the whole story in appropriate order of importance to K-State. The American media have lost most, if not all, of the respect the public once had for it. Do not make the same mistake.

Former student disappointed with state of K-State athletics

Editor,
I am an alumna of K-State, and I usually take pride in that fact, especially when it is regarding the education I received at K-State. However, I cannot say the same for athletics.

Although I was very happy with the successful 1997 football season and the success thus far with the basketball season, I am very disappointed with the news I've heard.

Michael Bishop was charged with battery, and Manny Dies was charged with possession of alcohol and marijuana.

I have one question for these athletes — are you as stupid as it sounds?

You are extremely lucky to have the athletic abilities that you possess, which most likely landed you a free ride to an excellent education, yet you choose to do drugs or get involved in fights. If you are such strong, powerful athletes why can't you say no to drugs or ignore some smart ass in the bars? I understand that what you do is your own business, but not when I, as an alumna, help pay for the education that you choose to make a mockery of.

Unfortunately, many people base their respect for a university on what they hear in the news, and that is usually sports related.

Bishop made a name for himself in the Fiesta Bowl as an outstanding athlete, yet he obviously doesn't care about his reputation if he chooses to assault three people in Aggieville — please grow up. Dies has also made a name for himself, yet he can't give up a simple thing like alcohol or drugs.

I don't respect any athlete who is so weak that they can't say no to drugs.

What kind of an example do they set for future athletes?

I just hope the future students of K-State base their opinion of my alma mater on the education they can receive rather than what they have heard about our star athletes in the news.

Julie Hennes
1993 K-State alumna

Student disturbed by ESPN misidentification of athlete

Editor,
I happened across SportsCenter on ESPN last night, and they were talking about the Manny Dies incident, but instead of showing a picture of Dies, they showed a picture of Ayome May.

This is a bit disturbing to me. I would feel sorry if May ends up with any stigmas due to the actions of Dies.

I would hope that ESPN might clear up this matter, but I doubt they will ever see their error.

Middle East protests will continue until U.S. finds oil addiction cure

"We don't want your racist war!" That was the plea thrown upon U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright in the town meeting at Ohio State.

The signs read "No more blood!" as hundreds picketed in front of the White House.

Anti-war sentiment was so bad in South Carolina that Albright had the audience hand-picked for her visit.

It might appear that the nation is divided in its views about how to cope with Iraq. However, the leaders of these anti-government outbursts are Middle Easterners. They are Middle Easterners living in the United States, taking advantage of our freedom of speech. Of course they will support Iraq.

The leader of the outbursts at Ohio State was obviously from the Middle East. Whether he was Muslim is unknown, but the accent was difficult to hear in his short interview with CNN.

This trend permeates newspapers and TV, where numerous articles and segments are devoted to this type of bias presentation. The thinking behind it is easy — Who better to speak out against Iraq than an Iraqi, or Jordanian or Palestinian? Their motives go far beyond the current crisis with Iraq. I have yet to see an American not associated with the Middle East leading the charge on Washington.

I think my sign would read "Stop giving us a hard time!" if I picketed the White House. America has had continuous problems with the Middle East at least since the establishment of Israel in 1948. Countries surrounding them support us one day and not the next. We bounce from conflict to conflict throughout the region. How long ago was it that we bombed Libya or worried about Iran?

Once the United States understands that everyone in that area hates us, the better off we will be. Oil keeps us addicted, somewhat like black cocaine, so that we keep coming back for more. America will always be in the Middle East. We should not be surprised when Middle Easterners in America speak out against our policy. They will not be happy until the United States pulls out entirely, and Israel is crushed.

Middle Easterners have always been picketing in the United States against our foreign policy and will continue long into the future. These people get front page news in time of crisis, but they represent the vast minority of Americans. The majority of Americans remember the hostage crisis in Iran, the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103, the invasion of Kuwait and the Arab-Israeli War. If I could picket in Iraq, I would. I don't think I would make it onto front page news.

The next time CNN has a segment on anti-U.S. foreign policy against Iraq, count the number of Middle Easterners presented. Likely, they will outnumber other nationalities. Realize that many countries in that area have despised the United States well before the Iraqi confrontation. Their nonsupport in the current crisis should be no surprise.

Johnson strives to give other students a chance

STUDENT LEADER FINDS INSPIRATION, SATISFACTION BY SERVING OTHERS.

CLAUDETTE RILEY
Kansas State Collegian

Trying to get Michael Johnson to talk about himself is almost as difficult as convincing him to take a day off from helping someone else.

Johnson, senior in electronic journalism and media studies, said his first brush with a community service project came in high school when his basketball team helped out with a Special Olympics practice.

"I got excited about it," Johnson said. "I had so much fun, so much to give. It was great to see people so involved."

The first time a former classmate from Garden City Community College invited him to a Alpha Phi Omega meeting, Johnson knew he wanted to join.

"The group was so close, and it was fun," he said. "There it was, a service organization, and I was looking for an outlet and a way to be helpful."

As part of his involvement in the active coed service fraternity, Johnson has been able to sing hymns to senior citizen groups in the community, assist with the Red Cross Blood Drive and raise money or donations for local charities.

As pledge master of Alpha Phi Omega, Johnson is responsible for educating and recruiting the 32 pledges.

"Basically, I look for anyone who has an open hand to the community," Johnson said.

He said the leaders he finds it easiest to follow are personable and lead by example.

"I have a hard time following someone who is in it for themselves. They have to be open and honest. To me, leadership is not only the ability to lead by example but also to be a great follower," Johnson said. "That's how you learn. You have to have an open mind."

Johnson said the 44 active members of Alpha Phi Omega inspire and motivate him to work harder.

"I ask myself if I'm working as hard as they are," he said. "They do things with so much energy and drive. It makes me want to keep up and do more."

Shortly after he came to K-State, Johnson visited the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity and became a member last spring.

"I had this very negative view of what fraternities were all about, but I was wrong," he said. "The first time I came, everyone made me feel so welcome and said a prayer before the meal.

I had a good feeling."

Johnson said juggling his commitments at the fraternity and Alpha Phi Omega are difficult.

"I have tough choices, but you get used to it," Johnson said. "One's a service fraternity and one's social, but both groups foster leadership and are open to diversity and push leadership."

As a Multicultural Ambassador and member of the Student Alumni Board, Johnson is able to reach out to high school students in communities all across Kansas.

Johnson said he draws from his own experiences when talking to students.

"I tell students there's no reason to take 18 hours unless you can handle it. I take 14 hours so I can be involved. I'd rather be here a little longer if it means I can get better grades and get more out of it."

A newperson on KSDB-FM 91.9, the campus radio station, Johnson reads the noon news each Tuesday and Thursday.

While at Garden City High School, Johnson, a 1994 graduate, was on the varsity basketball team and was involved in broadcasting news and bulletins on the school's station.

After high school, Johnson's love of basketball meant not remaining on the team at Garden City Community College where he described the sport as more of a job than a game.

However, his love for the game has never wavered, and during his freshman year of college, he coached a team at his former middle school.

This is Johnson's second year coaching students through the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department. He said the middle school students on his team are an inspiration.

"I have this one kid, he's not good, but he tries so hard," Johnson said. "There's points you get so frustrated you want to put your head in your hands, but then one kid has a lay up and gets his shot and has this big smile. It feels good when they work that hard and it pays off."

Teaching the game and getting students involved is Johnson's goal.

"They're intimidated with organized basketball," he said. "They're coming to learn the game and be relaxed. It's not about winning."

Johnson said he often talks about returning to his hometown or working in a school district where he can teach broadcasting and coach basketball.

"The reward is just helping people. I've had a lot of breaks and I just want to make sure other people have the same opportunities," he said.

SPORTS ROUND-UP

Sports Round-up is your daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports outside of K-State. Compiled from Associated Press reports.

BIG 12 MEN'S HOOPS

Nebraska 82, Texas Tech 65

LINCOLN, Neb. — Tyrone Lue scored 23 points and had seven assists and four steals as quick-starting Nebraska won its fifth-straight game, an 82-65 victory over Texas Tech on Wednesday night.

LUE

Playing amid published reports this week that he might leave school for the NBA, the junior point guard outdueled Texas Tech's Cory Carr in a battle of the top two scorers in the Big 12.

The win assured the Cornhuskers (18-10, 9-6 Big 12) of no worse than the fourth seed in next week's Big 12 Tournament. It also gave Nebraska its first winning record in conference play since going 8-6 in the Big Eight in 1992-93.

Nebraska was ahead 42-24 at halftime and the Red Raiders never trimmed the margin below 16 points in the second half. Nonetheless, a near-capacity crowd of 10,694 stayed to watch what could have been Lue's final home performance.

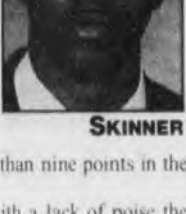

With three minutes left, fans chanted "One more year," each time Lue had the ball. Nebraska coach Danny Nee pulled four of his starters, but Lue stayed in until fouling out with 1:41 to play.

As he walked to the Nebraska bench, Lue raised his arms and waved to the crowd, who expressed their thanks with a thunderous ovation.

Baylor 69, Iowa State 54

WACO, Texas — A slow start by Iowa State was all the Baylor Bears needed to shut down the Cyclones on Wednesday night.

Brian Skinner scored 17 points in the final home game of his career, leading Baylor to a 69-54 victory that clinched the fifth seed for the Bears in next week's Big 12 Tournament.

SKINNER

Baylor (13-12, 8-7) opened with a 13-2 run enroute to a 32-22 half-time lead. Iowa State (12-16, 5-10) never got closer than nine points in the second half.

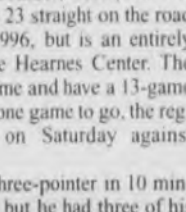

"We came out with a lack of poise the first four to five minutes of the game," Iowa State coach Tim Floyd said. "Of the 12 turnovers in the first half, probably half of them were unforgotten. Our team has not been a very good comeback team all year long."

Missouri 86, Colorado 67

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Reserve point guard Dibi Ray had four steals and two assists in the first half, helping Missouri bury Colorado early in an 86-67 victory Wednesday night.

Kelly Thames had 19 points for Missouri (15-13 overall, 7-8 Big 12), which led by as many as 22 points in the first half and took a 40-21 lead into the break. Norm Stewart beat Colorado coach Ricardo Patton for the first time in five attempts and Missouri won for only the second time in six games overall.

Charlie Melvin had 14 points and 10 rebounds for Colorado (12-13, 6-9), which has lost four in a row. The Buffaloes had won five of the previous six in the series, including an 81-78 victory in Boulder, Colo., Jan. 17.

MELVIN

Missouri has lost 23 straight on the road dating to Feb. 13, 1996, but is an entirely different team at the Hearnes Center. The Tigers are 13-1 at home and have a 13-game winning streak with one game to go, the regular-season finale on Saturday against K-State.

Ray had a lone three-pointer in 10 minutes in the first half, but he had three of his steals in a 16-2 run that put Missouri ahead 34-12 with 4:11 left in the half. Woods and Lee each had two three-pointers in the run.

After making only three of its first 10 shots, Missouri made eight of the next 11 attempts.

At one point in the half, Colorado had twice as many turnovers (10) as baskets (5) and was five-for-20.

Pro bowler attracts attention

at movie premiere in New York

NEW YORK — With all of the stars on hand to celebrate the premiere of the film "The Big Lebowski," it was a surprise that bowler Brian Voss attracted as much attention as he did.

After the showing of Joel and Ethan Coen's latest film, the movie's stars, Jeff Bridges, John Turturro and Steve Buscemi, along with celebrities like John McEnroe, James Caan and Lauren Bacall went bowling for charity.

And they all turned to Voss for tips on their game. In between giving lessons, Voss sent two balls down the lane at once, watched them crisscross midlane and hit the pins in a strike.

That impressed Bacall, who admitted to Voss that she never even knew that there were professional bowlers.

But she did say, "From now on I'll follow you on ESPN."

►TY SIMS SCORES 26 POINTS, LEADS WILDCATS TO VICTORY OVER AGGIES FOR 12TH VICTORY IN BRAMLAGE.

SUN DEE MILLS

Kansas State Collegian

The final score — K-State 95, Texas A&M 80. But it wasn't even that close.

At times in the Cats' 12th home victory this season, K-State led by as many as 23 points. The Cats last single-digit lead, of nine points, occurred at 10:54 in the first half.

"The game was never really in striking distance for them," Coach Tom Asbury said. "But I really don't think they're that bad a ball club."

The Cats jumped out to an eight-point lead before Aggie guard Steve Houston sank A&M's first bucket. K-State never lost that lead.

With junior forward Manny Dies benched due to his arrest Sunday morning and guard Duane Davis out for the season with an ankle injury, K-State looked to sixth man Ty Sims to make a contribution. Asbury put Sims in the starting lineup Tuesday. Sims said he was expecting it.

"I had an idea when the incident happened that disciplinary action would be taken against Manny," Sims said. "I just thought, 'This is my turn, right here.' I hoped Coach was looking to me for that."

Asbury might have been looking to Sims for production, but he got more than he bargained for. Sims was the game's leading scorer with 26 points. Sims went eight-of-eight from the field and 10-of-13 from the foul line. He was the Cat to visit the foul line most often as well.

"I expected a good performance from Ty, sure," Asbury said. "But nobody goes eight-for-eight. You never anticipate that."

Sims said he expects when he will have a good game.

"I was playing more at the beginning of the season, but I haven't been satisfied with my game lately," Sims said. "At Iowa State, my shots weren't dropping. Tonight, I felt like I could get it going."

Besides Sims, four other Cats scored in double figures. Sophomore Josh Reid put up 11 points, including three-of-five from the three-point line. Junior Ayome May added 10 points, and senior Aaron Swartzendruber was perfect on the court, making four-of-four from the three-point line and two-of-two from the charity stripe.

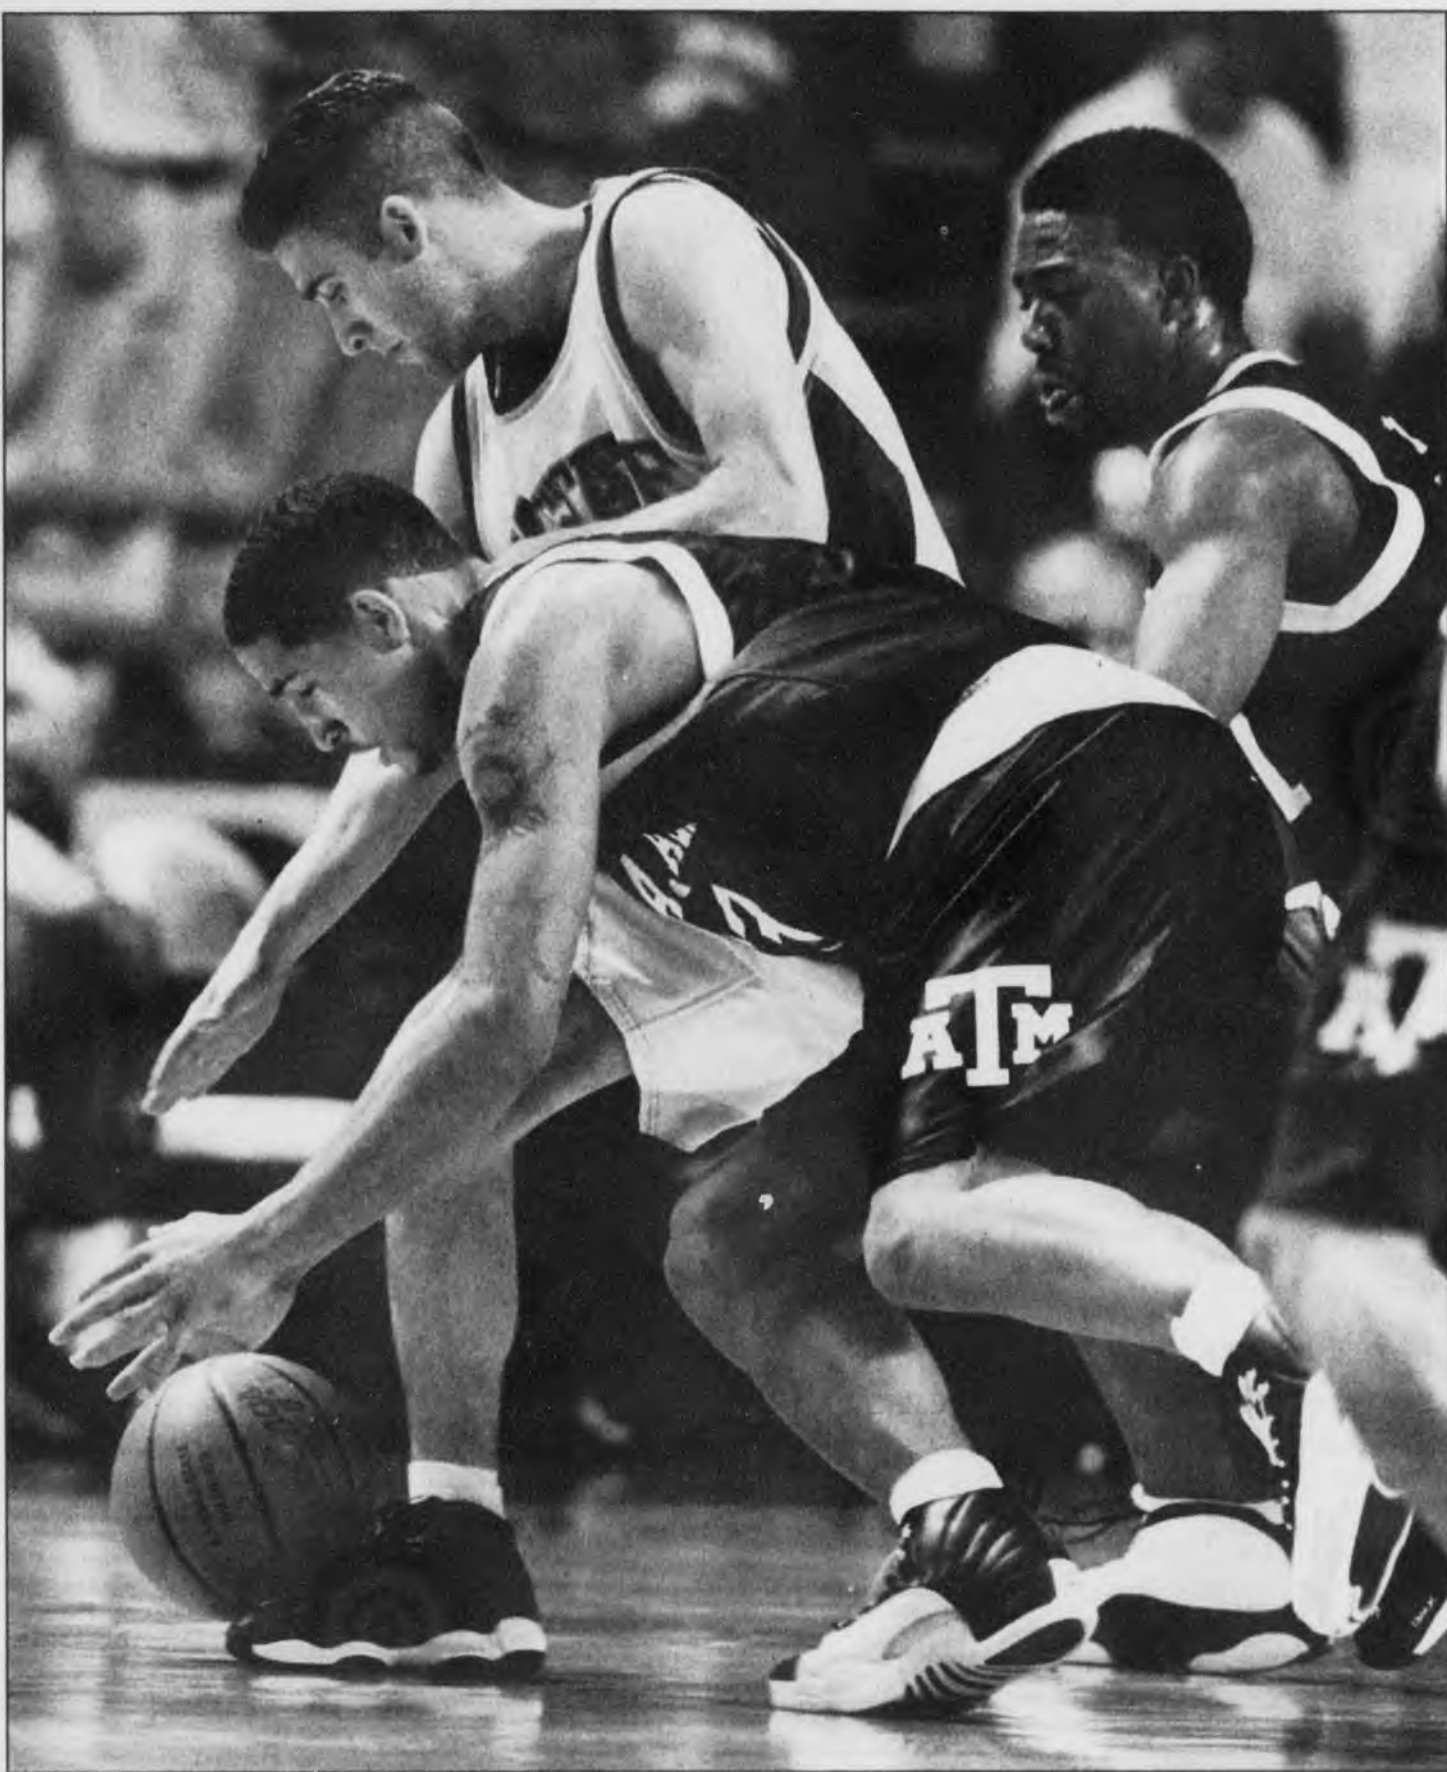

"Aaron just took great shots," Asbury said. "He understood what would be a great climax to his career and didn't look to force anything."

Junior Shawn Rhodes recorded his eighth double-double, putting up 17 points and 10 rebounds. He said no one was affected by the outside occurrences of the players on the bench or the seniors playing their last game.

"Every time this team has faced distractions, we've managed to play really well," Rhodes said. "Tonight was no exception. We're tough-minded guys and try to go out and play with a lot of pride."

Rhodes said he felt both Swartzendruber and fellow senior Marcus McCollough had satisfactory endings to their careers in Bramlage Coliseum.

"At first, I was disappointed," Rhodes said. "It seemed like a lot of the fans weren't in the game. But at the end of the game, the fans showed how much they care about these guys."

Cats pluck Bluejays; Marn continues hitting streak

JEREMY KELLEY

Kansas State Collegian

It was a cat-n-bird matchup as K-State battled Creighton on Wednesday at Frank Myers Field, and as natural rivals go — the Cats devoured the Bluejays 9-8.

Creighton hopped on the Cats early, earning five runs in the top half of the second. Outfielder Ovid Valentin walked and stole second. Center fielder Dan Lawler walked and Jorge Burgos blooped a bunt over pitcher Pat Hertzell and reached first. Hertzell lunged at Lawler and tagged him out going to second.

Second baseman Vince Pietro ripped a double to the gap in left-center and scored Valentin and Burgos. Shortstop Kenny Sarna hit a chopper down the right field line and knocked in Pietro. With Pietro on, Kevin Frederick, who is batting .450 on the year, hit a monster homer over the trees in left center.

K-State inched its way back into the contest in the fourth inning off a two-out rally. Left fielder Quinn Cravens smacked a double to the warning track in left center. First baseman Chet Savage then pounded his first home run of the year — a lofty shot to left field.

"With two outs those guys got quality at-bats," K-State head coach Mike Clark said.

The Cats peeked away at the Bluejays' lead again in the fifth inning.

Center fielder Eric Sommerhauser led off with a double of the warning track in left field. Shortstop J.D. Loudabarger followed with his third double of the day that scored Sommerhauser.

Designated hitter Brian Bobier followed with yet another double, this one falling just inside the line in right field scoring Loudabarger. Third baseman Josh Marn added to the count with a double of his own to center field, scoring Bobier and tying the score at five runs.

"None of them were fly balls. They were almost line-drive hits," Clark said. "We had a ton of hits that went for extra bases. That's just great baseball."

Creighton added two more runs in the sixth to regain the lead. With the bases loaded, K-State pitcher Chad Cosens walked in one run and then was relieved by David Meares, who allowed one unearned hit.

The Cats stormed back in their half of the seventh inning. With two outs, Marn pounded out his fourth homer of the year to right-center field. Right fielder Andy Silva followed with a homer to left field, his first of the season which tied the score at seven runs.

"We got some key hits in some key situations and that really helped the morale of the team," Loudabarger said.

Bluejay Troy Carley knocked a home run to left field, putting Creighton on top 8-7.

The Cats came back in the eighth with two runs and took the lead. Jay Martin pinch-hit for second baseman Chad Tabor and doubled down the right field line.

Sommerhauser then lofted a towering homer to dead-center field and clinched the win for the Cats, 9-8.

Pitcher Trent Bridges faced two batters in the ninth inning and picked up the win for the game, his first of the season. Silva replaced Bridges and earned the save for K-State who moved to 5-5 on the year.

Loudabarger went 3-5 with three doubles. That mark tied the K-State record for most doubles in a game. Marn continued his hitting streak to 10 games going 3-4 with a single, double and homer and two RBIs.

The Cats begin conference play this weekend against Missouri with a three-game set in Columbia.

Senior basketball players likely to finish collegiate career at Big 12 Tournament

Another year of Big 12 basketball is winding to a close, and this season it looks as if both Wildcat teams might be out of the postseason running. Even if the men and women both win their games Saturday, it might take a few wins in the Big 12 Tournament to propel either team further.

Don't think this can't happen. As a rookie writer for the women last year, I packed one bag with only a few clothes in it for Big 12 tourney week. Luckily, I'm from Kansas City, and could wear stuff I had at home, because I was there for an entire week while the women knocked off ranked opponent after ranked opponent.

Challenges both teams need to hurdle keep popping up. The women are in dire need of a Big 12 road win, and the men need wins in general.

Not an easy task, because Texas A&M came to Bramlage Coliseum on Wednesday night fired up to get its first Big 12 win, period. The women were on the wretched road Wednesday night, and this weekend the men head to Missouri's Hearnes Center — a place No. 4 Kansas has problems coming away from with a win.

And the women? Well, for senior guard Brit Jacobson's last home game, the Cats play host to all-American Alicia Thompson and No. 5 Texas Tech. What a fun way to end your career — either knocking off a possible Final Four team or losing in a big, big, big way.

But let's think back to October and what was expected of the women's team for this season. The women lost four seniors, three of whom started for a substantial amount of time and all of whom provided exceptional leadership both on and off the court.

In January, K-State coach Deb Patterson said she wasn't sure her team would get a win during the entire month.

And yes, the team has suffered injuries, dry spells offensively on the court and substantial losses. But the team also beat tough Kansas, Colorado and Baylor teams at home during the very same month Patterson feared.

Sophomore center Angie Finkes is coming into her own as a force inside, scoring lead figures for five of the Cats' past seven games. Junior combination player Jenny Coalson has stepped up on the offensive end of the floor with her point contribution while averaging five assists a game.

Now, freshmen aren't usually expected to walk onto a Division I-A court and be extremely successful, but forward Brandy Harris and point guard Kim Woodlee have managed to do so. Woodlee is the nation's leading freshman three-point threat, and Harris has had her share of high-scoring games, with her career-best 18 points coming at Missouri. Jacobson will finish her last season with her head held high — she's averaging 13 points, four steals and four assists a game. She knows how lucky she's been to have the ups and downs in her college career and looks forward to her final games with hopes that the team performs to its level of capability. "Last year was a smokescreen," she said. "We had four seniors, so it was somewhat easy. But I'm still here, and I'm still working with hard things. I don't have any regrets at all."

It's too late to encourage team support for the men — assuming readers of this page were at Wednesday night's game to see Aaron Swartzendruber and Marcus McCollough play in Bramlage for the last time. But if you've never seen the women play, you're missing out.

Something else to think about — the Cats rank in the top-25 colleges for attendance at women's basketball games, with an average attendance of 2,234 at home.

Last I heard, the Cats were beating Kansas in this category, not that that should be incentive to go.

See two great teams play Saturday night. See an amazing all-America player in Thompson. Wish Brit a fond farewell. And enjoy a good night of basketball, the last one in Manhattan this season. That should be incentive enough.

Strecker Gallery showcases primitive spiritual artifacts from Indonesia

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Walking into the Strecker Gallery during the month of February is like walking into the local explorer's club.

Gone, however, are the stuffed tigers and zebra-skin rugs of less sensitive days. Instead, powerfully spiritual objects line the walls, pedestals and floors of the tightly packed gallery.

Carved wooden statuettes, rare shields, delicate puppets, exquisitely rare fabrics and masks are arranged like a kind of bazaar. Architectural elements — like intricately carved wooden house pillars — are placed high on a shelf, indicating their proper placement within a traditional Irian Jaya tribal home.

Strecker recently has had to close in its larger gallery spaces because it no longer occupies the full floor and hallway of its building downtown. The result, especially on busy gallery opening nights, compresses the view — which works well with this fascinating show of cultural artifacts.

The show is really the collection of Leks Santoso, a self-described jungle explorer and entrepreneur who has befriended several of the native people of his homeland of Indonesia. Santoso grew up on Java, but travels extensively between the other islands of Borneo, Bali and the hundreds that make up the country.

Santoso gives a percentage of profits from the sale of these cultural artifacts to help the native people of the islands with modern improvements and education.

Recent economic downturns in Indonesia, particularly the runaway inflation that has left many citizens in ruins, doesn't bode well for the native people as the government will likely spend its money not on natural preservation and protection of the natives, but on bailing out the big businesses that have turned southeast Asia into an economic powerhouse.

"The only way I can help my people is through tourism," Santoso said, referring to the tours he gives of the various native villages. "I learn directly from the people, not from the books, which have a different perception."

Santoso said intertribal war is still very much a part of the culture, although cannibalism has largely died out. He said spiritual rituals remain the main focus of the Irian Jaya peoples, which include several tribes, from which most of the objects were bought.

Therefore, many of the objects on exhibition are part of rituals involved in fighting off evil spirits. A ceremonial mask with natural whiskers and stylized facial features was used by warriors to fight off the spirits of those they had killed in battle.

A Sumbanese sacred house-connecting pillar is a central architectural element of the home, because to bless just one pillar the native people can sometimes sacrifice upward of 40 buffaloes. Many tribes still sacrifice chickens to "read" signs on the chickens' livers.

"Since the missionaries have come to Indonesia, only rare places still believe in the sacrifice of buffaloes," Santoso said.

Some of the exhibited pieces are funny, such as a contemporary Asmat wood carving of two people, one of which is being swallowed by a crocodile — apparently not a rare occurrence on the jungle rivers of the Irian Jaya.

Sumbanese homes are built to resemble humans, with an elongated crown on top — closer to the gods — that holds many of the holy objects on display at Strecker.

"Your house must be completely protected," Santoso said. "Our people believe in good and bad spirits. Magic powers can make you ill."

Santoso said the native people will place ancestral poles as part of the traditional Merapu, or local belief, in front of their houses. He said the pole represents an ancestor and is prayed to for protection.

The show is part of Strecker's annual ethnic artifacts show, which usually focuses on African cultures. It's organized by Linda Hahn and Phil Ward.

Hahn said she spent six weeks in Indonesia last summer, where she met Santoso.

Album anything but typical

► DiFranco's latest album uses different instruments, creates ingenious sound.

BRANDI HERTIG
Kansas State Collegian

At this point in her career, Ani DiFranco could put out an album comprised entirely of her making farting noises into the microphone, and her throngs of devoted fans would hail it as genius.

Her latest release, "Little Plastic Castle," though void of such noises, can still be called genius.

Those who have followed DiFranco throughout her career know this album is a departure from earlier recordings, utilizing brass sections and concertinas with her standard sometimes lilting, sometimes slashing, guitar.

Such a departure, albeit gradual, can sometimes really piss a solid fan base off, and the attempt can somewhat backfire in the musician's face (see the Indigo Girls' last album, "Shaming of the Sun" for a prime example).

But this is Ani DiFranco we're talking about here, and she pulls everything off with style.

"Little Plastic Castle" shows the spectrum of DiFranco's musical prowess. She shows her soft and mellow side right next to her ragingly furious side.

And then there's the side her fans have seen very little of.

The album's first and title track starts off with a sweet and simple guitar line and DiFranco's New York-accented voice.

Then cue in the horn section, the bass and the drums — it's a party and we're all invited, but it's unlike any other party we've been to before. And let's not start associating the horn section with ska.

The sound she has isn't something that lends itself well to categorization or labeling. It's a new sound for DiFranco and her fans, but it's one she does tastefully.

Recently admonished by some for a few of her newer songs not being as political (and more about personal feelings) as previous ones, DiFranco responds to her critics in the title track, saying, "People talk about my image like I come in two dimensions, like lipstick is a sign of my declining mind."

DiFranco concert-goers will experience something of a déjà vu with some of the songs. Though "Gravel" is the only song that has been previously released ("Living In Clip"), many of the other songs are spookily familiar, because she did many of them in concert before the album's release.

Like her previous albums, poetry is dropped here and there. Set to music, the poems walk a tantalizing fine line between rap and singing. "Fuel" offers up an array of her fiery political views, with lines such as "and we can choose between the colors of the lipstick on the whores cuz we know the difference between the font of twenty percent more."

The beginnings of several songs are quite intriguing. "As Is" starts off with a "50 Ways to Leave Your Lover"-like drumbeat and a guitar line similar to the title track's, but in a different key. "Two Little Girls" has almost a country-western twang to it, in a charming and dark sort of way ("this little girl breaks furniture, this little girl breaks laws").

Perhaps the hardest pill for hard-core fans to swallow is "Deep Dish."

Starting off with the horn section full frontal, the song includes a spoken word portion. The spoken words are not done by DiFranco or even drummer/sometimes backup singer Andy Stochansky, but by someone named Pat Martin Bradley. The song also breaks into an occasional disco groove. Though it's one of the catchiest songs on the album, it's also the greatest departure from DiFranco's typical sound.

It's bold. It's daring. It's got a continuous thread of the symbolism of cats looking into a fish bowl.

It's DiFranco's best album to date.

An amazing feat, considering each of her albums have been tough acts to follow.

Woman charged with mail fraud

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Was it a pyramid scheme, or the efforts of a deeply religious woman to turn small church savings accounts into an endowment?

The trial of Priscilla Deters opened Tuesday with two different depictions of the Walnut, Calif., woman. She is accused of cheating pastors and church officials in Kansas and 20 other states out of more than $6 million.

The prosecution said Deters, 63, was operating a pyramid scheme. The defense calls it a misunderstanding that has ensnared Deters, who was trying to create an endowment.

Deters is charged with 13 counts of mail and wire fraud.

In the prosecution's opening statement in U.S. District Court, Assistant U.S. Attorney Annette Gurney described Deters as a scheming thief who used her religious contacts to take advantage of unsuspecting church officials.

Among the alleged victims were the Church of the Nazarene in Hays, Kan.; Barclay College in Haviland, Kan.; Millhuff Ministries in Olathe, Kan.; and Mid-America Yearly Meeting of Friends Church, a Wichita organization that served as regional headquarters for Quaker churches in Kansas, Colorado, Oklahoma and Texas.

The Kansas groups lost $233,000, Gurney said, after being told how easy it was to double an investment under Deters' program. Back home in California, Gurney said, Deters was spending more than $600,000 of the money on herself and relatives.

Defense attorney Steve Gradert said Deters began to dabble in Christian fund raising in California after 25 years of teaching school.

She ended up running a shared savings program that allowed small churches and religious groups to combine relatively small amounts of money into a larger pool, generating profits that would be shared by investors. Her early successes, Gradert said, prompted a stampede of church officials who wanted in on the program.

The trial is expected to last two weeks.

Researcher retires, leaves KSU legacy

AMY BICKEL
Kansas State Collegian

When Tim Donoghue first came to K-State in 1989, one of his goals was to improve K-State's research program.

Eight years later, research grants have risen from $20 million in 1989 to $53 million in 1997.

Donoghue, dean of K-State's Graduate School and vice provost for research, will conclude a 35-year career in June. He has taught physics and been an administrator in that time.

He said he liked what he saw when deciding to come to K-State.

"This was a good opportunity — chief research officer and dean of Graduate School, a new position created when I came to K-State," Donoghue said. "I saw a good opportunity with the provost. He clearly had a vision where he wanted the university to go."

Donoghue spent 27 years at Ohio State University before coming to K-State. He was a physics professor and co-director of the university's research facility. He also served a three-year term as the university's associate dean for research in the Graduate School.

One of Donoghue's many accomplishments at K-State was helping with the creation of the biotechnology core facility in 1991, which does DNA analysis, DNA sequencing and other experiments with molecules.

"If you have a facility like this, it gives faculty and students the ability to do research. Many want to do research and don't have the instruments to do it. Now they can," he said.

Donoghue has also been trying to recruit more minority students to attend K-State for graduate school.

One way is through the Summer Undergraduate Research Opportunities Program, which he created to bring minority undergraduates to campus in the summer and have them work with faculty members on research.

This allows prospective students to see the facilities K-State has to offer and lets them consider K-State as a place where they can further their education.

To get programs such as this started, Donoghue first had to get K-State's research program back on track.

To do this, he told faculty about

JEFF COOPER/Collegian

TIM DONOGHUE IS DEAN OF K-STATE'S GRADUATE SCHOOL, AND VICE PROVOST FOR RESEARCH. ONE OF DONOGHUE'S MANY ACCOMPLISHMENTS AT K-STATE WAS HELPING WITH THE CREATION OF THE BIOTECHNOLOGY CORE FACILITY IN 1991.

the opportunities for grants that were available. One way was through a newsletter he distributes to faculty every week outlining different opportunities.

"I tried to get them to think big," Donoghue said.

With newer facilities, faculty members now have the tools they need to do research.

The faculty sends in proposals and competes on the national level for grants.

"You get to see what the faculty can do and see their ability and enthusiasm because they couldn't do this before," Donoghue said.

All research grants received by faculty are put in a book of research accomplishments.

Donoghue said this way others can see what K-State research is doing, and it gives the faculty members some recognition.

He also helps the faculty establish patents on its research. Since 1992, 62 patents have been issued to the K-State Research Foundation.

Donoghue said he was going to miss the students, faculty and the friendliness of the university.

"Everyone smiles at you and says 'Hello.' Friendliness shows when visitors are here. These are nice qualities to have around," he said.

An interim administrator will fill Donoghue's position when he leaves in June, said Provost James Coffman. Whoever ultimately takes Donoghue's job will have big shoes to fill.

"He brought to K-State the ability to articulate a better research program," Coffman said. "He put in place an infrastructure so faculty could achieve that."

He also said Donoghue was a link between research programs and local, state and regional development efforts. Donoghue said he would find plenty to do during his retirement.

"I may set up a research program — do some reading," he said. "I have all the time in the world."

Senate changes spending rules during campaign

oversight.

"I really can't imagine someone effectively tinkering with the guidelines for the sole reason of helping their campaign," Riemann said. "I certainly don't think that's what happened here."

The summary of the bill referred to the omission of the clothing clause as "accidentally and unintentionally left out of the election code."

Senate Chair Jeff Dougan said the bill simply corrects an inadvertent mistake.

"All legislative bodies do this," Dougan said. "It was a legitimate mistake and there was no reason not to change it."

But some candidates for student body president — the race in which T-shirts are most commonly used for publicity — don't agree that the bill was pushed through without a political agenda.

Bret Glendening, an agriculture senator and presidential candidate, said he thought the bill's sudden emergence and passage was interesting.

"I know when we were starting our campaign, we were operating under the assumption all of our T-shirts had to be accounted for — sold or not," Glendening said. "I think it's possible some candidates violated this, and this bill keeps them from being kicked out of the campaign."

"I don't think it's fair to the other candidates who don't have access or the right to propose legislation in Senate that caters to their needs," he said.

Glendening said he questions how ethical it is to change the election guidelines mid-stream.

"There were so many hours last semester spent in committee, in Senate, outside of Senate. I don't know how anybody could be reading the guidelines and say, 'Oh, shit, something's missing,'" Glendening said. "I don't think it was a clerical oversight at all."

Tracey Mann and Chris Van Tyle, both presidential candidates, are also in Senate. Mann, Van Tyle and Glendening abstained from voting on the bill.

Mann said he thought the provision was mistakenly omitted and that led to a great deal of confusion. He said he hadn't overspent before the bill was passed, but has since spent above the $815 limit. He said his campaign expects to sell at least 400 T-shirts.

Van Tyle, who plans to purchase 140 T-shirts, said he didn't think it was right to change election guidelines mid-election.

"John (Stucky, his running mate) and I had worked our budget from the very beginning to keep within the $815 limit," Van Tyle said.

Van Tyle said some candidates who aren't in Senate weren't ever told about the possibility of changes and haven't been informed of the new rules.

"I think it's a raw deal. I have tried to contact some of them myself," he said.

Elections Committee Chair Ryan Kerschen was unavailable for comment.

Presidential candidate Trey Hock said he thinks it's silly to change the guidelines.

"If you're able to front $2,000 for 500 T-shirts, that's something the students should know," Hock said.

Hock, who hasn't been contacted by the elections committee about changes in the rules, said he thinks the $815 limit is enough.

Greg Davis, also a presidential candidate, was not available for comment.

An election violation, such as spending more than the $815 limit for presidential campaigns, could mean removal from the ballot if a campaign grievance is filed with Senate's Elections Committee.

Though candidates are required to fill out a campaign expenditure report, there is no way to determine if that is what the candidate actually spent.

Internship gives students better job opportunities

necessarily expecting something in return. He said this affects the way the interns get involved with the projects.

"We're not just doing this for educational purposes, we're doing it also for community service, so it's different than creating a contrived project in line for the intern," Tucker said. "They really do have to deliver, because our services are for a fee."

Brian Ruff, senior in mechanical engineering, said it helps to see projects through from the concept phase to prototyping, rather than just seeing a small piece of a project in the classroom.

"It's difficult to teach project skills or design skills. You learn it by doing it really, and there's talent involved, but practice helps a lot," Ruff said.

Tucker said he has been so busy getting the MLC started, he has not had a lot of time to promote it.

"We are very much wanting to tell the story about what we're doing to as many as we can. It's not like we're trying to keep this a secret or keep our approach specific to us," Tucker said.

"I truly believe that this is the way to do this type of an education process, and that the more people that understand it and get involved with it, the more successful the whole concept will be."

Legislature denies responsibility of request sent to state colleges teaches media ethics.

"Raising this question sort of implies that there is interest ... to get involved in the content of the classes at universities."

The request to the Kansas Board of Regents institutions came from Russell Mills, a Legislative Research Department staffer, who was assigned the task of handling the request after someone in the Legislature asked whether state universities teach courses that relate directly to homosexuality or bisexuality.

Such requests from legislators are confidential, and both Mills and Ben Barrett, director of the research department, declined to identify the source of the request.

Asked if it was a one-person request, Barrett said, "I don't think I want to answer your question. Our requests are confidential. It's a request we've made on behalf of our bosses."

Barrett said state agencies are not required to respond to legislative requests for information.

"It's often in their best interest to do so, but we don't have any power to make them do anything," Barrett said.

Most inquiries so far have come from the news media, Barrett said, including the Chronicle of Higher Education.

Mills said he routed the request through the board and had not received any responses by Wednesday afternoon.

K-State officials said they ran a computer check of course titles and did not find the words homosexuality or bisexuality in any of them.

Speaker Pro Tem Susan Wagler, R-Wichita, and Rep. Carlos Mayans, R-Wichita, both aligned with House social conservatives, said they didn't know anything about the request. Similarly, Sen. Tim Huelskamp, R-Fowler, sometimes a spokesman for Senate social conservatives, said he knew nothing about it.

"Maybe we'll get another controversial issue for the session," Wagler said.

Bishop cleared of all charges in weekend brawl

Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy said Thursday afternoon that all charges against starting quarterback Michael Bishop in relation to a fight early Sunday morning in Aggieville have been dropped due to lack of evidence.

Bishop was arrested on two counts of aggravated battery and one count of battery for allegedly attacking Jeff Moore, senior in finance; Derrick Shanks, sophomore in fine arts; and Christopher Reed, Wichita.

"Further routine investigation of Riley County Police Department has demonstrated that it would not be proper to formally charge Mr. Bishop at this time," Kennedy said.

On Sunday, Moore said he was punched and knocked down by someone, and then Bishop and another guy began kicking him.

Wednesday, Moore said he was wrong in identifying Bishop as a participant after talking to him on Tuesday in regards to Bishop's involvement in the fight. Moore said Bishop told him he didn't hit him and he believed him.

"I never said Bishop hit me. I know that Bishop did not start the fight. He was there, but the guy that hit me first was not Bishop," Moore said. "I just want the people that were there to be the ones that get in trouble. If I can help Bishop out and make things right, then I will."

Shanks said Sunday that Bishop was not involved in the cause of his injuries, which consisted of facial abrasions and a broken tooth, or in causing Reed's injuries, which resulted in 38 stitches for several facial lacerations. Their injuries were inflicted in a fight prior to Moore's attack, where Shanks was a bystander.

On Wednesday, Crystal Turgeon, junior in pre-law, said she was at the scene of the fight in Aggieville and supports what Bishop told Moore.

"He was being a good role model by keeping me out of the fight and by him staying out of the fight," Turgeon said.

► K-STATE RODEO TEAM REACHES OUT, PROVES ITS SPORT IS ONE FOR EVERYONE TO ENJOY.

WYNN DALTON
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State rodeo team showed its soft side Thursday night during the Exceptional/Intramural Rodeo for children.

Special children came out and experienced six rodeo events. Participants paired up with K-State rodeo team members who went through each event to help the kids enjoy the ride.

Pearl Shoffner, Chapman, Kan., said she thought these events and the students helped her grandson's attitude.

"I think it's wonderful that they take time to do things like this. It really helps him," she said. "It makes him try harder because the students will help him. He's not frightened."

Felt costumes were placed over square bales of hay to depict bulls. A plank of wood was used to teeter the children as if they were riding a bull. Cowboys assured the children's safety as the bucking bell rang.

The same process allowed children to enjoy a bareback horse ride. They also were able to rope calf dummies and ride a real horse around a barrel.

Children simulated steer wrestling by riding a stick horse around a costumed hay bale and jumping off to wrap their arms around the steer's neck.

Clint Shoffner, of Alta Vista, Kan., said his son, Talon, has participated in five events like this.

"I think it's a great time," he said. "Talon enjoys coming to this event and the Kaw Valley one. He really enjoys coming."

Steve Frazier, K-State rodeo team coach, said the idea for the Exceptional/Intramural Rodeo came from the Kaw Valley Rodeo.

He said they designed the event for children ages 14 and under and encouraged participation through mailings to parents.

Ben Janssen, junior in agricultural technology management, said he appreciated the opportunity to give to the children.

"I think it's a great opportunity for the Kansas State Rodeo Club to give back to the community and help these kids experience something that they won't experience in everyday life, or at least something different," he said.

Janssen said he realized how important and special this event is to the children.

"It makes you realize how fortunate we are and that we take a lot for granted," he said.

Frazier said he supported this event because of the children and the smiles on their faces.

"Kids don't get an opportunity to do stuff like this. Everybody likes a horse," he said. "They can have exposure to the events where they're the primary stars of the events. Everybody's a winner."

Dance offers way to shake off dust

ALECIA TERRELL

The party isn't over tonight after the rodeo in Weber Arena.

Rodeo fans everywhere can pull on their boots and Wrangler jeans and go to Kickers. Following the evening's competitions, there will be a rodeo dance for all who want to attend.

"The night usually gets started around 9:30 or 10:00," Justin Lynn, Rodeo Club president, said.

Lynn said the dance is open to the public, but most of the people who attend are those who have been competitors in the rodeo.

Steve Frazier, K-State rodeo coach, said the proceeds from tonight and Saturday night go to the Rodeo Club's scholarship fund.

"The cover charge at the door is $3," he said. "It's really a lot of fun. The DJ plays country and rock music all night long."

Lynn recalled past rodeo dances and said they all have been successes.

"In the past it's been so crowded, fire marshals have had to come," he said. "Eventually they used the one-in, one-out policy."

Lynn said there were so many people, the bar ran out of beer.

"I guess at least we know it was a success," he said.

KSU Rodeo

The following is a list of events that will be going on during the KSU Rodeo through March 1. Tickets are $5 for adults or $6 at the door. Tickets for children 12 years and younger are $3 or $3.50 at the door. Tickets can be purchased at S Bar J Western Clothiers, Lee's Western Wear, K-State Union Bookstore or Weber room 134.

Weber Hall home to distinctive history, future industry leaders

WYNN DALTON
Kansas State Collegian

WEBER HALL

Weber Hall was built in 1947 and was named for Arthur D. Weber, a graduate of K-State.

He was head of the Department of Animal Husbandry, a past dean of the College of Agriculture and past director of the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station.

Weber Arena seats 3,600 people and is used to house animals, to exhibit livestock and as a teaching classroom. A collection of barbed wire is housed in the arena.

Weber Hall has a long and interesting history including a visit by jazz musician Louis Armstrong who played his trumpet in Weber Arena.

Weber is unlike most academic halls on campus — and not just because of its history.

The Department of Animal Sciences and Industry, which is housed in the building, has about 700 students. But the building has only four traditional classrooms.

Because of the nature of animal sciences, classrooms are exploratory — the rooms are equipped with modern technology that allows students to do research and evaluate meat and livestock.

"Weber Hall provides so many different types of opportunities for students to get a quality education, by enlightening them with knowledge in their field of study," said Diana Covell, sophomore in animal sciences and industry. "Students don't just hear the material. They experience animal science, and that makes them more prepared to go out in the work force."

Eight labs are used in graduate and undergraduate studies, including a food microbiology lab, a general analytical lab, a nutrition lab, where animal tissue and feed rations can be examined, and two physiology labs, one of which allows animals to be brought in.

Miles McKee, professor of animal sciences and industry, said K-State's meats lab was one of the finest in the country.

WEBER HALL PROVIDES SO MANY DIFFERENT TYPES OF OPPORTUNITIES FOR STUDENTS.

DIANA COVELL
sophomore in animal science, industry

The meats lab includes smokehouses, a sausage manufacturing room, two large walk-in freezers, a color display lab, a meat evaluation room and a sensory lab, where meat tenderness and bone density can be measured and electric sensors are used to cook meat.

Each year, K-State is host to the National FFA and 4-H Meats Judging Contest.

Because of the expertise K-State has in meats and livestock management, Weber is home to the International Meat and Livestock Program, which provides education, technology and promotion in animal agriculture and offers technical assistance in importing livestock.

In addition, Weber is home to the Livestock and Meat Industry Council Inc., which solicits and manages KSU Foundation funds for teaching, research, and extensions serving animal agriculture.

The building houses the Heritage Room, which is set aside to preserve the history of animal agriculture and the people who supported animal agriculture at K-State. It contains a collection of art, paintings, photographs and bronze sculptures.

Don Good, retired department head of animal sciences and industry, said history is important to the people involved in animal agriculture.

"One of the unusual things about the department and the whole program was that the historical aspect meant a lot to the people in animal agriculture. So we preserved as much of those things as we could to go in the Heritage Room and in the whole department," Good said.

Judging has a strong history at K-State. Since the first contest in 1903, K-State has recognized participants. Now those individuals are recognized on the walls of Weber Hall.

Air Force ROTC officer's promotion means increased management duties

Thursday afternoon marked a significant event in the life of a military officer. Capt. Steve Dorfman became a major.

The promotion from captain to major is a bigger step because it is the move from type grade to field grade.

Type grade is more of a staff position where field grade is like a management position. Christina Daniels, senior in accounting, said.

Type grade includes second lieutenant, first lieutenant and captain. Field grade is all ranks from major up.

The ceremony was attended by the Air Force ROTC cadets, university faculty, other military personnel, friends and family. Col. Stan Weir gave a short speech before the pinning. He spoke of Dorfman's work ethic and dedication to his job.

"In my 27 years I don't think I have ever seen anyone more ready for field grade and increased responsibilities than Capt. Steve Dorfman," Weir said.

Dorfman was pinned with a gold maple leaf by his wife and daughter. He received a standing ovation from the cadets signaling their thanks for his hard work with the corps. He thanked many people during his comments but first and foremost he thanked his family.

"Never forget your family. You don't get promoted on your own. Your family has to give you a lot. For them, I am eternally grateful," Dorfman said.

The major also had a few words for the cadets. "It's a dream. It is a reality. Cadets, my advice to you, do your job, do it damn well," Dorfman said.

Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity to convene national convention at KSU this weekend

Lambda Chi Alpha's national convention is at K-State this weekend.

The annual conference is expected to unite more than 150 active members and alumni for workshops, round table discussions and a banquet.

Chad Jackson, convention committee member and junior in pre-professional business administration, said the conference will bring men together to discuss fraternity issues.

"Every year we have workshops and round tables on recruitment, risk management, public relations, fraternity education and alumni events," he said. "We're having a formal banquet in the Union Ballroom Saturday night. That's when we will have our speakers."

Fred W. Suggs, K-State alumnus of the class of 1970, is now the national president of the fraternity and will be speaking at the banquet.

Ryan Lauder milk, convention committee member and senior in pre-medicine and Spanish, said they didn't know what message Suggs would be sharing at Saturday's banquet.

Jackson said the men from his chapter, Gamma Xi Zeta, sent delegates to give a presentation of their house at last year's convention.

"Gamma Xi Zeta is known as one of the best chapters of Lambda Chi, and last year our presentation won the honor of holding the convention here at K-State," Jackson said.

Lauder milk said the chapter hopes to gain progress out of this year's convention.

"We hope to improve on programs and to give this convention a K-State flavor," he said. "Our chapter is known for academics, leadership and involvement in the greek system, and we want to make national progress on all chapter operations."

Lauder milk said in the 1970s, every Lambda Chi chapter in the nation adopted an associate program. The associate program lets all members have equal rights.

"One of the things Lambda Chi doesn't have is a pledge program, we have an association program," Lauder milk said. "The K-State chapter was the first one to do this and basically the program is based on equality. All new members can vote, hold offices and attend chapter meetings."

Jackson said the convention will benefit every chapter if the delegates share the information they learned from the workshops. He said the convention will be informational as well as fun.

"On Saturday night we're having a pool tournament in the Union," Jackson said. "It will give us a chance to do something constructive together."

Paralyzed college student leaves hospital, seeks Kevorkian's help in killing himself

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. — A college student paralyzed by a virus has won the right to leave a hospital so that he can seek Dr. Jack Kevorkian's help in killing himself.

Roosevelt Dawson, a 21-year-old Oakland University student from Southfield, would become the youngest person known to have committed suicide with the help of Kevorkian.

"I hope to leave Saturday and go back to my mom's home," Dawson said. "From there, I'll probably be disconnected."

Dawson has been unable to use his arms and legs and has depended on a ventilator to breathe since a viral infection attacked his spinal cord 13 months ago.

On Wednesday, a court psychiatrist denied a request by Metropolitan Hospital in Grand Rapids that Dawson be declared incompetent and kept involuntarily, hospital spokesman Jim Childress said Thursday.

The hospital sought a commitment order after attorney Geoffrey Fieger, who represents both Kevorkian and Dawson, said he intended to seek his release.

Dawson's mother, Brenda Garner, said she is resigned to her son's wish to die.

"He gave me the keys to his Neon," she said. "That meant he had given up. There is no quality of life. And his keys were something that he cherished. He bought the car on his own. It's time to take it home."

CIA reportedly enlisting outside agents to sabotage Iraq's economics, politics

NEW YORK — The CIA has drafted plans to topple Saddam Hussein by enlisting Kurdish and Shiite agents to sabotage key economic and political targets in Iraq, The New York Times reported Thursday.

The plan, which would be the fifth covert attempt by the Central Intelligence Agency to get rid of the Iraqi president, must be approved by President Clinton. Many of the Clinton's advisers are skeptical of the proposal, according to the Times.

CIA Director George Tenet has told Clinton the plan is risky, the Times reported, and National Security Adviser Sandy Berger doubts the agency's ability to undermine Hussein.

The plan would try to weaken the Iraqi leader by damaging the country's economy, the Times said. It would target for destruction utility plants and government broadcast stations, and increase political pressure through propaganda programs such as a "Radio Free Iraq" broadcast to Baghdad.

"This is not a propaganda operation," an unidentified senior government official told the Times. "This is a major campaign of sabotage."

If approved, the plan could cost tens of millions of dollars and become one of the largest covert operations since the end of the Cold War.

Ex-Air Force ROTC cadet returns in charge of corps

KELLY DICKSON
Kansas State Collegian

This year Air Force ROTC welcomed back a familiar face.

Col. Stan Weir is now serving as the commander of Detachment 270, the K-State cadet corps. He is an alumnus of the corps and a 1970 graduate of K-State. He was in AFROTC when it was required for all college men.

"I knew that I wanted to be in the Air Force because the F-105 fighters out of McConnell, in Wichita, flew radar evasion routes over our farm, and I just knew I wanted to fly," Weir said.

Weir's family has a long tradition with K-State. Both his parents attended K-State. His dad's schooling was interrupted by World War II, but he finished after the war. His wife graduated from K-State, and both of his daughters now attend K-State.

Weir said he has an amazing love and spirit for K-State.

"I tried to walk on the basketball team, but I was too short, made several of the cuts, but missed. I ended up rowing for the crew and lettered on freshman crew. Then I decided I need to do something else," he said.

Weir is a member of Sigma Chi fraternity, was a yell leader for two years, vice president of Interfraternity Council, president of Varsity Men's Glee Club, president of the senior class of 1970 and is a member of Blue Key and several other organizations.

"I had a great time in college and enjoyed it immensely. Graduated and was commissioned and went to pilot training and ended up less than 70 miles from home. And I have been 27 years in the Air Force," Weir said. "One of the things I had always wanted to do was to give something back not only to Kansas State but also to the Air Force, and the best way to do that was this job. So I volunteered for the job and was fortunate to get the job."

Weir is responsible for each cadet in the corps. All freshmen and sophomores have to meet with him once a semester. These meetings are to check on how each cadet is doing in the corps and to discuss class schedules.

Another responsibility is meeting with the wing staff once a week so they can brief him on what they have done the past week and get his feedback.

"He really takes an active interest in each cadet in the program and has an amazingly positive attitude towards everything, and he is really terrific," said Mark Williams, cadet commander and junior in mechanical engineering.

Weir told stories of flying his K-State flag on different bases across the world and how he could almost always find a fellow K-Stater.

"I have purple blood. It is great to be back at K-State. We're just having a ball being back in Manhattan," he said.

JEFF COOPER/Collegian

COL. STAN WEIR APPLAUDS MAJ. STEVEN DORFMAN AS HE IS PINNED FOR HIS PROMOTION FROM CAPTAIN TO MAJOR IN WATERS HALL ON THURSDAY. COL. STAN WEIR IS NOW SERVING AS THE COMMANDER OF DETACHMENT 270, THE K-STATE CADET CORPS. HE IS AN ALUMNUS OF THE CORPS AND A 1970 GRADUATE OF K-STATE.

Retiring associate agriculture dean reflects on 34 years of accomplishments

SHERYL WILLIAMS
Kansas State Collegian

Incorporated into David Mugler's office decor is a plaque: "People don't care how much you know ... until they know how much you care."

Mugler, associate dean of agriculture and director of academic programs for the College of Agriculture, has lived by that credo during his 34 years at K-State.

"It's one thing to help students prepare for their career, but it's more important that we help them prepare for life," Mugler said. "We're in the people-building business."

Mugler, who will retire this year, received a bachelor of science degree in agriculture education in 1959. He came to K-State for the second time in 1964 for a one-year temporary appointment, leaving his position as an instructor at what was then Salina High School.

He never left K-State again, and except for a seven-year period when his time was split between agriculture and animal science, he has worked out of the same Waters Hall office his entire career at K-State. He received his doctorate in food science in 1969.

"It has been a wonderful experience for me," he said. "I actually have the best job on this campus."

He has received numerous national, state and university awards during his career, including the Distinguished Educator Award, the Golden Apple Award for Outstanding Service from the Kansas Foundation for Agriculture in the Classroom and the KSU Agricultural Faculty of the Year award.

Mugler said he takes pride in the overall improvements he has seen within the College of Agriculture. He said there has been a 45-percent increase in agriculture students in the past eight years, and the quality of students and of instruction has improved over the years, particularly in faculty advising.

"We take advising very seriously," Mugler said.

The College of Agriculture's dedication to advising has been a process of acquisition.

"Our faculty that has been assembled over the years, that work with students this way — they really care about students," he said. "They're really competent in their field. They are really committed to excellence, and they really challenge the students."

Mugler said he is thrilled to see the successes of the faculty. He said K-State agriculture faculty have been recognized with a national teaching award for the fourth consecutive year, making K-State the only university in the nation to receive four of these awards.

He also said he is proud of student accomplishments, pointing out that seven of the past 10 student body presidents have been agriculture students, including Student Body President Tim Riemann.

Mugler said he is reluctant to take personal credit for accomplishments within the College of Agriculture.

"Anything I've accomplished here at Kansas State University has been as a result of a team effort," Mugler said.

Marc Johnson, dean of the College of Agriculture, said it is Mugler's ability to enthuse people and to encourage them to be involved in teaching and advising that has resulted in so much success in terms of competitive student awards and faculty awards.

"He has established the culture which supports the teaching function of the land-grant university as the primary function, and he has one of the greatest, sincerest concerns for the success of our students of anyone I've ever witnessed," Johnson said.

President Jon Wefald said Mugler would have to be rated as a most valuable player for the College of Agriculture and K-State.

"He's been an outstanding adviser and mentor to thousands of students over the years, so to say that his role at Kansas State and within the College of Agriculture has been invaluable is an understatement," Wefald said.

A search is under way to fill Mugler's position, which he will vacate in June.

After retiring, Mugler plans to travel with his wife, Lois, spend time with their four children and their families, and devote more time to the Gideons, an international organization whose primary function is to distribute Bibles to hotels, hospitals, colleges and prisons.

Mugler said his philosophy is to teach by example.

"I am thrilled if I've made a difference in someone's life and helped them, encouraged them, pointed them in the right direction, helped them in developing their faith, their values, the person," he said.

KSU Rodeo a great chance to celebrate tradition

Break out the 10-gallon hats, shiny belt buckles and well-worn boots, the KSU Rodeo is in town this weekend.

Actually, there's no dress code at the rodeo. All events are casual and meant for the whole family.

At $6 for admission at the door, the rodeo events are prime entertainment for students. This is not only an opportunity to see well-trained animals and excellent athletes, but also an opportunity to experience part of what makes K-State nationally recognized.

The training, classes and research that happen north of Claflin Road often go uncelebrated in this community, although the College of Agriculture at K-State often gains international acclaim.

Don't miss the chance to cheer on the K-State rodeo team as it shows off some of the best and most well-known rodeo stock in the national rodeo circuit.

This is an opportunity for out-of-state students or those from larger metropolitan Kansas areas to experience the cultivated family traditions and rodeo expertise that stands as part of our state history.

In the past week, the rodeo has reached out into the community to organize and participate in the Junior Rodeo at Manhattan Town Center and the Exceptional/intramural rodeo where mentally and physically challenged students experienced different aspects of the rodeo.

The large turnout for this annual rodeo is another example of its overwhelming popularity. Don't miss your chance to see the K-State rodeo team and club athletes participate and the Miss Rodeo K-State coronation.

SPEECH UNLIMITED

Speech tournaments give another set of students chance to shine minus broken bones

Often times in today's society, we tend to overlook the successful-but-not-too-exciting-to-watch teams in order to cheer our little purple lungs out for the successful-and-exciting-to-watch-and-heh-we-understand-DUI teams. No, the K-State Speech Unlimited team doesn't have Classy Cats or throngs of fans at its tournaments, but maybe it should.

Team members travel to tournaments almost every weekend, usually to the nether-regions of neighboring states. And they don't just go, hang out, eat some free doughnuts and come home. They go, hang out, eat some free doughnuts and come home with all sorts of awards under their belt.

They spend hours each week memorizing speeches, practicing enunciation and figuring out which hand movement would go best at the third line of the fifth paragraph in their presentation.

Last weekend the team traveled to Topeka for the state tournament, Kansas Speech Individual Events. In the finals round of the persuasive speech competition, five of the six spots were K-Staters (and truth be known, all six of K-State's persuasion speakers should've been in the finals, but that's another story).

The top two speakers in that category go on to the Interstate Oratory competition, which is the oldest and arguably the most prestigious national speech competition. This year, like just about every year, those top-two spots went to K-Staters. Aaron Breitenbach and Clayton Johnson, both seniors in speech, won't be just representing our school at this tournament — they'll be representing our entire state.

K-State had people go to finals in every event it was registered in, taking first place spots in four of them. In the individual sweeps, K-State students took second and third. And, of course, K-State took first in the school sweeps.

Behind all of this is the team's coach, Craig Brown. In his 10th year of coaching at K-State, Brown is humble about his team's successes. It's those very successes that are proof of his coaching ability. He might not have bowl rings on his fingers or a stylish tan year 'round, but Brown consistently cranks out winners year after year. Team members say he's a nice guy who acts more as a friend than an authority figure, and he even lets them talk to the media when asked.

Helping him out is a team of graduate teaching assistants, people whom the members also consider friends. The GTAs not only spend valuable time coaching students and helping them with presentations, they can often times be found at a team member's apartment playing Atari. And though some have been known to use someone else's toothbrush at tournaments, the friendships are still strong.

The team even has its own language, a sort of jive monkey talk that one usually has to have explained to them. Extemporaneous speaking is referred to only as Extemp, and they get a little pissy if someone accidentally calls it Extemp. The talk about getting "legs" in events is about speaker points and rankings.

When team members lose, they don't throw hissy fits or cry. They accept the loss like adults and move on to the next challenge. Much to their credit, they don't stuff themselves into phone booths and make out at tournaments.

They won't get Sony PlayStations when they travel to Arizona for the national tournament in April. Sometimes they're lucky even to get food money.

They travel in school station wagons and vans. Some finish memorizing speeches while traveling in the dark. They usually have to share beds at tournaments. They probably are more successful compared with many of K-State's fine sports teams.

And they're at least better than Toastmasters.

Man should check his résumé; he's unqualified to play God

On several occasions I have been posed the question of whether morality should be legislated. On all occasions I answered with "I don't know." This was acceptable for a while, for how can one person have the answer to every question? But the time has arrived for me to put my opinion into writing.

First, a definition of morality must be established.

Morality is the quality of being virtuous or righteous. It is meeting a standard of right and wrong. Morality is the right choice of the two options. True morality adheres to a particular set of principles or laws.

I believe in what many term the Natural Law — a law that is higher or greater than our realm. It is essentially above us. Morality, in its true sense, is biblical principle. The Bible is the standard for measuring morality. If something is moral, it is righteous, good and virtuous. It is the Bible that acts as the standard for determining right and wrong. Essentially, I am stating that I believe in moral absolutes. Principles that do not change with time. The Natural Law is not dependent on what humanity thinks.

The second precedent I want to acknowledge is what I am calling humanity's morality, which in reality, may or may not adhere to the Natural Law. I believe that this morality of humans is either self-based or general-consent based. Rather than acknowledging, or simply refusing to believe in absolutes, many choose to base what they think is right (moral) on how they feel. It is their preference as to what is right and what is wrong. This would be self-based morality — judging right from wrong based on your standards, whatever they might be.

Now that morality has been discussed, I will answer the question. Yes, morality should be legislated.

To avoid confusion, a broader understanding of my position on this subject is pertinent. Therefore, explanation for my belief should be considered, and judgment should not be passed on what I did not say. I will aid you by clarifying three stereotypical errors.

1) In defense for legislating morality, I am not saying that Christians, like myself, should force God upon others. On the contrary, I think that is wrong. The choice is up to the individual. I do believe in freedom of that choice to choose, but not a state religion. Ideally, a perfect state would exist if by free will, everyone chose Christianity. But for it to be forced is contrary to what I am justifying.

2) For those who think of Biblical principles (that define this Natural Law) as being "do's" and "do not's," I remind them of the Golden Rule. This biblical principle is doing to others what you would want them to do to you. It is difficult, if not impossible, to go wrong by putting this into practice.

3) While everyone is entitled to their own opinion, not everyone's opinion is of equal truth. Therefore, I warn against human's morality. The altering forms of true morality (human's synthetic absolutes) afford no stability. And stability is much needed, especially in this age of so many opinions and thoughts.

However consequential the question of legislating morality might be, it is overshadowed by the standard on which that morality is based upon. If decisions of right and wrong and good and bad are decided because of moral absolutes, then good ultimately results. When shifting values decide what is right and what isn't, we endanger ourselves by trusting in human to play the role of God. I choose to let God be God and humans be humans.

Legislators' silly request demands silly response

Editor,

Recently, unidentified legislators demanded that department heads at all Kansas universities furnish the names of courses with homosexual and/or bisexual content. I say demand, not request, since by law the universities must comply when a deadline has been set. The information must be sent by today. I urge department heads across the state to reply to this demand with the same eloquent gesture our own sociology department suggested — by sending their entire course catalog.

At K-State, I have taught literature by gay writers and literature dealing with homosexual themes. I included these authors and works not in deference to a political agenda, but simply because it would be impossible to devise a syllabus without them. In every field of every discipline, homosexual people have shaped the body of knowledge universities are obligated to preserve and teach.

This is an obvious threat to academic freedom, but equally disturbing is that in a state where all public education is underfunded and high school students enter college often underprepared, there are politicians whose priorities are so skewed. At this university, our own obligation to preserve and teach essential knowledge is compromised by a dismally equipped library and a grossly underpaid faculty.

It is all the more disheartening that these anonymous legislators feel they have the time to make ridiculous requests to departments busy with the work of educating students, instead of seeking to solve the genuine problems afflicting us. It is my hope that their identities are revealed so that voters who support academic freedom and resent government waste can free even more of their time come November.

Vice president backs leadership of Riemann

Editor,

I am writing in response to the editorial and article from Wednesday. I felt the editorial and the article might have been written with a narrow view of student government. What happened during the hours spent at the Student Governing Association office and in the Student Senate room were not taken into account.

Tim Riemann is an individual who has been committed to the K-State student body throughout his college career. He has shown his humble leadership and ability to make a difference again and again. It concerns me that the Collegian and others are not able to recognize this true leader.

The student body president is charged with making decisions and policies for the benefit of the general student body. Does this mean that he needs to mold the students' opinions? I believe this would underestimate the intelligence of the students whom he is representing.

For example, the stadium expansion was an issue that allowed students to voice their opinions through a referendum vote. There was no reason for someone to tell or try to persuade students to vote one way or the other. A choice was made, and Riemann supports the opinions of the students.

Riemann is a very poor "grandstander." He will rarely even pose for a picture and likes to put others in the limelight for their accomplishments. The allegation that he would take credit for implementing the Course Information Proposal is absurd. Not once has this program been praised without citing Chris Hansen, Rhett Trujillo and others who have worked throughout the last two years to finalize it. I suggest that the notes and tape recordings of the interviews be checked again.

Finally, I challenge anyone to find an individual who weighs the options of each decision that he makes more than Riemann. It is easy to take a stand on something and to blindly follow the issues — with or without substantial evidence. K-State students should rest assure that their student government, led by Riemann, will make decisions that are right for students, rather than those that are the most publicized or politicized.

Jennafer Neufeld

KSU need not intervene in cases of Dies, Bishop

Editor,

I was perplexed by something a news commentator said Tuesday on the radio. The commentator was reporting about this weekend's arrests of Minny Dies and Michael Bishop and stated that, "... K-State is cooperating with authorities..."

Was the university itself involved in these respective incidents? To my knowledge, it was Bishop, Dies and possibly a few others who were involved in these incidents, not the university. Do you think the university would get involved if it were the average student who was arrested, instead of a member of one of our athletic teams? Probably not.

To me it seems that the university's involvement is almost one of obstruction. The university uses its power to protect those in the athletic department from criminal prosecution. For example, last year Dies and another basketball player had felony charges dropped to a misdemeanor, and Dies only received probation. Shouldn't these individuals be held to the same standards as the rest of us and be held accountable for their actions?

They should, but because of their potential to make money for the university and the community, they aren't held accountable. This is not fair to the victims of their crimes, to the community or to the athletes themselves. By protecting them, we are sending a message to them and to the children who watch sports and aspire to be athletes that there are no serious repercussions for their actions.

It's time to stand up and do the right thing. Let these athletes serve time in jail. The university should kick them off their teams, or at least take away any scholarships given to them. Make them pay for their crimes like the rest of us. In the end, it'll make them better people, build character for paying for their crimes, or at least it will set an example for the younger generations.

Now wouldn't that be justice, to actually pay for your crime?

Senate bills must have signature of president

Editor,

Just one observation that seems to be missing from Russell Fortmeyer's article and the editorial (both concerning the changes in the election regulations):

Until a bill passed by Student Senate is signed by the Student Body President, it is not law.

The elections regulations bill was signed Wednesday, yet the Collegian said that "candidates who aren't already in SGA haven't even been notified of the change." For student government officers to inform anyone before the bill became law would have been irresponsible.

I would suggest that all candidates have received the same information: the publication (or lack thereof) of the events surrounding this bill in the Collegian. I am sure that all candidates will be notified by the Elections Committee — at the same time and in a proper manner.

For the Collegian to suggest that there is anything improper in this notification process, especially since the bill became law Wednesday, is inaccurate.

Bashing of Riemann hurts paper's image

Editor,

This letter is in regard to the articles on Wednesday concerning Tim Riemann and the way his past year's work was portrayed. I think it is an embarrassment to the university and to the Collegian staff by deciding to take basically an entire day's newspaper solely for the purpose of bashing Student Body President Tim Riemann. Everyone is entitled to say what they want, but this was not a topic of freedom of speech, but as a venue to take malicious pot shots at a man who dedicated an entire year to this university.

Whether you like Riemann or hate him you can never underestimate his love for this university and the way he strives to do everything in his ability to do his job the way he sees fit. Tim did the right thing by not making public his stance on certain issues in this past year. By taking a public stance he would have given jerks like you a reason to slam him and once again question his abilities to govern the student body.

It is amazing that one day later, when Riemann signs a bill on campaign expenditures you immediately put his name on the front page and then decide to write another editorial basically blaming Riemann himself for the passing of the bill.

Where was any article in the Collegian throughout the year telling of the hours he sacrificed as president and talking about all of the things that he misses out on because of his responsibilities?

It is so ironic that one year ago the Collegian would have done anything for Riemann, and now the Collegian will do anything to smear his final days in office. Now you know why a great deal of students question the credibility of the Collegian regardless of the hype of "an award-winning" newspaper. If you want to win awards in this fashion, go to the University of Kansas.

Periodicals funding needs to be increased

Editor,

It was published last semester that Hale Library ranks 11th in the Big 12 for funding to purchase periodicals. This is an embarrassment to the state of Kansas, the administration of K-State and K-State students and faculty.

K-State's mission statement reads, "Kansas State University is a comprehensive, research, land-grant institution first serving students and the people of Kansas, and also the nation and the world. Since its founding in 1863, the University has evolved into a modern institution of higher education, committed to quality programs, and responsive to a rapidly changing world and the aspirations of an increasingly diverse society."

As a higher education institution, we rely on our library to support these ambitions. In essence, the library provides a backbone upon which the university's educational and research objectives lie.

In that context, the library of a state institution serves not only the students and faculty of that institution, but also the people of that state. It is in that argument that I believe that students should not have to pay an increase in their privilege fees. Use of the library is not a privilege, it is necessary capital to an institution dedicated to higher education and research.

However, it has been previously reported that the Kansas Board of Regents has failed in its attempt to funnel a greater amount of taxpayer money into the educational system. For that reason, perhaps an increase in tuition is needed to cover the ever-rising cost of periodicals.

Regardless of the state of our library's funding or where it might come from, increasing journal costs are unavoidable. In order to maintain or improve the status of Hale's periodical collection, the students should not be complaining of a rise in cost as small as the library is asking. This is a small price to pay for such a valuable and necessary resource that we all will use throughout our educational career at K-State.

K-State is an educational institution, and our library needs to reflect the ambitions stated in the university's mission statement. Not only is the library open more than 20 hours less than the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex each week, our volume collection does not adequately compare to competing institutions. We as students, faculty and residents of Kansas must support and push for improvements in our library. If a modest increase in students' privilege fees is what it takes, then so be it.

Alumni center design should be consistent

Editor,

The recent public unveiling of the proposed alumni center is yet another example of the administration's lack of regard for the built environment in the pursuit of a university "image." When will the administration learn that a building does not have to try to emulate Anderson Hall, Fairchild Hall, or perhaps more fittingly, the President's Residence to achieve an "image" for the institution?

The site at the south end of Memorial Stadium, an image of the university itself, is an extremely important location for presenting the university to the public at large, yet the design as shown conveys more of a country club atmosphere than that of a university alumni center. The design is inadequately proportioned for the location and seems less than the monumental public building that this particular site deserves.

It also bears little relationship to the interesting geometries of Memorial Stadium. We would like to ask the architect what in the design makes this an alumni center? What makes this building any different from the strips along Manhattan Avenue?

Perhaps the university should look to existing examples for inspiration. For example, the University of Nebraska completed a new alumni center just a few years ago at its Lincoln campus. The design is simple and highly popular with both alumni and campus organizations, yet the architect did not have to resort to historicist trickery or suburban allusions to achieve an identity.

To the administration we ask, what makes the site at Memorial Stadium a good location for an alumni center?

Memorial Stadium already serves as a symbol of the university, yet that structure and the activity within would become hidden from view by the proposed building.

Why would a location at the southeast corner of campus near the intersection of Manhattan and Anderson, the entrance to campus, not be just as appropriate? Surely it can't be due just to proximity to the K-State Student Union. More time and consideration should have been invested in the initial stages of development and programming.

Track athletes chasing gold at indoor meet

JOEL WHITE
Kansas State Collegian

When K-State senior Vanitta Kinard steps onto the triple-jump runway today in the Big 12 Indoor Championships at Ames, Iowa, it will be the finale of her Big 12 domination.

Kinard has both indoor and outdoor Big 12 gold medals in the triple jump. This time she said she will try to scare herself into another gold medal.

"If they don't have a 36-foot board, I'm going to jump from the men's board, which is at 42 feet," Kinard said. "I get scared that I'm not going to make it into the pit, but hopefully with my speed, I'll make it."

"Jumping from a 42-foot board should make me go 45 feet, and hopefully that's what I'll do," she said. Kinard has the season's second-longest collegiate triple-jump mark in the nation at 43-3 3/4. Although she is the overwhelming favorite in the triple jump in the conference meet, and she said she hopes to take no more than one jump, she does not consider it to be a tune-up for the NCAA Indoor Championships in two weeks.

"I've been doing this for so long that I don't really have a tune-up meet," she said. "I just take what I can get."

Like Kinard, junior Renetta Seiler has two Big 12 gold medals — one in the weight throw and one in the hammer throw — and is also the overwhelming favorite in her event.

Seiler, the No. 2 collegiate weight thrower in the nation and a native of Algona, Iowa, said the meet will be her homecoming.

"I feel like I'm going to be on home ground," Seiler said. "Rather than having just a couple of people, there's going to be a lot of my family and friends to watch me and cheer me on."

The weight-throw tandem of Seiler and Anna Whitham, who threw a career-best mark of 60-6 1/2 last week, will be the favorites to take first and second in that event.

"I'm hoping that we go one-two in the meet," Seiler said. "That would be really good for us."

Another K-State duo expected to make a mark this week is the high jumping tandem of Charles Burney and Nathan Leeper.

Burney, Shane Lavy of Nebraska and Mark Boswell of Texas have each cleared 7-4 1/2 this season. However, Burney said he considers himself the favorite because he has cleared the height three times this season, while the other two have cleared it once.

"After you do something that's supposed to be a big feat more than once, it's not as overwhelming anymore," Burney said.

Leeper, who cleared 7-4 1/4 this season, said the high-jump competition should be one of the most competitive events in the meet.

"As far as field events, it's going to be the toughest, and I think we should go one and two," Leeper said. "It doesn't matter who gets one and who gets two as long as we get the points."

Tennis team opens Big 12 play in Texas

DAN CATALDI
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State tennis team goes south this weekend to the Lone Star State to open its conference schedule with a pair of dual meets.

The Wildcats visit Texas A&M on Saturday and face No. 4 Texas on Sunday.

The Cats will try to continue their winning ways after wrapping up last weekend's two-meet homestand with a 9-0 sweep of Drake. Also last weekend, the Cats dropped a tough 5-4 match to the Utah Utes on Saturday.

Over the weekend, Yana Dorodnova ran her record to a perfect 6-0 on the year with a pair of victories at No. 1 singles. This included a three-set win over the No. 43 player in the country, Utah's Anna Svendenhov.

Dorodnova paired with Lena Pilipchak to post two wins at No. 1 doubles, including a 9-8 (7-0) victory over the No. 30 team of Svendenhov and Linda Engblom.

These two meets closed out the Cats non-conference schedule.

"I can't say that I'm 100-percent happy with where we are," K-State coach Steve Bietau said. "But, thus far, I think we have done a pretty good job to this point."

Now the Cats, 3-3 on the season, open the conference schedule with two of the toughest teams in the Big 12.

The Cats arrive in College Station this afternoon. This gives them a chance to practice outdoors to help prepare for Saturday's meet with the No. 38 Aggies.

"The biggest factor is potentially the weather, depending on what conditions we play the match under," Bietau said. "We just haven't been outside that much."

On Sunday, the Cats go to Austin to take on the Longhorns.

They have three players in the top 100, led by Sandy Surephong at No. 9. Surephong also teams up with Kim Gates to form the No. 25 doubles tandem.

"Texas is one of the premier programs in the country," Bietau said. "They go through the conference season to get ready for the NCAA's. They don't have to be concerned with whether or not they are going to win against a lot of the conference. They are that good."

Clark, Cats ready to begin conference play

JEREMY KELLEY
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State baseball team opens Big 12 Conference play tonight at Missouri, and head coach Mike Clark said his team is ready.

"We needed to get out on the field and practice hitting and things like that so we could get into a routine," Clark said. "Hopefully we will be able to get outside these last couple of days, if the weather permits us to. That's the one thing we really need to do before we get into the conference."

The Cats (5-5) are coming off an emotional win against Creighton on Wednesday, a game the Cats battled back from a five-run deficit and see-sawed their way to a 9-8 victory.

"The teams we have been losing to — I think we have been better than all of them," designated hitter Brian Bobier said of the game on Wednesday. "We needed to get a win going into Missouri, and hopefully this will give us some confidence."

In the game against Creighton, the Cats posted a strong defensive outing, led by first baseman Chet Savage with had nine putouts.

"Our defense needs to continue to be solid," shortstop J.D. Loudabarger said. "If we play good defense throughout the game then we'll always have a chance at the end of every ballgame."

Missouri (5-1) is coming off three spirited wins. Missouri pounded out 38 runs in a three-game set at Arkansas State last weekend, but gave up 22 in the same series. The Tigers then defeated Lincoln 11-6 on Tuesday afternoon and walloped Truman State 10-1 that same evening.

The Tigers are led by senior outfielder Ryan Fry, an honorable mention all-conference selection a year ago, and shortstop Griffin Moore, who earned the same accolades a year ago after belting 18 home runs and tallying 72 RBIs to lead the team.

One aspect Clark wants to work on more is getting repetitions at the plate, but other than that he said all facets of the game were solid.

"We have competed good, and we have put ourselves in position to win all but two of our games," Clark said. "The pitching and defense that we have to have to succeed have been there for the most part. Once we get outside and get some repetitions, every portion, every facet of our game will get better."

The first pitch of the game is scheduled for 7 tonight at Hi Simmons Field.

Brandon Peck (1-0) will get the start tonight. Tom Henshaw (1-2) will take the mound Saturday afternoon and Chris Traylor (1-1) will finish out the series for K-State on Sunday.

"We're going to have to take this game to a different level this weekend," Bobier said. "We are going to have to compete hard and use this confidence that we have."

►CATS EXPECTING ENTIRELY DIFFERENT GAME THAN 55-POINT DRUBBING IN ITS FIRST CONFERENCE GAME AGAINST MISSOURI.

SUN DEE MILLS
Kansas State Collegian

Don't look for "Cats terrorize Tigers" or "K-State destroys Mizzou" in a headline after this Saturday's men's basketball game at Missouri.

The Wildcats are expecting an entirely different Tiger team at Hearn Center than the one that dropped the program's biggest loss in Manhattan.

"I bet they're not even waiting until tomorrow to watch the game tape," K-State Coach Tom Asbury said after Wednesday's 95-80 defeat of Texas A&M. "You can be assured that with their senior night, you'll see a better basketball game."

In the Cats' first Big 12 Conference game Jan. 3, sophomore guard Josh Reid scored a game-high 28 points to lead K-State to a 111-56 victory.

"I told our team I would rather have won that game like we did than lost it like they did," Asbury said.

The players don't necessarily agree. "Looking back, it might not have been a good thing to win like that," junior center

►WOMEN'S TEAM TO TUNE UP FOR BIG 12 TOURNAMENT BY FINISHING REGULAR SEASON AGAINST NO. 5 TEXAS TECH.

SUN DEE MILLS
Kansas State Collegian

Whoever scheduled the women's basketball games this season was listening to the Vanessa Williams song, "Saving the Best for Last."

The Wildcats will face No. 5 Texas Tech at 1 p.m. Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum. But the Lady Raiders aren't going to take it easy on the Cats, K-State Coach Deb Patterson said.

"Texas Tech is beyond thinking about winning the league," Patterson said. "They've got the league sewn up. They're playing for home court and the one or two seed in the NCAA Tournament."

Patterson said if the Lady Raiders dropped a game to a team ranked No. 9 through No. 12 in the Big 12 — where K-State sits — it would harm Texas Tech's status.

But the Cats are more concerned with stopping preseason all-American Alicia Thompson. Thompson had a career game against Nebraska on Wednesday, scoring 29 points, recording her 2,000th career point

Basketball fans should prepare for outcome of upcoming Big 12 Tournament

When the page of the calendar is turned on Sunday, it will be official.

March Madness is here, and this is the time all college hoops fans wait all year for.

Both K-State basketball teams end their regular seasons tomorrow, the men against Missouri in Columbia, and the women in Bramlage Coliseum against No. 5 Texas Tech.

Unfortunately, it seems Deb Patterson's bunch won't make a repeat visit to the NCAA Tournament unless they run the table at the Big 12 Tournament in Kansas City, Mo.

Unlike last year, however, it appears to be a foregone conclusion that the men's team will reach some kind of postseason play after watching it all on television last year. The burning question in Manhattan is whether it will be in the "Big Dance" — the NCAA Tournament — or the race for No. 65, the NIT.

A few weeks ago, the Wildcats had a 15-6 record and appeared to be on their way to the NAAs. However, with consecutive losses at home to the two best teams in the Big 12 — the Cats' only home losses all season — and a critical loss to Iowa State on the road, K-State's 15-9 mark changed the attitude to NIT-bound.

The Cats aren't dead yet, though. This team can make the NCAA Tournament. Obviously, by winning four games next week in Kansas City to win the conference tournament, K-State would take the decision out of the selection committee's hands.

Because Kansas appears to be untouchable by anybody in the Midwest, that could be tough. Because the committee loves to take teams from big name conferences, the Cats could possibly join KU, Oklahoma State and Oklahoma as the fourth team from the Big 12 to play for the national championship.

That would take wins, though. First, the Cats must follow up their 55-point drubbing of Missouri in January by stealing one in Columbia, where the Tigers are 12-1 this season. Then, a good performance in Kansas City is imperative.

Probably, only losing to Kansas or Oklahoma State, if even that, would be tolerable. If four Big 12 teams go to the NAAs, the Cats will be competing with Nebraska for the spot. Because K-State swept the Huskers this season, going farther in the conference tournament would give them the nod.

Of course, these are a lot of "if's and I hopes." In all likelihood, only three Big 12 teams will reach the tournament field. That leaves the Cats playing in the NIT, which means we might not have seen Aaron Swartzendruber and Marcus McCollough for the last time in Bramlage after all.

I would love to see the Cats make it, but objectively, they probably don't deserve to reach the NCAA Tournament. I think one win against a top-three Big 12 team, or not losing at Iowa State, Texas Tech or Colorado, would have put the Cats over the top.

The bottom line is that this team improved quite a bit over the squad that finished in last place in the Big 12, and whether or not they reach the NCAA Tournament, this amount of improvement is quite remarkable in one year.

Next year should be good for the Cats as well. They lose only two players and will have much of the nucleus of the team back, including starters Manny Dies, Shawn Rhodes, Duane Davis and Josh Reid.

For this year, it appears every player's dream of playing in the "Big Dance" will pass the Wildcats by, but they will still be around to root for. Maybe they can use the NIT as a stepping stone for a good 1998-99 year.

If they don't make it, don't get caught up in March Madness and forget to support your Cats through their own postseason.

Kansas State Collegian

Students and faculty from K-State's Department of Music will get the chance to showcase their talents this weekend at a statewide music convention.

The Kansas Music Educators Association, today and Saturday in Wichita, is an annual convention of music educators and students from all educational levels for music performances and workshops.

Several K-State ensembles will be performing at the convention, including the Faculty Brass Quintet, the Symphony Band, the Kansas State Choir, the Percussion Ensemble and the K-State Singers.

The ensembles were selected by the KMEA on the basis of audition tapes submitted a year in advance. Numerous Kansas colleges and universities submitted tapes, but only a few ensembles from each category were selected to perform.

A committee of state band directors, choral directors and music teachers did the judging, said Frank Tracz, associate professor of music and Symphony Band conductor.

"You come and play for all your colleagues in the state, so it's a pretty neat deal," he said.

Tracz said a goal of the 35-minute performances is to present a positive image of the music department.

"It's a great opportunity to show not only other students what's going on here, but also other music teachers," Tracz said. "The bottom line is they're responsible for either sending kids here or not sending them."

Rod Walker, director of choral activities and Kansas State Choir conductor, also placed importance on presenting a strong image.

"It's really a competition — an unspoken competition," Walker said. "A lot of the smaller schools compete in music very favorably with the big three in the state, so it behooves us to go down there and do a good job."

Both Tracz and Walker said diversity is an important element of the selections the ensembles will perform.

"We try to give them a variety of things," Walker said. "The sounds between the pieces, they are different in texture, in harmonization, in rhythms, in colors and that sort of thing, so it really shows off the versatility of the Choir."

Selections that the 56-member choir will perform include pieces from Germany and Yugoslavia, a Chinese-style piece, 20th-century madrigals and a spiritual. The Symphony Band will perform similarly diverse selections.

Choir member Jill Volland, junior in music theater, said she has no worries about performing in her first music convention.

"We know the notes, it's just whether or not our heads are in the game," she said. "You can tell in the last week we've really changed our attitude to really focus on the convention."

Walker echoed Volland's attitude of readiness. "They're focused," he said. "When they come focused and ready to go, they do wonderful things."

Tracz said performing in a different atmosphere benefits the students.

"It's an opportunity to take the act on the road and go someplace else to play," he said.

While performances might be its main component, the convention will also feature lectures, university information booths and an alumni reunion. Several music department faculty are scheduled to give presentations today and Saturday.

However, showcasing student talent remains the dominant purpose of the convention.

"I think that's the main thing," Walker said. "It recognizes what they've done, which I think is considerable."

Many greats from the past emerge victorious on Grammy night

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — When John Fogerty was cranking out classic hits for Creedence Clearwater Revival three decades ago, he'd watch the Grammys and see Henry Mancini, Tony Bennett and Frank Sinatra carrying home all the trophies.

Bennett's still winning — some people are just indestructible — but this year's Grammys showed rock's old guard being recognized by a music establishment that once wished they would go away.

"It's kind of a function of the calendar," Fogerty said. "Sooner or later, you become old enough to win a Grammy."

Fogerty won his first Grammy in Wednesday night's ceremony, for best rock album. During the days he was writing songs such as "Proud Mary," "Green River" and "Fortunate Son," he was not even nominated.

Bob Dylan, who had won or shared in only four lesser Grammys during his entire career, doubled that in one night Wednesday. He was a sentimental favorite after suffering a life-threatening heart infection last year. His top award was best album for "Time Out of Mind."

Van Morrison and blues artist John Lee Hooker received a Grammy for their collaboration on "Don't Look Back." They beat Grammy favorites such as Barbra Streisand and Celine Dion.

James Taylor's best pop album Grammy for "Hourglass" was his third award and first since 1977.

His producer, Frank Filipetti, said voters were probably looking at more than just one album when they checked the names of Taylor and some of his older colleagues.

"Certainly I can't sit there and definitely say that it's not a nostalgia vote," he said.

It's not as if those artists have given up creating: Dylan's album was widely acknowledged as his strongest in decades and Fogerty's comeback showed real vigor.

Veteran folk-rocker Shawn Colvin, who won song and record of the year for "Sunny Came Home," produced the best work of her career.

Sandler's 'Wedding Singer' places romantic touch on cheese of 1980s

CLAUDETTE RILEY
Kansas State Collegian

Under the throbbing phrases of '80s love rock, a tender story unfolds about a man in love with getting married and his struggle to overcome the pain of being left at the altar.

Robbie Hart (Adam Sandler) is The Wedding Singer, a die-hard lover of nuptials, he manages to infuse a survivor's instinct into the most dysfunctional family gatherings and seduce newlyweds into his wide-eyed love of romance.

In between comparing old Coke with new Coke and dodging the freaky Flock of Seagulls fan at the airport, a parade of hilariously over-the-top '80s clothing steals almost every scene.

Sandler is smart to fill his comedy with scene-stealing supporting characters who all serve to further mock the decade of excess and rubber wrist bracelets.

Showing few acting skills but lots of porcelain-skinned poutiness, Julia Sullivan (Drew Barrymore) stumbles into Robbie's dejected state as a waitress at the recreation hall where he sings at weddings and bar mitzvahs.

Here's the hook: She's engaged to the wrong guy — Glen Gulia (Matthew Glave), the DeLoreandriving, no-socks-wearing, Miami Vice look-alike, junk bonds broker. All the public outrage, hypocrisy and criticisms of the trickle-down theory is wrapped up in this one figure.

The awkward comic genius of the drunk, loser groomsman David (Steve Buscemi) is a brilliant twist on the rabid family dysfunction readily available at all big weddings. His discomfort and lack of '80s coolness is as painful as it is realistic.

The visual humor includes big-haired, punk singer look-alike Linda (Angela Featherstone), the still-hanging-on-to-the-'70s-hip-thrusting cameo of fellow wedding singer Jimmie Moore (Jon Lovitz) and Robbie's feather-brushed and hairsprayed swinger best friend Sammy (Allen Covert).

Alexis Arquette as George Sister does a wicked impression of the man who brought us Culture Club, a portrayal so dead-on it hearkens back to the days when androgyny still seemed naughty and scandalous.

A hip-hop granny and Billy Idol (as himself) both show up, adding to the eternally influential music of the Psychedelic Furs, The Thompson Twins, The Cars and David Bowie.

The embrace of the '80s includes plastic beads, neon headbands, parachute pants, faux-silk shirts and lace gloves, and the entire time the audience is in on the joke.

Sandler is fantastic, a comic superhero and natural-born performer whose renditions of "Love Stinks" and his self-written covers of old Cure hits could charm anyone. He sells his lines and embodies the idealistic part of us that squeaked through that decade, despite the constant assault of excess and mass consumerism.

The real success of this movie is its enthusiasm and its wholehearted embrace of the '80s pop culture and the songs we can all sing along to.

Don't let the often sporadic comic success of Saturday Night Live alumni, including Sandler, keep you away from this heartfelt, campy trip back to visit the "time to make the donuts" guy, Rubik's Cubes and the introduction of new-fangled CD players.

Men's team looking for different Missouri team than in January

Shawn Rhodes said. "They'll come out tougher. It'll definitely be a different ballgame."

How different is the question of the moment. The road — not one of the Cats' favorite places to play, anyway, becomes even tougher when it leads to the Hearnes Center in Columbia, Mo.

"Their fans are loud and rowdy," Rhodes said. "It's one of the toughest places to play in the Big 12."

Add this fact to two others: Tiger players Kelly Thames, Tyron Lee and Dibi Ray will play their last home game that night.

Asbury said he would parallel Thames' career with Wildcat Aaron Swartzendruber's.

"They're going to be fired up for him," Asbury said.

Plus, the two teams in question are both sitting at 7-8 in the conference and clawing their way to a higher seed in the Big 12 Tournament.

"They pack that place every time we come," Rhodes said. "When it comes to people trying to make post-season play, you'll get the best from both teams."

Shooting for .500 in the conference is enough incentive for a team, but vying for a bubble bid for the NCAA Tournament is another thing both teams will have in common.

"Being eight and eight is really important," Rhodes said. "We need to go out and try to win every game."

Asbury knows that what happens at Missouri will determine what wins the Cats will need to get in the Big 12 Tournament to even consider playing in the NCAA Tournament.

"They've got a lot of incentive for this game," Asbury said. "They've played terrific in past Big 8 and Big 12 tournaments — anything could happen."

But how does a team study a game tape in which the opposing team will resemble the previous game's opponent in name only? Asbury said it will be a challenge.

"We played as close to a perfect game as we could play," he said. "We hit all our shots. Missouri just didn't play very well."

Although the Tigers defeated Colorado 86-67 at the Hearnes Center on Wednesday, Asbury said if he were Tiger coach Norm Stewart, he would know how to start Thursday's practice for the Tigers.

He said he probably wouldn't say anything about the previous K-State vs. Missouri game.

"I'd just put the game tape in."

Cats to finish season against Texas Tech

and grabbing 14 rebounds in the Lady Raiders' 87-62 defeat of Nebraska.

"Alicia Thompson is a tremendous talent," Patterson said. "She's a player who can take a team on her back and change a game singlehandedly."

Thompson's skills include getting above the rim when she rebounds and being physical without expending too much energy to be effective on the offensive end of the floor, Patterson said.

If the Cats can turn back the clock to last season's Big 12 Tournament game and remember how they shut Thompson down then, anything is possible.

In the second game of the tournament, the Cats knocked off a No. 15 Texas Tech team on their way to the championship game.

Thompson had 26 points in the game, but Patterson attributes the team's success to the Cats' offensive performance.

"The most significant thing about our success versus Texas Tech last season was our offense," Patterson said. "You can only defend well in a basketball game without scoring for so long."

While the defensive performance of the Cats has been up and down, the other side of the ball has been less predictable. In the Cats' 81-76 loss to Texas A&M Wednesday, sophomore center Angie Finkes had 26 points, 12 rebounds and five assists — career highs in every category.

"Angie is a bright spot," Patterson said. "She did put some points on the board. But the number of shots it takes her to get points is a concern."

So, the coach's solution is to find a way to score against Tech's zone defense. If the Cats can't figure it out, Patterson said it'll be a long day. The Lady Raiders are so good, she said, they'll score no matter what.

"Last year, we could hold teams to 47 points," she said. "But if we can't score 49, it doesn't matter."

Senior guard Brit Jacobson steps on the Bramlage court for the last time Saturday as well. She is six points away from 1,500 career points and would be only the fifth player in K-State history to reach this milestone.

"We gained respect," Jacobson said of her years in the program. "Coach Patterson stepped in and gave us more than we had. I think people understand it's been a hard year for us, and a young year for us."

This Toronto based ensemble consists of musicians each of whom doubles and triples on all kinds of instruments and vocals. The quartet's program combine chamber works and tangos, operatic excerpts, traditional folk melodies and popular songs.

Their program will feature Quartet in B-Flat Major, by J.C. Bach, Tango Solitario by Claudio Vena, the Intermezzo from Cavalleria Rusticana by Pietro Mascagni and a traditional favorite, Danny Boy.

"Quartetto Gelato plays with both the precision expected of a string quartet in Beethoven and the abandonment of gypsies improvising around a campfire."

Oprah victorious in beef with cattle ranchers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMARILLO, Texas — Oprah Winfrey beat Big Beef to cheers and champagne in the heart of Texas cattle country Thursday.

"Free speech not only lives. It rocks!" the talk show host proclaimed outside the courthouse to a crowd of townspeople after a jury rejected an $11 million lawsuit brought against her by a group of Texas cattlemen.

The cattlemen blamed a collapse in prices on a 1996 "Oprah Winfrey Show" that they said falsely warned American beef could spread mad cow disease to people.

"I come from a people who struggled and died to use their voice in this country, and I refuse to be muzzled," the talk show host, referring to her black heritage, said as a few members of the crowd drank champagne.

The cattlemen's lawyer said the jurors clearly were swayed by Winfrey's star power.

Winfrey's arrival was the biggest thing to happen to Amarillo in years. Whatever beef the cattlemen had against her, the people of Amarillo showered her with affection, waited in long lines to hear her testify and fought for tickets to tapings of her show, which was moved from Chicago to Amarillo during the trial. By the end of the five-week case, buttons, banners, caps and T-shirts proclaiming "Amarillo Loves Oprah" were everywhere.

"You'd have to be blind to say (jurors) weren't influenced by one of the 25 most influential Americans," said cattlemen's attorney Joe Coyne, referring to a 1996 Time magazine article. He said the cattlemen will appeal.

The jury took seven hours to reach a verdict.

Juror Pat Gowdy said deliberations turned on the First Amendment. "We felt that a lot of rights have eroded in this country. Our freedom of speech may be the only one we have left to regain what we've lost," he said.

The verdict came in red-meat country, where 25 percent of the nation's grain-fed cattle is produced, where the city's biggest private employer is a slaughterhouse and where the "World Famous" Big Texan Steak Ranch offers a 72-ounce steak free to anyone who can wolf it down in an hour. Even the courthouse had a mural of cattle above the elevators.

"I was scared to come here at first," Winfrey said. "I saw where there were bumper stickers that said, 'The only mad cow in Texas is Oprah.' That hurt my feelings."

Also exonerated were Winfrey's production company and Howard Lyman, a vegetarian activist who was a guest on the show.

Thursday night Winfrey taped an episode of her talk show dedicated to the court case.

"They said I couldn't get a fair trial in Texas, and you proved them wrong," she told audience members. Some people waited 13 hours to get into the taping.

Guests on the show included her defense team and some reporters who covered the trial. Ms. Winfrey wept several times during the taping.

The lawsuit had been expected to be the biggest test yet of the "veggie libel" laws enacted in Texas and 12 other states in recent years to protect perishable agricultural products from false and disparaging remarks.

Last week, in a big victory for Winfrey, U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson ruled that the case could not go forward under the veggie libel law and would instead be tried as a conventional business defamation case.

That meant the cattlemen had to meet a higher burden of proof: They had to show Winfrey deliberately or recklessly hurt their business by way of false statements.

In explaining her ruling in documents released Thursday, Robinson said the plaintiffs had not proved that cattle are a perishable food or that knowingly false statements were made.

During the April 16, 1996, show, Lyman said that including processed cattle in cattle feed — a practice banned last summer — could spread mad cow disease to people in the United States.

"You said this disease could make AIDS look like the common cold?" Winfrey asked.

"Absolutely," Lyman answered. "It has just stopped me cold from eating another burger!" Winfrey exclaimed to applause from the studio audience.

When cattle prices fell to 10-year lows in the days after the show aired, the plaintiffs — three cattle-feeding operations and four ranches — termed it the "Oprah crash."

Winfrey's side argued that the dip was caused instead by high feed costs, oversupply and low prices. She testified that she is the host of a talk show — "not the evening news" — and that her viewers know the difference.

For their part, the cattlemen cast doubt on the threat of mad cow disease in the United States and attacked the "Oprah" producers' motivations and their editing of the program, claiming Winfrey and others wanted a scary show to boost ratings.

"We have the right not to have our business damaged by a bunch of falsehoods shot out of Chicago," cattlemen's lawyer David Mullin said in closing arguments.

Mad cow disease is suspected of killing 23 people in Britain. The brain-destroying disease has never been found in cattle in the United States.

Cattleman Paul Engler, the lead plaintiff, said the ordeal should make Winfrey more careful. But Winfrey scoffed at that, saying all her shows are produced responsibly.

"This will not change the way I'll operate," she said. "I'll be more fervent in my desire to enlighten and offer ideas to the public."

Lyman said he still intends to champion food safety and promote lower meat consumption, but that he learned a lesson: "It won't make me think twice about saying it. It will make me think about the terms I couch it in."

Winfrey, whose net worth is estimated at $550 million by Forbes magazine, said she never considered a settlement. The trial could end up costing her $1 million in legal fees.

"In the end," she said, "all you have is your reputation."

Sewer construction to block portion of Mid Campus Drive

Campus Drive. Tuesday, one lane will be closed in the intersection of Mid Campus Drive, Oak Drive and Lovers Lane, but local traffic still will be allowed to pass through the area.

The state of the intersection after Wednesday depends on weather conditions. Carlson said any new concrete that is poured must set for at least seven days before it can be driven on.

"If the weather remains favorable, the intersection should be open for normal traffic within a week to 10 days," Carlson said. "And I don't foresee there being any problems with the weather."

The second half of the project will necessitate the full closure of Lovers Lane between Blumont and Justin halls. After Wednesday, the road will be blocked completely from traffic. Cars will be able to access Justin Hall and the President's Residence, and handicap-accessible parking spaces will be available outside Justin Hall.

Traffic will be diverted to Mid Campus Drive and to Oak Drive for the duration of the project.

Lovers Lane is scheduled to re-open sometime in mid-April.

"Local traffic in the area of the construction is no problem," Carlson said. "However, it would really help keep things from getting congested if motorists would try and avoid the area."

The project is an extension of the construction of new storm sewers around Eisenhower Hall.

Campus construction

Construction on the intersection of Lovers Lane and Mid Campus Drive will begin Monday. Construction should be done within a week, but Lovers Lane will be closed until mid-April.

Colbert Hills to train future golf course superintendents

ANDREW WIMMER
Kansas State Collegian

Colbert Hills Golf Course will become the first laboratory used for the academic training of golf superintendents in the profession's history.

The Department of Horticulture has updated its turf-management curriculum with the help of the PGA Tour and the Golf Course Superintendents Association of America.

Jack Fry, associate professor of horticulture, said K-State will pioneer the training of golf course superintendents, and the additions to the turf-management program will only increase K-State's reputation.

"What we have implemented is a complete program for golf course superintendents," Fry said. "It's the only one of its kind in the world."

Colbert Hills, which begins construction later this spring, will not only be home to the K-State golf teams, but also will be used for research and golf turf-maintenance education.

There are plans for a classroom and a small computer lab attached to the maintenance building.

Fry said the planning of Colbert Hills, named for 1964 K-State graduate and Senior Tour pro Jim Colbert, led to the overhauling of the golf course turf-management program at K-State. He said the program will still emphasize plant and soil science, but will focus more time on management and business courses beginning in fall 1998.

"A superintendent's career is unstable," he said. "Usually they don't lose their job because they can't grow grass, but because they have poor communication skills."

K-State graduates will now be trained to compete for jobs as golf course managers, overseeing the whole operation of the course, not just the grounds.

"We are emphasizing a concept of total facilities management," Fry said. "K-State grads will be educated in every aspect of golf course management."

"Almost every town has a nine-hole golf course," he said. "Most of them don't have a budget for a manager and a superintendent. We hope we can fit that niche."

Colbert Hills will be managed by the PGA Tour Golf Properties Inc. It will be the first collegiate course managed by the PGA Tour and will give students additional opportunities in the field, Fry said.

"The 20-to-25 course managed by the Tour provides a great opportunity for our students doing internships," he said. "It gives the students another 'in' with the industry."

Students will get two opportunities to serve as interns. The first will be at Colbert Hills, learning basic equipment operation and familiarizing themselves with different methods of turf management.

The other internship will be at a PGA Tour-managed course. Fry said he hoped students would use their second internship to explore other areas of golf course management.

Fry said the horticulture department is working with other departments and colleges to make Colbert Hills a positive learning experience for students.

"Not only will Colbert Hills be a first-class golf course," he said, "but it is going to be a wonderful spot to study the effects of a golf course on the environment. It's going to be a unique project."

Fry expects an increase in interest in the program because of the advancements at K-State.

"Right now, we have about 50 students in the program," he said. "We've prepared brochures and are sending them to Kansas Golf Association members who have high school-aged kids. We also hope that our association with the PGA Tour will spark interest nationwide."

Beside brochures, the program was endorsed by the Golf Course Superintendents Association of America and received publicity in its trade magazine, Golf Course Management.

"We are getting the word out that K-State is leading the way in educating golf course superintendents for the year 2000," Fry said.

FIVE HUNDRED TWENTY-FOUR COWBOYS AND COWGIRLS FROM COLLEGES ACROSS KANSAS, MISSOURI AND OKLAHOMA ASSEMBLED THIS WEEKEND IN WEBER ARENA FOR THE 42ND ANNUAL KSU RODEO. THE CONTESTANTS, 25 OF WHOM WERE FROM K-STATE, WERE HERE TO COMPETE IN NINE DIFFERENT EVENTS.

Students, administrators give varying opinions on viability of user-fee based proposals

TIM RICHARDSON
Kansas State Collegian

A user-fee based privilege fee system is becoming more popular for some campus organizations, but students and administrators say the system has its drawbacks.

Full-time students pay $251 in campus privilege fees each semester, which is used for building renovations and services on campus. The amount is paid regardless of student use of the services.

Privilege Fee Committee Chair Aaron Otto said the linear fee system at K-State allows part-time students to pay less in privilege fees. One credit hour is $64, followed by $17.50 for each additional credit hour up to 12.

Otto said nearly all campus organizations have some kind of user-fee system, but implementation of a complete user fee, in which students would only pay for services they use, wouldn't be in students' best interest. "You see how much you pay every semester, but you don't see how much it helps everybody," he said.

Otto said services that use privilege fees should attempt to find their own solutions when facing a financial problem. Rather than asking Student Senate for a privilege fee increase, which takes a two-thirds vote, he said the organization could possibly increase the cost of its services.

"They realize that costs are going up," he said. "They realize that Student Senate is not an open-cash-register organization."

User fees make up about 40 percent of the revenue at Lafene Health Center. Lafene Director Lannie Zwemiller said there is no charge to visit a physician or nurse, but nearly all other services have a fee. Privilege fees subsidize nearly half of Lafene's revenue.

"I don't think it would work without a privilege fee," he

Details of K-State master plan under discussion by committee

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

The campus is moving forward in the development of a new master plan, but the details of what it should include are still the subject of discussion.

At issue is whether the master plan should be more philosophical or physical in nature.

A philosophical master plan, which is what the university is moving toward, would tell more than show. The master plan document, "People, Principles and Process," which the Campus Development Committee has been developing, is a description of how the campus should be developed.

A need for open space, parking development, campus density, a perimeter green belt and an emphasis on making campus entrances attractive are all issues within the document. It stresses keeping the 10-minute walking time within the core campus and for making enhancements to the pedestrian character to campus.

This document, however, is only part of the overall plan. The university hopes to hire a professional planning consultant to review the document and to create a digital map of campus showing areas where new development could occur.

A philosophical plan stops short of a physical plan in that it does not show how new buildings could look, as far.

Richard Hayter, chair of the development committee, said it's wishful thinking to create a master plan showing boxes, suggesting building volumes, in places where new buildings could go.

"It's fiscally driven," Hayter said. He said in a project like Durland Hall, which is being built over three phases, it took knowing what the financial resources of the third phase before anyone had any idea how the building could look.

Hayter said he expects a master plan to tell where buildings could potentially be placed, discuss changes

Bowling event unites children, raises money

TIM RICHARDSON
Kansas State Collegian

No one threw gutter balls Sunday afternoon, not even the 6-year-olds.

Nearly every bowling lane in the K-State Student Union was equipped with bumpers for the annual Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc. Bowl for Kids' Sake.

About 40 children participated in the two-day event, which was sponsored by Memory Lanes in Manhattan on Saturday and the Union on Sunday.

"We get a lot of positive feedback from kids who really enjoy coming out and having a good time," Case Manager Megan Kirkman said.

The organization finds volunteers for 6- to 16-year-old children from at-risk homes. Volunteers are asked to spend an average of three hours each with their children.

Bowling is one of the events the organization has to unite children in the program.

"I hope they gain more self-confidence in themselves by coming out and meeting other kids in the program," Kirkman said. "We want them to have a good time and enjoy themselves."

There are about 500 branches nationwide, all of which participate in the event each year. The Manhattan branch has about 150 matches in the area, and the volunteers in about 85 percent of those cases are students.

Part-time student Chris Bolton began volunteering in October. He became interested in spending time with children after coaching a football team.

"I had some friends that were doing it, and I got the idea from them," he said.

Executive Director Tami Carolan said there is a waiting list of children seeking volunteers.

"We are improving the future of citizens and offering community members a chance to invest in their own community," she said.

Money raised from the event will assist the organization in paying the Kansas Bureau of Investigation, which runs background checks of volunteers. The money will also help the organization pay for its camp in August at Rock Springs 4-H center south of Junction City.

"We have kids who need a little bit of something extra in their lives, and we provide that through volunteers," Carolan said.

Bolton said being a big brother has been an enjoyable experience.

"It's fun to help out a kid who needs a role model in their life," he said. "I think it's really rewarding."

Telefund exceeds million-dollar goal with help from alumni, volunteers

SARA ZENGER
Kansas State Collegian

KSU Foundation Telefund has done it again.

The all-volunteer telephone fund-raising campaign exceeded its million-dollar goal with a pledge total of $1,009,614.

Gordon Dowell, director of annual giving for the KSU Foundation, said this is the ninth year Telefund has set a new record for either pledge totals or percentage of alumni participating.

"This is just the next level of support. We've gained consistently over the years. There's only been one year when we went backwards," Dowell said.

This year's pledge total is about $120,000 more than the 1997 total. Nelson and Marilyn Galle of Moundridge gave the pledge that put Telefund at more than the million-dollar mark.

"We're all in this together," said Nelson Galle, a 1958 graduate in agricultural education. "Students, faculty and alumni all working together can do things that not any one group can do by themselves."

The Galle visited Telefund last week while they were in town for a basketball game.

"It's like nothing I've ever seen before. You don't have to be there very long to get caught up in the excitement of what the students are doing," Galle said. "We had some friends from Hutchinson with us. They also made a pledge, and they're not even K-State grads."

Dowell said this year's success is a result of teamwork among students, businesses and alumni.

"Student enthusiasm was at an all-time high. We

Former Latvian defense minister speaks at K-State about future NATO expansion

A former defense minister of Latvia told a story during a speech Friday in the Union Little Theater about several blind men who "saw" an elephant.

One man felt its trunk and thought the elephant resembled a rope, another felt its leg and thought the elephant resembled a tree, said Jan Arved Trapans in a speech titled "The Future of NATO Expansion."

Trapans' homeland, along with the other Baltic states, might soon be included in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The point of his parable, he said, is through collective security, NATO, like the elephant, could be clearly seen by the Baltic states and other former Soviet bloc countries if they were members.

Trapans said much of the United States and its citizens, especially those in the heartland, are not really concerned with NATO and its expansion.

"NATO is expanding, because you need security in Central and Eastern Europe in case of a possible Russian revival," he said.

He said although he does not foresee Russia attacking Europe or the United States since it lost strategic and maneuvering potential, he said security has to provide against any possible low-level conflict.

"Security is only defined by what it means to you," he said.

The Baltic states must have military potential sufficient to meet the threat of a quick strike from the type of mechanisms of the United States, Trapans said.

Dale Herspring, head of the Department of Political Science, said the K-State community would be affected by NATO expansion because whatever happens to NATO will be felt in the United States.

Because of his experiences, Herspring said Trapans is credible enough to speak openly and candidly about what he saw and heard while being a member of the Baltic states.

"Without diplomatic niceties, he gives an understanding of how the world is viewed from Latvia," Herspring said.

By following and supporting NATO's expansion, no longer would blind people have to discern an elephant they cannot see, Trapans said.

"I am no longer giving official views of the Latvian government," Trapans said. "The essential question is why should you be interested in the expansion. No security system has survived without the general consensus of the population."

The speech was sponsored by the political science department and the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee.

Pirate radio station in Lawrence ignores FCC warnings, continues its broadcasting

LAWRENCE — Despite the Federal Communications Commission's warnings to get off the air, a pirate radio station based in Lawrence's downtown shopping district refuses to abandon ship.

Last November the FCC said it might decide on action against KAW-FM within two months. On Wednesday, John Winston of the FCC's Compliance and Information Bureau in Washington, D.C., said the case was being investigated and that no further information would be released.

The station, which has a range of about five miles, has been broadcasting at 88.9 megahertz for about a year.

Rich Wenzel, KAW co-founder, said the station received another FCC warning letter this month but that no investigators had visited since last fall.

Despite receiving no complaints about the station, Wenzel said, the FCC insists that KAW stop operating.

Wenzel said the station would prefer to operate with an FCC license, but he estimated that it would cost $75,000 to upgrade the station and maneuver through a licensing process that could take as long as two years.

Even then, he said, there's no guarantee that an application would be accepted.

Report says U.S. should maintain threat of nuclear retaliation directed at Iraq

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The United States should maintain the threat of nuclear retaliation with an "irrational and vindictive" streak to intimidate would-be attackers such as Iraq, according to an internal military study made public Sunday.

The study, "Essentials of Post-Cold War Deterrence," was written by the Defense Department's Strategic Command, a multiservice organization responsible for the nation's strategic nuclear arsenal.

It was obtained under the Freedom of Information Act by an arms control group and published Sunday in a report on U.S. strategies for deterring attacks by antagonistic nations using chemical, biological or nuclear weapons.

The London-based think tank the British-American Security Information Council cited the STRATCOM document in its report as an example of the Pentagon's push to maintain a mission for its nuclear arsenal long after the Soviet threat disappeared.

The report portrays the command as fighting and winning an internal bureaucratic battle against liberal Clinton administration officials who lean in favor of dramatic nuclear weapons reductions.

Citing a range of formerly classified documents obtained through the Freedom of Information Act, the report shows how the United States shifted its nuclear deterrent strategy from the defunct Soviet Union to so-called rogue states: Iraq, Libya, Cuba, North Korea and the like.

GREG DAVIS, LEFT, SENIOR IN MARKETING AND MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEMS, IS A CANDIDATE FOR STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT, ALONG WITH HIS VICE PRESIDENTIAL RUNNING MATE JIM BOOMER, SENIOR IN MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEMS AND ACCOUNTING. NATE JENKINS
Kansas State Collegian

If student body presidential candidate Greg Davis and his running mate Jim Boomer are able to have a victory party after the votes are tallied, they want to begin another campaign when they enter their new offices — one of communication with the student body.

Davis and Boomer said they don't want to fall into the campaign trap of preaching communication with Student Governing Association.

Instead, they want to create avenues for student participation by forming new committees outside SGA and taking more initiative in talking with people.

"We've gone too long with two separate entities on this campus — the SGA and the student body," said Davis, senior in marketing and management information systems. "As an example, look at the SGA home page. It hasn't been updated in almost two years."

"We need to re-establish communication links with people," he said.

The candidates' plan includes seven new 20-member student committees, including a campus safety committee and a committee for women's issues, Davis said.

"We want to get more actual police on campus to make it a safer place at night, and that goes along with some of the things a committee could do to help K-State women," Davis said. "In one year, I feel like we can really concentrate on five women's issues and get something done."

Davis and Boomer said they want to encourage the promotion of women faculty members and make sure that child care is provided to women who need it.

Davis, former president of Interfraternity Council, his own fraternity and vice president of the College of Business Administration Council, said he isn't worried about the added responsibility of overseeing groups such as the women's issues committee.

Davis said he wants the president's office to have more university exposure.

"We want to work hand-in-hand with the Collegian and get a biweekly spot in the paper in the form of a letter to the student body," Davis said. "We'll also form a Wildcat outreach program where we go to a different organization every week on their home court where they feel most comfortable and talk about issues that concern them."

One issue Davis and Boomer can't avoid is the funding of Hale Library. The candidates said they would support a student fee for the library only if the KSU Foundation and the Kansas Legislature made a firm commitment to the library.

"We don't feel students should accept a plan until the state and the KSU Foundation commit to helping the library," Davis said. "There needs to be a guaranteed financial collaboration before we support a student fee."

According to their campaign information, Davis and Boomer would support a plan for faculty and graduate students to help pay for academic journals because they are the primary users of the journals.

Campus group seeks diverse membership

SHAPE SEARCHES FOR MALES, MINORITIES TO EDUCATE STUDENTS.

JAMI BOYLES
Kansas State Collegian

More male and minority students are needed as members of STD, HIV and AIDS Peer Educators, or SHAPE, on campus, Reita Currie, SHAPE instructor, said.

SHAPE is a campus organization that educates the public about sexually transmitted diseases and sexuality. The student educators go out in teams to give presentations to campus and community organizations.

There are only three men and one minority student out of the 30 SHAPE members, Currie said.

"We prefer to send at least one male and one female to each presentation," Currie said. "With the numbers, you can see, it doesn't always happen."

Currie said a mixture of backgrounds helps students relate to the people they are presenting to. She said she gets positive feedback from groups that have both males and females presenting.

"We wouldn't want a class of all males, either," she said. "We still need that mix. It is important for the groups to identify that it's not just a male or female problem."

Kristen Carrel, junior in pre-nursing, said she thought it was tough in certain circumstances to give presentations when there weren't enough male or minority students on the team.

"It's kind of uncomfortable when a group of all girls go to a fraternity to give a presentation," she said. "That goes with multicultural organizations, too."

Currie said she has also received positive feedback about student teams with minority students. She said having different backgrounds added new insights to the group, because all people have different ways of communicating about sex.

Charlie Matteson, senior in microbiology and SHAPE member, said having more minority students would benefit the program because the rate of STDs among minority groups is growing at a higher rate.

Currie said she isn't sure why fewer male and minority students have applied to the program in the past. The problem might be that more women have been interested in health-related fields, she said, but students might not realize they do not need this background to get involved with SHAPE.

Matteson said being one of the few male educators does not make him feel uncomfortable. He said he encourages people to get involved.

"The presentations can be fun," he said. "It is rewarding to go out and talk to people."

Currie said there are no prerequisites to be a member of SHAPE. It accepts students from all backgrounds and majors.

"We can teach them the knowledge base," Currie said. "The only prerequisite is to get involved. Everyone starts at ground zero."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 2, 1998

OPINION EDITOR: CLAUDETTE RILEY

OURview

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other staff members. Our View is the Collegian's official opinion.

Collegian explains election coverage policies

In one week, the 1998-99 General Elections begin.

With each vote, the student body has the opportunity to select representatives and determine student campus leadership.

On Sunday, the candidates were able to post campaign materials on campus, including banners for student body president and vice president tickets. Students can stop at campaign tables for candidates in the K-State Student Union all week.

Each day this week, the Collegian will publish profiles about each of the student body president and vice president tickets. The profiles will run on Page 3, and there will be consistent photo size and article length. In addition, each ticket may submit a 500-word column about its platform. These will run in alphabetical order all week.

All the candidates were asked their position on five separate issues: a student fee to fund Hale Library, Student Senate membership limits/quotas for Greeks and non-Greeks, further commercialization of the K-State Student Union, a user-fee based privilege fee system, and expansion of bicycle facilities on campus. The Collegian will publish each candidate's responses as well as report on the issues.

The purpose of the Voter's Guide, which comes out Monday, is to show the candidates' answers on campus issues.

Candidates were asked what they think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year, what makes them more qualified to represent their college than other opponents and how they plan to increase communication between SGA and the student body.

Letters to the editor will be accepted all week with preference given to election matters, but letters of direct support will not be published. However, all letters about campus issues will run as space allows.

Please take advantage of these opportunities to learn about candidates. Make wise choices during the General Election next week. Exercise your right to vote.

One person CAN make a difference

Five years ago, I began another journey of my life that would not have been possible without the help of a successful man named Ewing M. Kauffman.

He was the former owner of the Kansas City Royals and the founder of the Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation in Kansas City, Mo. He started his own business from the basement in his house. His pharmaceutical company later became a large company known as Marion Merrell Dow Inc.

Kauffman was a graduate of Westport High School, which is in Kansas City. At the beginning of my eighth-grade year, he offered ninth-graders who attended Westport High School an opportunity that seemed too good to be true. He pledged to pay a tuition scholarship for those who graduated from high school for the class of 1992. Yes, a free ride to any college as long as they graduated on time from high school, stayed drug free and maintained a C average.

The following year, when I entered the high school, Kauffman extended his scholarship program to my high school class of 1993. This program was officially known as Project Choice. Kauffman continued his scholarship offer for a few more years and later expanded it to a few selected individuals in the Kansas City, Kan., school district. At one point, all the students who attended Westport High School had a full-ride scholarship as long as they met the scholarship requirements.

When I received the scholarship, I didn't know what I had. I really didn't know the value of a college education, and the scholarship seemed too good to be true. Yes, he had his requests. It was to do our best, stay drug free and always to give back to our communities. It was easy for me to fulfill his requirements because everything he asked of us, I had wanted to do already.

It was the simplest thing to do, yet so many students seem to let the golden opportunity pass them by. Some spectators of the program even believed the program failed because it hadn't produced enough post-secondary graduates.

I know meeting his requirements were more challenging for some students. However, we all had a support group put into place and a hotline we could call any time we had problems. Yet, a lot of people question the program and if it was really worth the hundreds of thousands of dollars Kauffman invested in all of us.

The program seemed to fail because not many students took advantage of their scholarship. It seems on a larger scale that many observers failed to recognize that at one point, inner-city Westport High School had a student body that was about 95-percent drug free. Everyone in the program took random drug tests, and this percentage was calculated from the findings.

Without a doubt, this aspect of the program passed with flying colors. Still, some people wondered how this stranger to many of the students could hand them everything and anything we all needed to get ahead in life and ask for so little. Many wonder, in fact, why the program seemed to turn out fewer college graduates than expected.

However, I believe that the program for the most part did work and is successful. It was those students who worked hard and had their family's support who seemed to do well. It was the students in high school who really knew what this opportunity entailed who seem to still be in higher education. They are the ones who took advantage of the program. The program is successful because the students who continued through higher education made the choice early on in the program that they were going to do it.

It has been five years, and although I did not make it through college in four years, Kauffman's foundation continued to fund my education. I will finally graduate in May. Kauffman's foundation continued to fund many of the students' fifth years, and there are about seven of us here at K-State who will be graduating in May. The hard work and dedication we put into our schoolwork could not have been possible for many of us without the help of Kauffman.

I had the opportunity to meet Kauffman before he died a few years ago. I know that on graduation day 0he will be beside all of us in spirit. He gave many of us the opportunity to dream and made those dreams into reality.

He gave us a chance when it seemed no one else really cared. It is because of him many students will be first-generation college graduates. I took this time to thank him and all the staff at the Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation for being there when we all needed some sort of support.

I would also like to congratulate all the other Project Choice students who will be graduating from this campus in May. It was a long and hard journey, and the end is almost here. Everyone should remember that one person can make a difference, and this was easily proven by Kauffman and his contributions. Thank you, Kauffman, for giving us a chance and believing we could do it. You believed we could do it, and a lot of us did.

Davis, Boomer want to add credibility to K-State politics

VIEWPOINT

GREG DAVIS JIM BOOMER

There is a gap that exists in the communication link between the student body and student government. Our goal is to fill this gap with leadership, not politics. To provide an environment conducive to learning and satisfactory student life, it is imperative that the students have a voice and more control over student government. All students must know that this goal is achievable.

We are both seniors. We are not running for office because we are sticking around for another year and need something to do. In fact, Greg is graduating this May and had already taken a job with Arthur Anderson Consulting in Kansas City, Mo. Greg decided against this opportunity because of our vision for student life here at K-State.

We have credible roots in leadership and democracy. We have both been senior class presidents of two 6A Kansas schools. In 3 1/2 years at K-State, we have served as president of five organizations, vice president of three organizations, and are both members of K-State senior leadership honoraries. Eight different scholarships, four different excellence in leadership awards, and four different community service awards are shared between us. We are fully capable of bringing the power back to the students.

The main issue here is communication — two-way communication. With a proposed Wildcat Outreach Program, we will go and get student-derived issues and feedback from different campus organizations every week. To relay information to the students, we propose a biweekly column in the Collegian. This will explain exactly what is going on in student government and our university.

The advancement of technology must be a goal that is constantly pursued. We must push for more multimedia access in all of our colleges. The KATS system must be made all-inclusive and provide our students with capabilities that make enrollment easier, give information about prospective instructors and set up a road map for educational planning.

There is a need for more mentoring at all levels of education. We support an academic/student life proposal that would maximize mentoring opportunities and increase freshman retention levels.

We believe the Student Governing Association should act as a "clearing house" to provide community service opportunities for students. The D.A.R.E. program, Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan, and the Flint Hills Breadbasket should be incorporated to blend community and campus living.

You cannot increase the power of the students without getting them involved first. We propose seven new task forces to SGA, all made up of 20 students. These proactive committees will be a diverse representation of our campus. These task forces will focus on tangible, specific goals, such as K-State women's issues, and will constantly address these issues with action plans.

We want to be change agents. Establishing communication, enhancing leadership and soliciting student body involvement can make K-State the best learning environment in the Midwest. When you see Davis and Boomer signs on campus, think of all the right reasons to enhance student life. ### Underfunded Hale Library reduces quality of education

Editor,

The library system here at K-State is underfunded. This is not a situation unique to K-State — it is a national challenge in academia. The crux of the matter is that rising costs have restricted the quantity and quality of resources available to students. Inadequate library resources reduce the quality of education and constrain student development.

In keeping with the spirit here at K-State, the administration has taken a stance of being proactive in resolving a library issue that hinders student success. A library task force, consisting of administrators, faculty and students was convened to research possible library funding alternatives. A solution beyond merely putting a Band-Aid on a hemorrhage is needed. With a long-term vision, the task force recommended a strategy that combines several funding alternatives.

The most equitable alternative incorporates level funding from Kansas citizens, K-State administration, the KSU Foundation and us, the students.

To date, the governor, the Foundation and the K-State administration have agreed to be part of a joint funding plan. They have committed; why don't we? For roughly $10.20 per semester (85 cents per credit hour, 12-hour cap), the students can be part of a plan to advance their success here at K-State.

It is my fear that failing to be proactive now will force us to be reactive later. By rejecting a very small privilege fee now as a part of a team effort, it is possible that students can jeopardize the volition of the governor and others to help fund the library in the long run. If this results, students might have to bear the full tax of supporting the library in the future.

I am a non-funded student here at K-State. The cost of education is very real to my pocketbook. The value of my degree in the market place is also very real to me. Spending $10.20 now as a part of a team effort is more attractive than having the sole responsibility of library funding fall upon the students in the future.

We as students must take the responsibility for our own education and ensure that proper resources and complementary inputs are available for our success. Be a part of the team, and support the library privilege fee. Take the time to notify a student senator of your opinion.

Alumni building design unfit for campus scheme

Editor,

Why is it that architects just don't "get it"? Why is it that, in the past few years, only one architectural firm hired to build on campus — Bowman & Associates, the architects of Hale Library — understood that there is a theme to K-State's architecture?

I'm talking about Romanesque castle design. Parapets and towers and turrets! There is a theme going on here that unifies the K-State campus. So why aren't architects playing on that theme? Every time we have a new building that doesn't play upon that theme, the overall effect is jarring.

It's like having a symphony where everyone is on the same page, except for some trumpet players who want to play their own composition without regard to the context in which they're playing.

Now, playing a variation on the theme would work — something Hale does well. But when you go so far outside the architectural theme, it clashes. Painfully. Context is everything.

Granted, I am not an architect, nor am I an architecture student. But one thing I do understand is architectural context, and based on the sketches run in the Collegian on Tuesday, the design for the new alumni building doesn't work well in context.

Memorial Stadium and Nichols Hall are two of the most distinctive and memorable buildings on campus. With their castle-like design and their prominent placement on Anderson Avenue, they set an architectural theme for the rest of the campus. They have a timeless sense that makes the campus unique and visually interesting.

But the new alumni building looks like, well, it looks like a yuppie condo from any nameless upscale suburb. Or some country club. Visually, it does nothing to tie the two halves of Memorial Stadium together or continue with the castle theme. It doesn't even play a variation on the theme, and thus it's fatally flawed.

A couple of years ago, students fought to keep the architectural integrity of Memorial Stadium intact when the proposal was made to turn it into a parking garage. Frankly, I would have preferred to make the stadium a garage by completing the original horseshoe design than see the integrity of the stadium and the campus destroyed like this.

There are so many creative things that could have been done to make this building interesting by integrating it with what's already there. But it seems that the architectural firm Gossen Livingston Associates of Wichita was less interested in context and more interested in designing the generic building they wanted.

Perhaps if the KSU Alumni Association had sought student input, as they had promised, then we might not be faced with this eyesore being built.

The only way this design could have been worse is if they had faced the second story with bare structural concrete.

Collegian biased, lacks quality news judgment

Editor,
When I purchase a newspaper, turn on National Public Radio, or see an episode of "20/20," I assume each of these resources will provide me with information I can process and interpret and thus use to form opinions. I do not believe this to be true of the Collegian.

In many instances, I find this newspaper to be biased, not well written and lacking in newsworthy reporting. This is not an opinion that I have happened upon haphazardly rather I have formed this opinion in the past five years as both a student and an alumnus.

Let me provide two examples of the idiosyncratic reporting that I have come to expect of the Collegian. In the recent review of Student Body President Tim Riemann, all that I gleaned from both the article and the editorial board's opinion was hypocritical reporting. I know Riemann, as do the members of the Student Publications Inc. staff, and I must say that your recent description of this campus leader and his accomplishments truly showed your inability to report and your ability to judge.

Another example of the biased reporting by your staff has been the recent barrage of articles about Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications.

In this case, I do not know the man, and your staff does. Therefore I would assume it to be your role and responsibility as soon-to-be journalism professionals to provide me with unbiased information regarding the events that surrounded this story. Further, I would trust that you would also have the ability to know when enough is enough and move on.

All in all, I must reiterate a recent letter to the editor in saying that I am disappointed with the system. As a person who teaches on this campus, I find it alarming that we consider the Collegian experience a learning process. Further, it is disheartening to think that John Kieran once said, "I am a part of all I have read." For me that can only mean one thing: It is in my best interest to stop reading the Collegian.

As for Tim Riemann, someone once said that after a team reaches a goal, a true leader is the one who remains unthanked because the team feels it has reached the accomplishment itself.

Collegian evaluation of Riemann off mark

Editor,
I was deeply concerned by your editorial and front page article Wednesday regarding Student Body President Tim Riemann and his job performance. I feel your evaluation of success in office was completely off the mark.

The diverse demands on a student body officer are many, and they are great. As a former student body officer, I learned at least one important lesson while in office: The ultimate test of a successful term is whether you left the university's quality of life better than the way you found it. Now that does not mean everyone in public life has the obligation to change the world to be successful.

What it means is not all of your accomplishments are big public events that grab headlines in the newspaper. Instead, much of the work of a student body officer is done behind the scenes working out the small details and advocating student-friendly changes in the university structure.

As most people probably remember, I ran against Riemann last year. Your editorial said to me that you were upset and disappointed that Riemann has not made it in the headlines with his accomplishments. Last spring the Collegian endorsed Riemann. Obviously the staff at that time felt that Riemann had what it took to be a successful student leader. Now I, for one, felt that during the Chris Hansen/Aaron Otto term in 1996-97, we accomplished several if not most of our campaign goals, and they were covered in the Collegian as they happened.

When the next elections rolled around, the Collegian chose not to endorse the ticket that had had its accomplishments in the headlines, which I respect its right to do. However, it appears to me that you can't have it both ways; if you support people who do things that get their name in the headlines, then be constant. But to endorse a candidate who did not get his name in the headlines and then criticize him for it is a perfect definition of hypocrisy.

Let's review this issue with some basic questions to see if Riemann is guilty as charged, as your editorial has suggested. Has Riemann grabbed the headlines with bold statements? The answer is no. Has Riemann grabbed the headlines with some too-broad-to-be-accomplished ideas (that is, a solution to end the parking problem)? The answer is no. Has Riemann been missing in action and not performing his duties as a student body officer? The answer is no.

Now if those questions did not clarify the issue, how about these: Has Riemann been constantly trashed in the newspaper and through chain e-mails to K-State journalism alumni? The answer is yes. Has Riemann been working to cause positive change on issues such as the Lafene Health Center fee? The answer is yes.

Political figures in this day and age should expect a fair amount of review and criticism of their work in office. However, when we begin to personally and maliciously attack individuals, that is where we need to draw the line. I wonder if the recent harsh coverage of Riemann and student government has anything to do with the incredibly low number of people who filed for office this year. If you listen, I think you can almost hear them saying, "I'm not going to get involved in that and have my life destroyed by personal attacks. It is not worth it."

Column lacks logic, tact regarding protesters

Editor,
Scott Hopper's Feb. 26 column is a shallow attempt to discredit anti-war activists by relying on racism, faulty logic and propaganda. Hopper's column creates a false and racist distinction between the real American nation and people from the Middle East. Hopper implies that Middle Easterners who oppose war against Iraq are less worthy of serious consideration because "they are ... taking advantage of our freedom of speech."

For Hopper, it seems freedom of speech is a right for white native-born Americans and only a fragile privilege for non-white immigrants who might have difficulty hiding their accents. Rather than engage the content of what people who oppose war against Iraq have to say, Hopper is more comfortable attempting to discredit the speakers themselves. This is not only implicitly racist but a logical fallacy as well.

Hopper then proceeds to make the silly claim that CNN and the news media generally have an anti-war bias because they focus too much attention on a vocal minority of Middle Easterners who oppose U.S. military action in the Persian Gulf because of their ethnic identity. The truth is CNN has a vested interest in portraying opposition to war as a minority, foreign and un-American view. CNN's strategy more likely has the effect of isolating anti-war opinion as being outside the mainstream.

This shouldn't come as a surprise, because CNN and almost all mainstream media are owned by corporate America. They reap profits from increased advertising revenues when more people tune in to watch as smart bombs kill people, complete with instant replay and expert commentary. War is good for business — including the media.

Hopper inadvertently supports this alternate explanation when he mentions that Americans "remember the Iran hostage crisis, the bombing of Pan Am 103, the invasion of Kuwait and the Arab Israeli war." What most Americans don't remember (because the mainstream media choose not to remind them) is that U.S. policy in the Middle East has included the CIA-sponsored assassination of popular democratic leaders to secure Anglo-American oil interests (Iran, 1953); CIA car bombings of innocent people (Lebanon, 1983) and having the U.S. Navy shell Lebanese villagers with 16-inch cannons (1983).

Most importantly, the United States has systematically provided political, military and financial support for torture, terrorism, ethnic cleansing and genocide by Israel, against Palestinians, and Turkey, against Kurds. Another thing most Americans don't remember is that the United States provided intelligence, economic support and weapons technology for Iraq during its war with Iran. U.S. aid to Iraq persisted even after Saddam Hussein's use of chemical weapons against Iran and the Kurdish people became common knowledge.

What Americans remember and don't remember about U.S. policy in the Middle East is largely the result of what the mainstream media and their corporate owners decide is important for the American people to remember. Very clearly, corporate media and corporate America are closely aligned, if not one and the same. The U.S. speech that really connects with the majority of the people is only available to those with the money to buy it. This is why most "town meetings" sound more like infomercials than real discussions or debates.

This is also why Hopper would rather talk about people's speech patterns and accents than discuss the substance and content of U.S. policy in the Middle East.

Timeless moral battles find Christians taking opposing viewpoints

Editor,
I would like to thank you for providing me with a laugh before starting work on Friday. Initially I found Sam Sackett's column on morality just annoying with an answer-to-everything attitude. However, as I considered what he wrote, I realized he seems to be yet another "the Bible says it is correct and unchanging, therefore it is, and I don't have to think."

I really have to wonder what Sackett really knows about Christianity. If the morality laid out in the Bible is unchanging, am I to assume Sackett supports slavery? The laws regarding slaves are clearly laid out in Exodus 21:1-27. I use this only as a convenient example.

In case Sackett is not aware of the fact, there have been Christians on both sides of every big moral question. This includes U.S. slavery, the right of a woman to have an abortion, the morality of using birth control, and let us not forget the righteousness of capital punishment.

This is just within Christianity, unless one considers those who draw different conclusions to not be true Christians. And let us not forget that Christianity is not the only "one true religion" with the "one true book of God."

While underlying rules are necessary for a society, these rules do change over time, no matter what a person might believe.

MONDAY, MARCH 2, 1998

Three days, nine events and too many good times to count. If saddle bronc riding, barrel racing and calf roping make a good time, then the 42nd annual KSU Rodeo in K-State's Weber Arena is where to find it, because that's

Twenty years ago, when Kandee Kraft was only a week old, her father won the bareback riding event at the KSU Rodeo.

Now, one day after celebrating her 20th birthday, Kraft, sophomore in business, competed in the breakaway roping event finals at the 42nd annual KSU Rodeo.

The rodeo took place this weekend in Weber Arena. Twenty-five K-State students competed in this year's rodeo out of the 524 contestants who came from colleges across Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma, Steve Frazier, K-State rodeo coach, said.

Contestants were able to compete in nine different events. Individuals who have placed in the top-two positions in each event for the year in their region get the chance to compete in the College National Finals Rodeo in Montana.

Breakaway roping is one of three women's events at the rodeo. It is a variation of calf roping, Kraft said.

Kraft, who also competed in the barrel racing and goat-tying events, entered the finals in fifth place after her ride on Friday.

"I haven't been to college rodeo in a year, so I was really happy with my performance," she said.

Kraft's mother, Cheri, was also a member of the K-State rodeo team about 20 years ago. She said she thought her daughter competed well.

"I think she was a little bit nervous, being her first college rodeo at K-State," Cheri Kraft said.

Kraft was one of four K-Staters to make it to the finals Sunday. The top-10 individuals from each event on Friday and Saturday made it to the finals.

Jill Gerardy, junior in advertising, made it in two events for the finals — breakaway and goat tying.

Gerardy won the breakaway for Friday and Saturday's performances, but didn't get a time in the finals. She also tied for seventh overall in goat tying.

"There is always room for improvement," Gerardy said. "The Central Plains Region is one of the toughest regions. I try to improve somehow each year."

Other K-State students competing in finals were Josh Cartmill, senior in animal sciences and industry, in the saddle bronc event, and Ryan McDonald, senior in construction science, in the bull-riding event. Neither rode the full eight seconds to get a score.

"I started out good, then it jumped up underneath me, and I couldn't hang on," McDonald said.

Frazier said the rodeo changes somewhat every year, but the public saw a top set of collegiate athletes and bucking stock this year.

"I'm pretty proud of the team's overall performance," Frazier said. "They accomplished what they came out to do in each event, and I'm proud of the way they handled this year's rodeo."

Rodeo schedule highlights weekend with action, humor

A crowd packed Weber Arena to watch some of the nation's top collegiate rodeo athletes compete in the KSU Rodeo.

The sold-out Saturday afternoon performance was Kids Day at the rodeo. Those who competed last weekend in the Junior Rodeo were admitted free.

All children received a free flying disc.

The audience was entertained by the wit and cowboy humor of professional bullfighter Scott Cameron of Boulder, Colo.

He amused the audience while keeping the bulls away from the cowboys.

Manhattan-area McDonald's and Farm Credit sponsored the Kids Day matinee performance of the rodeo. Farm Credit provided the flying discs, and McDonald's provided the discount coupons to the children and their families.

Leslie Hollingshead, a member of the Fort Scott Community College Rodeo Team, said he was impressed by the turnout for Kids Day.

"Attendance at the afternoon performance is usually low, especially in the early spring," Hollingshead said.

"It's nice to see parents bring their kids out and introducing them to the sport of rodeo."

A scoreboard in the west end of Weber Arena was new for the rodeo. It displayed unofficial times and scores of the rides. Previously, there was no display for the audience to see the elapsed time, and it had to wait for the announcer to tabulate the scores.

The evening performance was preceded by the coronation of the new Miss Rodeo KSU.

The winner has a chance to move on to compete in the Miss Rodeo Kansas this summer in Dodge City, Kan. The winner of the Miss Rodeo KSU contest often fares well at the state level. The three contestants competed in categories such as speech, fashion, modeling and horsemanship.

Jessica Carnahan, junior in animal science and 1997 Miss KSU Rodeo, passed the crown to Angie Hards, a senior in pre-veterinary medicine from Oneida, Kan.

After Hards took the traditional queen's lap around the arena, the rodeo festivities began.

Pyrotechnics spelled out K-S-U on the ground as the rodeo announcer introduced the KSU Rodeo Club officers and members.

Carnahan brought the American flag into the arena as her last official duty as Miss KSU Rodeo.

SPORTS ROUND-UP

Sports Round-up is your daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports outside of K-State. Compiled from Associated Press reports.

Clack dislocates shoulder, doubtful for Big 12 tourney

AUSTIN, Texas — Kris Clack, the Texas Longhorns' leading scorer this season, is likely to miss this week's Big 12 Tournament after dislocating his right shoulder in practice Sunday.

Clack, who is left-handed, suffered the injury in a collision with 245-pound forward Nnabubem Muoneke on a fast break during a scrimmage session. He left practice with his shoulder in a sling.

CLACK

He was listed as doubtful for Texas' tournament game against Texas Tech on Thursday.

Losing Clack, who averaged 17.6 points per game this season and also led the team in assists, steals and minutes, is the latest blow in a long and difficult season for the 12-16 Longhorns.

"It's been that kind of season," said coach Tom Penders. "I'm almost afraid to do anything but layup drills and walk-throughs."

Guard Luke Axtell, who has a back injury, and guard DeJuan Vazquez, who has a severe arm bruise, both missed practice on Sunday. Axtell was listed as probable and Vazquez questionable for the tournament.

NCAA men's top-25 hoops

No. 4 Kansas 71,
No. 25 Oklahoma State 67

STILLWATER, Okla. — Raef LaFrentz scored 13 of his 17 points in the second half Sunday and also grabbed 14 rebounds to help No. 4 Kansas to a 71-67 victory over No. 25 Oklahoma State.

PETERSON

The Jayhawks (31-3, 15-1 Big 12) led by 13 points at halftime and by 10 with 6:28 remaining, but had to withstand a rally to beat Oklahoma State (21-5, 11-5) for the sixth straight time and end the Cowboys' seven-game winning streak.

Five of LaFrentz's rebounds were at the offensive end, with two of the biggest coming in the final minute.

Paul Pierce, who had 13 points, made two free throws with 13 seconds left to give Kansas a five-point lead. The Cowboys got within two on a three-pointer by Chad Alexander with 7.1 seconds remaining, but Kansas sealed the victory with a fastbreak dunk by Nick Bradford.

Adrian Peterson had 18 points for Oklahoma State.

No. 11 Purdue 99,
No. 10 Michigan St. 96, OT

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Brad Miller scored 18 of his season-high 30 points in the second half and Mike Robinson made two free throws with 30 seconds left in overtime to lift the Boilermakers.

The loss forces the Spartans to share the Big Ten regular-season title with Illinois although they will be the top seed for the conference tournament.

Jason Klein hit a jumper from just beyond the free-throw line with 45 seconds remaining in overtime to give Michigan State (20-6, 13-3) a 96-95 lead. Robinson was fouled after grabbing an offensive rebound and made both free throws to give the Boilermakers (24-6, 12-4) a 97-96 lead.

Washington 95, No. 18 UCLA 94

SEATTLE — Todd MacCulloch's two free throws with 2.1 seconds left lifted Washington to the victory, keeping the Huskies' NCAA Tournament hopes alive and breaking a 10-game losing streak to the Bruins.

Kris Johnson's three-pointer with 12 seconds left gave UCLA a one-point lead, but teammate J.R. Henderson fouled out holding MacCulloch on an inbounds play, sending the 7-footer to the line for the decisive free throw.

The fourth-place team in the Pac-10, Washington won its first game over a ranked opponent after five defeats.

The Huskies are seeking their first NCAA berth since 1986, the longest tournament drought among Pac-10 schools.

Toby Bailey scored all of his 32 points in the second half for UCLA (21-7, 11-5).

No. 24 Temple 74,
No. 20 Massachusetts 66

PHILADELPHIA — Pepe Sanchez scored 19 points and Rasheed Brokenborough added 16 as the Owls won the Eastern Division of the Atlantic 10.

The victory gave Temple (20-7, 13-3) a first-round bye in the league tournament, which begins Wednesday in Philadelphia.

Monty Mack had 15 points for the Minutemen (20-9, 12-4) who committed 20 turnovers. They will meet Virginia Tech in the tournament's first round.

Temple led 33-27 at halftime, but UMass scored eight straight points to begin the half and took a 35-33 lead on two foul shots by Mack.

No. 23 Syracuse 77, Georgetown 72, OT
SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Todd Burgan's clutch shooting and timely defensive plays rallied the Orangemen.

Burgan scored all 19 of his points after halftime as he led Syracuse (22-7, 12-6 Big East) back from a 10-point deficit during the final 5:14 to send Georgetown (14-13, 6-12) to its seventh loss in 10 games.

Cats battle No. 6 Lady Raiders to wire

DAN MERKER
Kansas State Collegian

There is no place for logic in sports.

Logic would say the K-State women's basketball team, a squad that had lost eight of its nine previous games, didn't belong in the same gym as the No. 6 team in the country, Texas Tech.

Logic would say after losing two consecutive games by at least 30 points, a better team than those who destroyed the Wildcats would have no problem matching that margin of victory.

But on Saturday afternoon in front of a season-high 3,770 fans in Bramlage Coliseum, the Cats nearly came away with their biggest win of the season, throwing a scare to the Lady Raiders. When the final buzzer sounded, K-State came up just short, losing 67-62 to finish its regular season at 10-16 overall and 4-12 in the Big 12. K-State will be the No. 11 seed for the Big 12 Tournament in Kansas City, Mo., which starts Tuesday.

The game was the last in Bramlage for K-State guard Britt Jacobson, the team's only senior. During the game, she became only the second player in K-State history to record more than 1,500 points, 200 steals and 200 assists.

"I knew I was going to be really emotional," Jacobson said, "but I also knew there was a game to be played. It was about playing Tech the best that we could."

The Cats started the game using a trapping full-court press to force the Lady Raiders into four early turnovers and used those turnovers to take an early lead. K-State used that solid defense and transition play to keep Texas Tech scoreless in the game's first 4:42 and take an early 11-0 lead on the Big 12 regular-season champions.

Tech forward Alicia Thompson, a preseason All-American and the conference's leading scorer, led the Lady Raiders to a comeback with a soft shooting touch and aggressive inside play. Thompson scored a game-high 27 points to help Texas Tech slowly pull back into the game.

The Lady Raiders tied the score at 33 late in the first half, but the Cats responded every time the score evened to take a 39-35 halftime lead.

K-State shot a season-high 65.4 percent from the field in the first half, and no player entering the game for K-State shot less than 50 percent.

"I think it was as good as we've played," Coach Deb Patterson said. "It was really pleasing to see this team come out and compete well, compete with intensity and, I think, with intelligence."

In the second half, the game became a see-saw affair. Virtually every time the Lady Raiders tied the game, the Cats responded to retake the lead. Early in the half, the game was tied at 43, but K-State scored seven consecutive points to lead 50-43.

Tech responded to tie the game several more times, but didn't take the lead until a jumper by Tech guard Julie Lake gave the Lady Raiders a lead they would not relinquish. Before that, the game had been tied seven times without the Cats falling behind.

"It's a heartbreaking defeat," Patterson said. "I feel good about our effort, because I don't feel you find yourself in games with Texas Tech too often."

K-STATE'S ANGIE FINKES, CENTER, AND BRANDY HARRIS BATTLE FOR THE BASKETBALL WITH TEXAS TECH'S ANGIE BRAZIEL DURING SECOND-HALF ACTION SATURDAY AFTERNOON IN BRAMLAGE. THE CATS LOST 67-62.

Inside play dominates women's game against Lady Raiders

DAN MERKER
Kansas State Collegian

The key to beating a team with a preseason all-America player in the lineup is to contain that player. Saturday, K-State had little success containing Texas Tech forward Alicia Thompson.

The Wildcats did keep her at fewer than 30 points, something six teams have failed to do this season, but Thompson poured in 27 on Saturday, leading all scorers. That's to be expected, though, from a player averaging 23.2 points per contest.

Saturday's game was dominated by inside play. Thompson and post player Angie Braziel combined for 49 of the Lady Raiders' 67 points, as well as 15 rebounds and five blocks, setting Tech up for the win.

Because she is an All-American, Thompson goes into every game as a marked woman. Texas Tech coach Marsha Sharp said it shows how good she is to continue to perform with all that attention.

"She's an awesome player," Sharp said. "She may be the best player for an extended period of time that I've coached."

The Cats' post players held their own against Texas Tech. For the second consecutive game, center Angie Finkes had more than 20 points, finishing with 23. Forwards Brandy Harris and Nicky Ramage also had quality performances for the Cats, combining for 18 points on eight-of-12 shooting and five rebounds.

K-State coach Deb Patterson said the future is good for the Cats inside, because Finkes and Ramage are sophomores and Harris is a freshman.

Finkes set the tone for the Cats' upset bid in the first half, racking up 14 of her points on seven-of-10 shooting before halftime and leading K-State to a four-point halftime lead.

Finkes has really stepped her game up this year, particularly during Big 12 play, and has become the team's leading scorer.

"She's taking all of these experiences in like a sponge," Patterson said. "It's made her a more confident player. All of that is credited to her. She's evaluated herself and really absorbed what there is to learn. I'm really pleased with the composure she played with."

Finkes is a little more modest about her progress.

"It's just clicking better than it was," she said. "I'm realizing what I have to do and not trying to take on so much and just do what I know how to do."

Tigers take Cats by the tail, hand K-State blowout loss

SUN DEE MILLS
Kansas State Collegian

Three more points.

That's all K-State managed to improve on Missouri's score in the first of the two-game series. The Wildcats suffered their worst defeat in Big 12 history to the Tigers, 89-59, at the Hearnes Center in Columbia, Mo., on Saturday.

In the first game on Jan. 3, Missouri lost in Bramlage Coliseum 111-56, the worst loss in the Tigers' history.

"We played about as poorly today as they played in Manhattan," Coach Tom Asbury said. "We didn't do things we were capable of, and we tried to do too many things we weren't capable of."

Senior guard Aaron Swartzendruber came out of the tipoff and put the first points on the board with a three-pointer.

Tiger senior Kelly Thames answered with a jump shot, and the teams kept it close until the first time out at 14:24.

Following the time out, the Cats turned the ball over six consecutive times, three after K-State defensive rebounds. Meanwhile, the Tigers scored on two of the free balls, taking the lead Missouri would keep for the game.

"In the first half, our problem was our offense and our guards kept turning the ball over," Asbury said. "In the second half, it was our defense."

Led by Tiger senior Tyron Lee, Missouri shot lights-out from the three-point line.

In the first three minutes of the second half, Lee hit two threes and forward John Woods added one.

"I thought in the second half, we played pretty hard defensively," Cat forward Marcus McCollough said. "They just made every shot they took. They were on a roll."

In the last three minutes, Lee, Thames and forward Johnnie Parker put up three threes in a row to give the Tigers their 30-point margin. The Tigers hit 15 of 36 for the game, shooting .588 from the outside in the second half.

"They were just making a majority of their threes," Cat guard Chris Griffin said. "Why tell them not to shoot them? They always went down for them."

SWARTZENDRUBER

For the second game in a row, junior forward Manny Dies did not dress out for disciplinary reasons related to his arrest last weekend. Asbury would not comment on the situation, but Swartzendruber said turnovers, not Dies' absence, hurt the team.

"We missed him quite a bit," he said. "If we'd played like that today with him on the floor, we still would have lost."

In their last game in Hearnes Center, Tiger seniors Lee and Thames were two of three Tigers to score 20 points or more.

Lee dropped in 26 and Thames added 21, while Woods also had 21 points.

"It's always tough to go into someone's house to play," Swartzendruber said. "It was their Senior Day, too. Their two seniors killed us."

With the loss, the Cats drop to 7-9 in the conference and pick up the eighth seed in the Big 12 Tournament, which starts Thursday in Kansas City, Mo., at Kemper Arena. Game time for the Cats, who will play No. 9 seed Colorado, is noon Thursday. The winner will play No. 1 seed Kansas at noon Friday.

"This is not the time to be mad about this loss," Asbury said. "It's now time to regroup and go play in Kansas City."

I WOULD SAY THAT WE WOULD HAVE HAD TO BEAT THEM BY MORE THAN WHAT THEY BEAT US BY FOR IT TO BE EVEN.

DIBI RAY
Missouri guard

To see Joel White's report on how Missouri's 55-point loss to the Cats on Jan. 3 affected the Tigers on Saturday, go to collegian.ksu.edu.

It's time to fill out annual report cards as Big 12 final exams draw near

The Big 12 regular season ended in a catastrophe for the K-State men's basketball team Saturday afternoon.

A Missouri team the Wildcats beat 111-56 on Jan. 3 drilled the Cats 89-59 in the Hearnes Center. It was the worst defeat the Cats have ever suffered in Big 12 play.

In fact, the Cats just stunk.

They couldn't shoot. They couldn't hit free throws. They couldn't take care of the ball. By the time the game ended, the Cats had turned the ball over more times than a blind person taking on the Kentucky press.

We should have seen this coming. After all, the Cats were taking on a Missouri team that had won 12-straight games at home. The Tigers play as if they are possessed while in Hearnes Center. And the Cats were playing without floor leader Duane Davis and scandal-plagued Manny Dies.

But to lose by 30 points is just embarrassing, degrading and downright pitiful. When a team with the Cats' talent loses by 30, it smells of one thing — quitting. The Cats quit in the second half.

On that note, it's grade-card time for the regular season.

Overall: The Cats finished the season 16-10 overall, 7-9 in conference play. If you compare this record with last year's debacle of a season, they definitely had a tremendous season, right?

Wrong. Last year, the Cats were 10-17, and they couldn't have drawn iron if the rim had been expanded by three feet. No one wanted the ball, and if someone had, there wasn't anyone to get it to him.

But last season, the Cats didn't have a true point guard, which they have in Davis now, or a guy having an all-conference year like Dies. This year, the Cats let too many road games slip away. Had the Cats just won two or three on the road, I would be writing about the upcoming NCAA Tournament and the Cats' seed. Instead, the Cats won only a single Big 12 game away from Bramlage Coliseum.

They get a C for the year. When it's all said and done, the Cats are going the same place they did after last season — nowhere.

Coaching: In his four seasons at K-State, Dana Altman won 68 games and lost 54. That equals a winning percentage of 55.7 percent. Altman even beat Kansas twice. After four years, Altman was fired. In contrast, Tom Asbury, with just one scheduled game remaining in his fourth season, is 55-54. That equals a winning percentage of 50.4 percent. Oh, and Asbury has never beaten Kansas.

Hmm, let's keep going. Only one coach in the history of K-State basketball, Frank Root, has a worse winning percentage than Asbury. That's 14 coaches in 92 years of basketball.

There was once a time when K-State didn't accept mediocrity from its coaches. It will be interesting to see what the administration does with Asbury after the season. Do the words "pink slip" come to mind?

I'd give Asbury a C for the year. Win a couple of road games, and his grade goes up.

For his tenure here at K-State, Asbury gets a D. One NCAA Tournament appearance is not tolerable at a school that has gone to the Big Dance 22 times.

Individual: 1. Dies. At times this year, Dies was unstoppable. When he dropped in 26 points and grabbed 11 rebounds against Kansas at Allen Fieldhouse, Dies looked like an All-American. For the year, Dies is averaging 16 points a game, which leads the team.

B for the year. Had Dies not run into some off-court trouble that resulted in him missing the last two regular-season games, he would have gotten an A-.

2. Davis. Davis was exactly what this team needed. He's smart with the ball, he can shoot and runs the floor like a point guard should. Without Davis, the Cats would have gone 9-17 instead of 16-10. B+ for the year.

3. Shawn Rhodes. Rhodes is probably the only center in the Big 12 who prefers lofting three-pointers to rebounding and playing in the paint. But he put in a solid year, and he can hit the threes, so keep shooting them. B for the year.

The Cats played like they expected to win in Bramlage, and they played like they expected to lose on the road.

If the Cats want to go anywhere in postseason play, they better have a huge Big 12 Tournament this week.

Animal shelter not restrictive of owners

THE RILEY COUNTY ANIMAL SHELTER, 605 LEVEE DRIVE, IS A TEMPORARY HOME FOR DOGS AND CATS. THE DOGS AND CATS CAN BE ADOPTED FOR $40 TO $50, DEPENDING ON THEIR AGE.

IVAN KOZAR
Collegian

DIANA LEE
Kansas State Collegian

The Riley County Animal Shelter takes in dogs and cats who have no place else to go and helps them meet people who need a pet to take home.

There are no requirements on who can adopt a pet. As long as people show interest and have money, they can be matched with pets.

"We are a city/county-run facility, and they don't allow us to screen anyone who comes in to adopt an animal," said Lynn Schumacker, animal care technician at the shelter.

This is not to say the staff at the shelter believes this is the best option.

"None of the staff is happy with it. We see a lot of animals that people bring back in a month, around the time they need to be spayed or neutered," she said.

She also said she believes that this keeps some animals from getting the best homes.

"Sometimes the animals are too easily accessible so they might not get the best care. Other times really wonderful people take the animals. It's hard to tell," Schumacker said.

To adopt an animal that is younger than 4 months old, the cost is $40. This includes a $15 adoption fee for shots and worming and a $25 refundable deposit that is returned once the animal is spayed or neutered, at about 6 months of age.

Animals older than 4 months cost $50 to be adopted. In addition to the two fees one pays with the adoption of younger animals, there is also a $10 fee if the animal is not current on its rabies shots. These animals must also be spayed or neutered within 30 days of adoption.

However, if the animal chosen is already spayed or neutered and current on its rabies shots, it can be adopted for $15.

There are two reasons animals end up at the shelter.

"There is owner surrender, which is pretty self-explanatory, and at large, which means the animal was brought in for whatever reason by animal control, the police or the public," Schumacker said.

The shelter is only equipped to deal with the care and housing of dogs and cats.

"We sometimes get calls on other things such as rodents, gerbils, rabbits or parakeets. The staff does attempt to place these, but we do this on our own time," Schumacker said.

Check out health, interaction when adopting shelter animals

PET'S BEHAVIOR SHOULD BE MONITORED ONCE IT IS BROUGHT HOME FROM SHELTER AS INDICATOR OF HEALTH, VET SAYS.

DIANA LEE
Kansas State Collegian

When selecting an animal to adopt from a shelter, it is important to select one that is in the best possible health.

"One thing to watch for in animals' cages is if they come to the front and want to interact with people," said Dr. Kathy Gaughan, clinical instructor at the Veterinary Medicine Small Animal Clinic.

Gaughan said an animal's attitude is a good indicator of its general health.

"A dog with its ears up and a wagging tail and a good attitude is probably feeling good," she said.

There are physical signs that an animal might not be in the best health.

"The presence of a runny nose or eyes or if the dog is thin and unthrifty are signs the dog is unhealthy," Gaughan said.

"Get information from the people at the shelter about how well the animal's been eating, if it has had loose stools, vomiting or diarrhea."

She also suggests finding out why the animal came to the shelter.

"Find out the reason for surrender. Sometimes people are just moving and can't take their pets, but the animal may have been aggressive with children," she said.

Gaughan said if a person is interested in an animal that seems to be not feeling well, it is best to take the animal outdoors.

"If you are interested in an animal but it is acting like this, see if you can take it out of the environment," she said.

A new animal might emerge simply from a change of scenery.

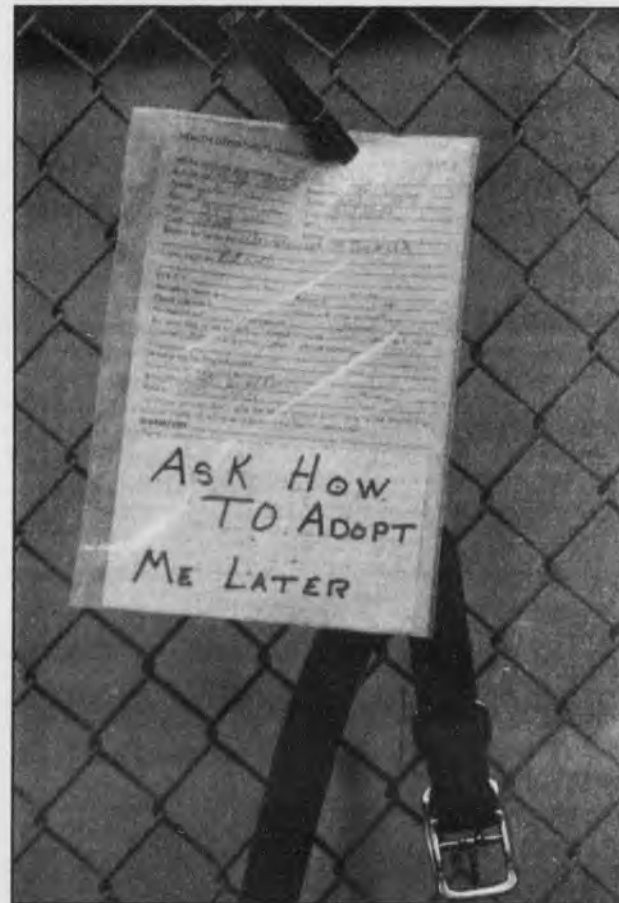

She said some animals become depressed in confinement.

Gaughan also stressed monitoring the behavior of a new pet once it comes home from the shelter.

"Particularly dogs who've been in shelters tend to become overattached to their owners and don't ever want to be away from them," she said.

There is, however, an easy way to combat this.

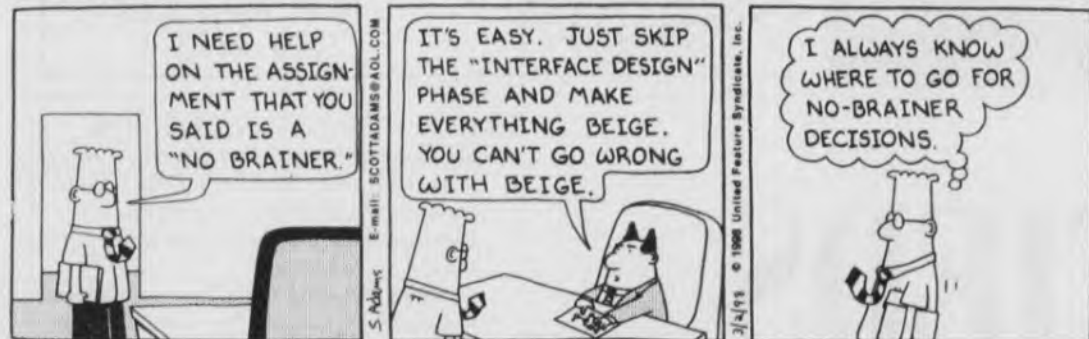

"It is important to make sure to get the dog to a veterinarian and into obedience training as soon as possible," Gaughan said.

Vanilla Ice concert coverage disappointing to reader

Editor,

I am writing to express my disappointment with your coverage of the Vanilla Ice concert. I feel it is necessary to defend Ice's honor against charges leveled against him.

First of all, I do agree completely with your depiction of "Havin' a Roni" as a "classic." This human beat-box display was nothing short of phenomenal to witness live. People who can invent fresh sounds by slapping their own throats repeatedly and create such haunting impressions of a robot deserve the utmost respect. Take it from me; I have been practicing the art for more than a decade but still pale in comparison with this legendary master.

I do, however, take offense to your portrayal of Ice's material as consisting of "repetitive, boring, mindless choruses that consist of yelling the title of the song over and over and over again." Ice takes a very cerebral approach to his music, which is far from "mindless." He likes to take advantage of catchy hooks, but no more so than any other band you will find on MTV these days.

Ice is a class act and treats his fans with the utmost respect. One of my friends managed to work his way backstage, where he was fortunate enough to meet Ice and get an autograph. He described the Ice man as a very gracious and humble individual, who took the time to talk for a few moments despite the fact that he was surrounded by women.

What makes Ice so special is his ability to unify an audience. For one magic moment in time, all the audience members set aside their petty disagreements and selfish problems and joined proudly together to utter the timeless words: Ice, Ice, Baby.

Love warns theater about Cobain movie

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Courtney Love quashed it at Sundance. Now Kurt Cobain's widow is warning a movie theater against screening a documentary suggesting Cobain's death was no suicide.

"Kurt and Courtney," by British filmmaker Nick Broomfield, opened Friday at the Roxie Cinema, the same day the theater got a letter from Love's lawyer warning that the theater would share any liability with the filmmaker and those in the movie who raise questions about Love's role in Cobain's death, such as her father, Hank Harrison.

"We are told that Mr. Broomfield's movie conveys the message that Ms. Love killed her husband Kurt Cobain or somehow participated in his murder. Such accusations are false and defamatory, nothing more," the letter from attorney Michael Chodos said.

Cobain, lead singer of the band Nirvana, was found dead in his Seattle home in 1994 of an apparently self-inflicted gunshot to the head.

He was on heroin at the time, and although his death was ruled a suicide, questions and conspiracy theories continued to swirl on the Internet.

Love's estranged father, along with many of the couple's former friends, say in the film that they believe Love might have been involved in Cobain's death.

"I love my daughter very, very much," Harrison said at a screening Friday.

"I also have very, very dark suspicions about what went on (with Kurt's death) because of my real experience with Courtney."

In one scene, Broomfield visits a musician who claims Love offered him $50,000 to "whack" Cobain.

Love succeeded in getting the film withdrawn from the Sundance Film Festival in January, claiming it featured unauthorized music. Broomfield, who said all licensing was in order, accused festival organizers of cowardice.

Roxie Cinema owner Bill Banning laughed off the legal threat.

"So far, so good. We haven't had any bailiffs show up or anything like that," he said Friday after the first few screenings. "It's really a First Amendment issue."

Master plan development gaining some momentum

in the parking lots and keep the focus of the campus on walking.

The majority of development at K-State in the past decade has been additions to existing buildings.

Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and university architect, is overseeing the redevelopment of the planning process on campus.

He said many buildings developed recently were built with ideas of how they could be expanded.

"We've known for some time potential expansions could be identified on that plan," Carter said, referring to a master plan map that is expected to be developed.

Carter said it's important to consider the planning document a living one, one that can be changed.

"We have a history of failed plans at K-State,"

Carter said.

A Kansas Board of Regents plan in the 1970s identified several campus projects in a long-term context, but it was abandoned after many of the projects came to fruition.

If approved by the regents and the Legislature, a campus consultant could be on campus as soon as July 1, 1999, developing the master plan.

By then, Carter said he expects the campus and the development committee to have reached a conclusion in its discussion of the direction of planning.

"Next year, the Campus Development Committee will continue to refine itself and its outreach to campus in order to have our principles of development much more codified," Carter said. "When the consultant is brought on board, we need a reasonably unified chorus."

Telefund exceeds $1 million

had 1,340 registered callers, and it didn't matter what the weather conditions were. The students showed up in droves," Dowell said.

Sara Kibbe, junior in industrial engineering and Telefund coordinator for Student Foundation, organized the effort to gain the support of area businesses. This year Telefund gave away $40,000 in prizes to callers.

"Telefund is our most important activity of the year," Kibbe said. "We solicit businesses in Manhattan and collect prizes to give away at the end of the night."

Dowell said the leadership of college deans was important to the success of Telefund.

"Each of the academic deans pledged at least $1,000. We would have been just short of our goal without it," Dowell said.

Faculty members were called for the first time and asked to donate to their colleges. The Faculty Telefund raised $15,219.

The Parents' Telefund Scholarship Program also had a jump in support. This year $23,465 in pledges was made by parents, grandparents and other family members of Telefund student callers. Last year the total was $14,170. This money will be distributed in $250 scholarships to callers.

Dowell said he expects Telefund to continue successfully raising money for scholarships and other academic programs.

"I've yet to meet a student who will turn down a scholarship, so we will always strive to raise more money," Dowell said.

However, Kibbe said she can think of one adjustment Telefund might have to make to keep up with its increasing totals.

"We may have to get a bigger board. The dollar amount on the one we have now doesn't go up to one million, so it went to zero when we hit our goal," Kibbe said.

User fees get mixed reviews from students, faculty

said. "I don't think the average student could afford that."

There might also be an office-visit charge of about $5 to $10 in the future. Zweimiller said students will be asked to complete a survey to determine the effects of the charge next fall.

Full-time students pay $84 in privilege fees each semester to Lafene, which will increase to $86 next fall. The increase was recommended last semester after a Student Senate review of Lafene's privilege fee.

Zweimiller said it would be difficult for Lafene to operate on only a user-fee basis.

"It could possibly decrease the range of services available," he said. "We do a lot of things with privilege fees that we couldn't do with a complete user fee."

Zweimiller said relying only on a user fee would increase prices, and might decrease the 13,000 students and 60,000 office visits that Lafene receives annually.

"We all benefit by everyone paying a little bit," Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco said. "It's like an insurance policy. We want to make sure that everyone has access to certain services."

Bosco said fine-tuning to determine a proper balance of privilege fees and user fees would optimize the system.

"I think it's a societal phenomenon that people are questioning — 'If I don't use the service directly, should I still pay for it?'" Bosco said.

Vice President for Administration and Finance Thomas Rawson said organizations with restrictive goals would best suit a user-fee system.

Using the fire department as an example, Rawson said if people only paid the department on a user-fee basis, the system could not function properly.

"I don't think it's healthy for an organization to strictly use user fees," Bosco said. "There ought to be a balance."

The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex was a target for a complete user fee before its construction was finished. Rec Complex Director Raydon Robel said the issue has been dropped in favor of the privilege fee system.

Students pay $12 each semester in campus privilege fees to the Rec Complex. With a user-fee system, only students who use the Rec Complex would pay fees for it.

If the Rec Complex ran on user fees only, he said participation would have decreased. Almost 90 percent of the 3,500 to 4,000 people who visit the Rec Complex daily are students.

Robel said the Rec Complex is an example of an organization where a complete user fee would not be a good solution.

"It's unfortunate that not everybody uses it, but it's the best method we have to pay for a situation like this," he said.

Though it would be difficult for an organization to exist only with user fees, Bosco said the option should stay available so a balance between user fees and privilege fees could be found.

"I think it continues to be a viable option as we attempt to address our fiscal situation," he said.

"It should continue to be a viable option for our students and administration to look at."

Candidates want to increase communication at K-State

While their support for a student fee for the library depends on other funding sources, the candidates' thoughts on a per-visit user fee for Lafene Health Center are cut and dry.

They said they won't support a per-visit fee for students who use the facility.

"There's no way we would support a $5 user fee," Davis said.

Though Davis and Boomer said they advocate creative ways of funding the university, they want to establish a stronger relationship with an old ally — the Kansas Board of Regents. Their plan includes pushing for student members on the board.

"We want to push to get a couple of students on the board and ask for funding in very specific areas like the EBF (Educational Building Fund), to keep up the dollars for more technology on campus," Boomer, senior in accounting, said.

Davis said it's all part of getting more students involved in a variety of ways.

"We want the spirit of people interacting outside the academic realm and to coordinate activities and have fun together. It's not all about government. It's about people stepping outside their comfort zone and getting involved," he said.

Nutrition Notes

The phrase "you are what you eat" was never more true than in bodybuilding. Train hard and eat right and you'll be on the fast track to muscle development. Withhold key nutrients and eat poorly and your muscles will literally have nothing with which to repair themselves and fuel your workouts. Training is only half the equation in bodybuilding. You have to take in enough calories of the right kinds for muscle tissue repair and energy production. If you want to gain muscle size, you need to consume enough high-quality foods to replace the calories burned during training plus additional calories to support the growth of your muscles. On the other hand, if you're trying to lose weight while building muscle, reduce your daily caloric intake by about 300 calories. Combined with physical activity, that amounts to a loss of about 1 pound per week! <http://www.muscle-fitness.com> (Muscle & Fitness On-line), 1998

Pool Action

Swimmers exercise to a different beat. Your heart is a built-in monitor for aerobic exercise. Maintaining your training heart rate for 30 minutes, three times per week increases oxygen demand, burns fat and improves cardiovascular endurance. To find your training heart rate (THR), subtract your age from 220 (maximum heart rate) and multiply by 75. However, if swimming is your means of aerobic exercise, you must subtract the average 13 beats per minute difference there is between swimmers and runners. Subtract your age plus 13 from 220 and multiply by 75. A swimmer's heart rate may be lower because of the body's horizontal position, the cooling effect of the water, or the heart not having to work as hard against gravity. Swim to a different beat and achieve the same great aerobic exercise benefits.

My Favorite WORKOUT

Dwain Archer, Director of Fire Safety Inspections, and Mordean Taylor-Archer, Associate Provost of Diversity & Dual Career Development, have been attending aerobic exercise sessions at the Rec Complex for the past 1-1/2 years. Their favorite sessions are Step/Tone and Intervals, which the Archers attend at least 3 times per week as exercise partners. They have enjoyed the challenge, their classmates, and the instructors who have taken extra time to help them learn the moves. Teamwork, believing in the "healthy body/healthy mind" philosophy, and dedication to improving their health through watching diet and exercising regularly have paid off for the Archers.

Fitness Facts

Success Means Good Eating and Good Exercise

Follow a moderate low-fat diet and an exercise program that combines aerobic activity and strength training. That's the key to losing weight and keeping it off. Begin slowly with an exercise you find comfortable and build as your body becomes accustomed to the activity level. Don't start out too hard or too fast. Chances are you may injure yourself or quit before you've done yourself much good. Remember, you can't lose weight over night. Set a realistic weight-loss goal for yourself - like one to two pounds a week - eat healthy, get going on a program of regular physical activity, and you'll be delighted by what you accomplish. Maintaining a lower, healthier body weight is something you can achieve. So start now and keep on going! American Council on Exercise, 1997

Locker Rentals

For spring semester are now half-price! Rent a locker through May for $5 or through July for $10 and receive towel service at no additional charge. Stop by the administrative office anytime Monday - Friday, 8 a.m. - 5 p.m.

Get Ready for Your Spring Break Trip!

The Outdoor Rental Center is now open to serve your spring outdoor equipment needs! Hours of operation are Sunday through Friday, 4 - 6 p.m., and Saturday, 11 a.m. - 1 p.m. A complete line of camping equipment is available including canoes, tents, sleeping bags, stoves, lanterns, back packs and ice chests. If you are planning a spring break camping trip, please check with us for your equipment needs. Reservations can be made two weeks in advance. Make your plans now for a great spring trip!

Working It Out

Spring break is fast approaching! To help you get into shape, we offer 30 exercise sessions per week. Join us in the multipurpose room and enjoy the variety of classes we offer daily from 7:00 a.m. - 8:30 p.m.

Who's Who

Kelli Sweeney seems like a permanent part of the staff for many exercisers at the Rec Complex. In fact, Sweeney broke in the first Jane Fonda steps the department received and taught aerobics on a raised platform in the small gym. She has been an exercise leader for the past 3-1/2 years and completed a fitness internship with Recreational Services last summer. Native of Wichita, Sweeney will graduate in May with a health fitness promotion degree. After completing certification as a professional trainer following graduation, Sweeney plans to secure a position with a health club in the Wichita or Kansas City area.

Mike Laurie, Building Manager, began working for Recreational Services in January '95 and remembers moving the service area from the old building into the newly expanded area! Laurie said working here through the expansion and watching the facility evolve was a great experience. He is still impressed with the amount and quality of fitness equipment available at the Rec Complex. Laurie, native of Manhattan, graduates in May with a degree in accounting and will begin his auditing career with Arthur Andersen in Kansas City in the fall.

Jason Befort, decided to take a job as Assistant Building Supervisor at the Rec Complex in Fall '95 because he already spent so much time working out and participating in intramural sports. Originally from Pratt, Befort enjoys the staff, likes the environment, and as it turns out, his favorite thing about working at the Rec has been participating in the annual horseshoe competition every spring at the year-end staff party! Befort graduates in May with a degree in secondary education. He plans to teach physical science and coach football and baseball in the Wichita area.

Woman gets more than 13 years for Wilson murder

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian

SABINE DAVIDSON, 27, WAS SENTENCED MONDAY TO 146 MONTHS IN PRISON ON AN UNINTENTIONAL SECOND-DEGREE MURDER CHARGE STEMMING FROM THE DOG-MAULING OF CHRISTOPHER WILSON NEAR MILFORD, KAN. LAST APRIL. SHE WAS SENTENCED TO AN ADDITIONAL 12 MONTHS FOR ENDANGERING A CHILD. HER LAWYER, RON HODGSON, IS AT HER SIDE.

► SABINE DAVIDSON SENTENCED FOR OWNING 3 ROTTWEILERS THAT KILLED 11-YEAR-OLD BOY.

JOHN HENDERSON
Kansas State Collegian

A Geary County woman whose dogs killed an 11-year-old boy last April was sentenced Monday to a total of more than 13 years in prison in Geary County District Court.

Sabine Davidson, 27, was convicted in January of unintentional second-degree murder, a level-two felony, for the death of Christopher Wilson. She was also found guilty of endangering a child, a class-A misdemeanor, in reference to Wilson's 9-year-old brother, Trammell.

Judge George Scott denied motions for acquittal and a new trial by defense attorney Ron Hodgson, and sentenced Davidson to 146 months in prison for the murder charge plus 36 months of parole, and another 12 months in prison for the second charge.

Davidson remains out on a $50,000 appeal bond. She has no criminal record other than the two charges.

The murder charge was based on a relatively new Kansas statute that aggravates a manslaughter charge to a higher level offense, Geary County District Attorney Chris Biggs said.

Davidson had been arrested originally for involuntary manslaughter for admitting she owned the Rottweilers that mauled Wilson near where he and his brother were waiting for the school bus.

Davidson's husband, Jeffrey, had been arrested on the same charges. His trial will begin March 23.

Hodgson argued in court that the examples set by the legislation, which included shooting a firearm randomly into a crowd or playing Russian roulette, did not apply to his client's case because they all involved a defendant acting directly upon another.

"There has been no evidence that this defendant killed Christopher Wilson," Hodgson said.

Biggs countered that the Russian roulette example fit the case.

He had proved in a June hearing that the Davidsons had trained their dogs to be vicious, kenneled them together in their backyard behind a flimsy chain-link fence and disregarded the advice of more experienced dog trainers who warned them their dogs were out of control.

"Obviously, the Legislature didn't offer every possible example," he said.

Sabine Davidson showed no response as the court read her sentence and answered, "No, your honor," when Scott asked if she had a statement.

Brian and Violet Wilson, Christopher's parents, also showed no response as the sentence was read.

After the sentence, Biggs said the facts of Jeffrey Davidson's case were somewhat different, and his wife's conviction would have no effect on his case.

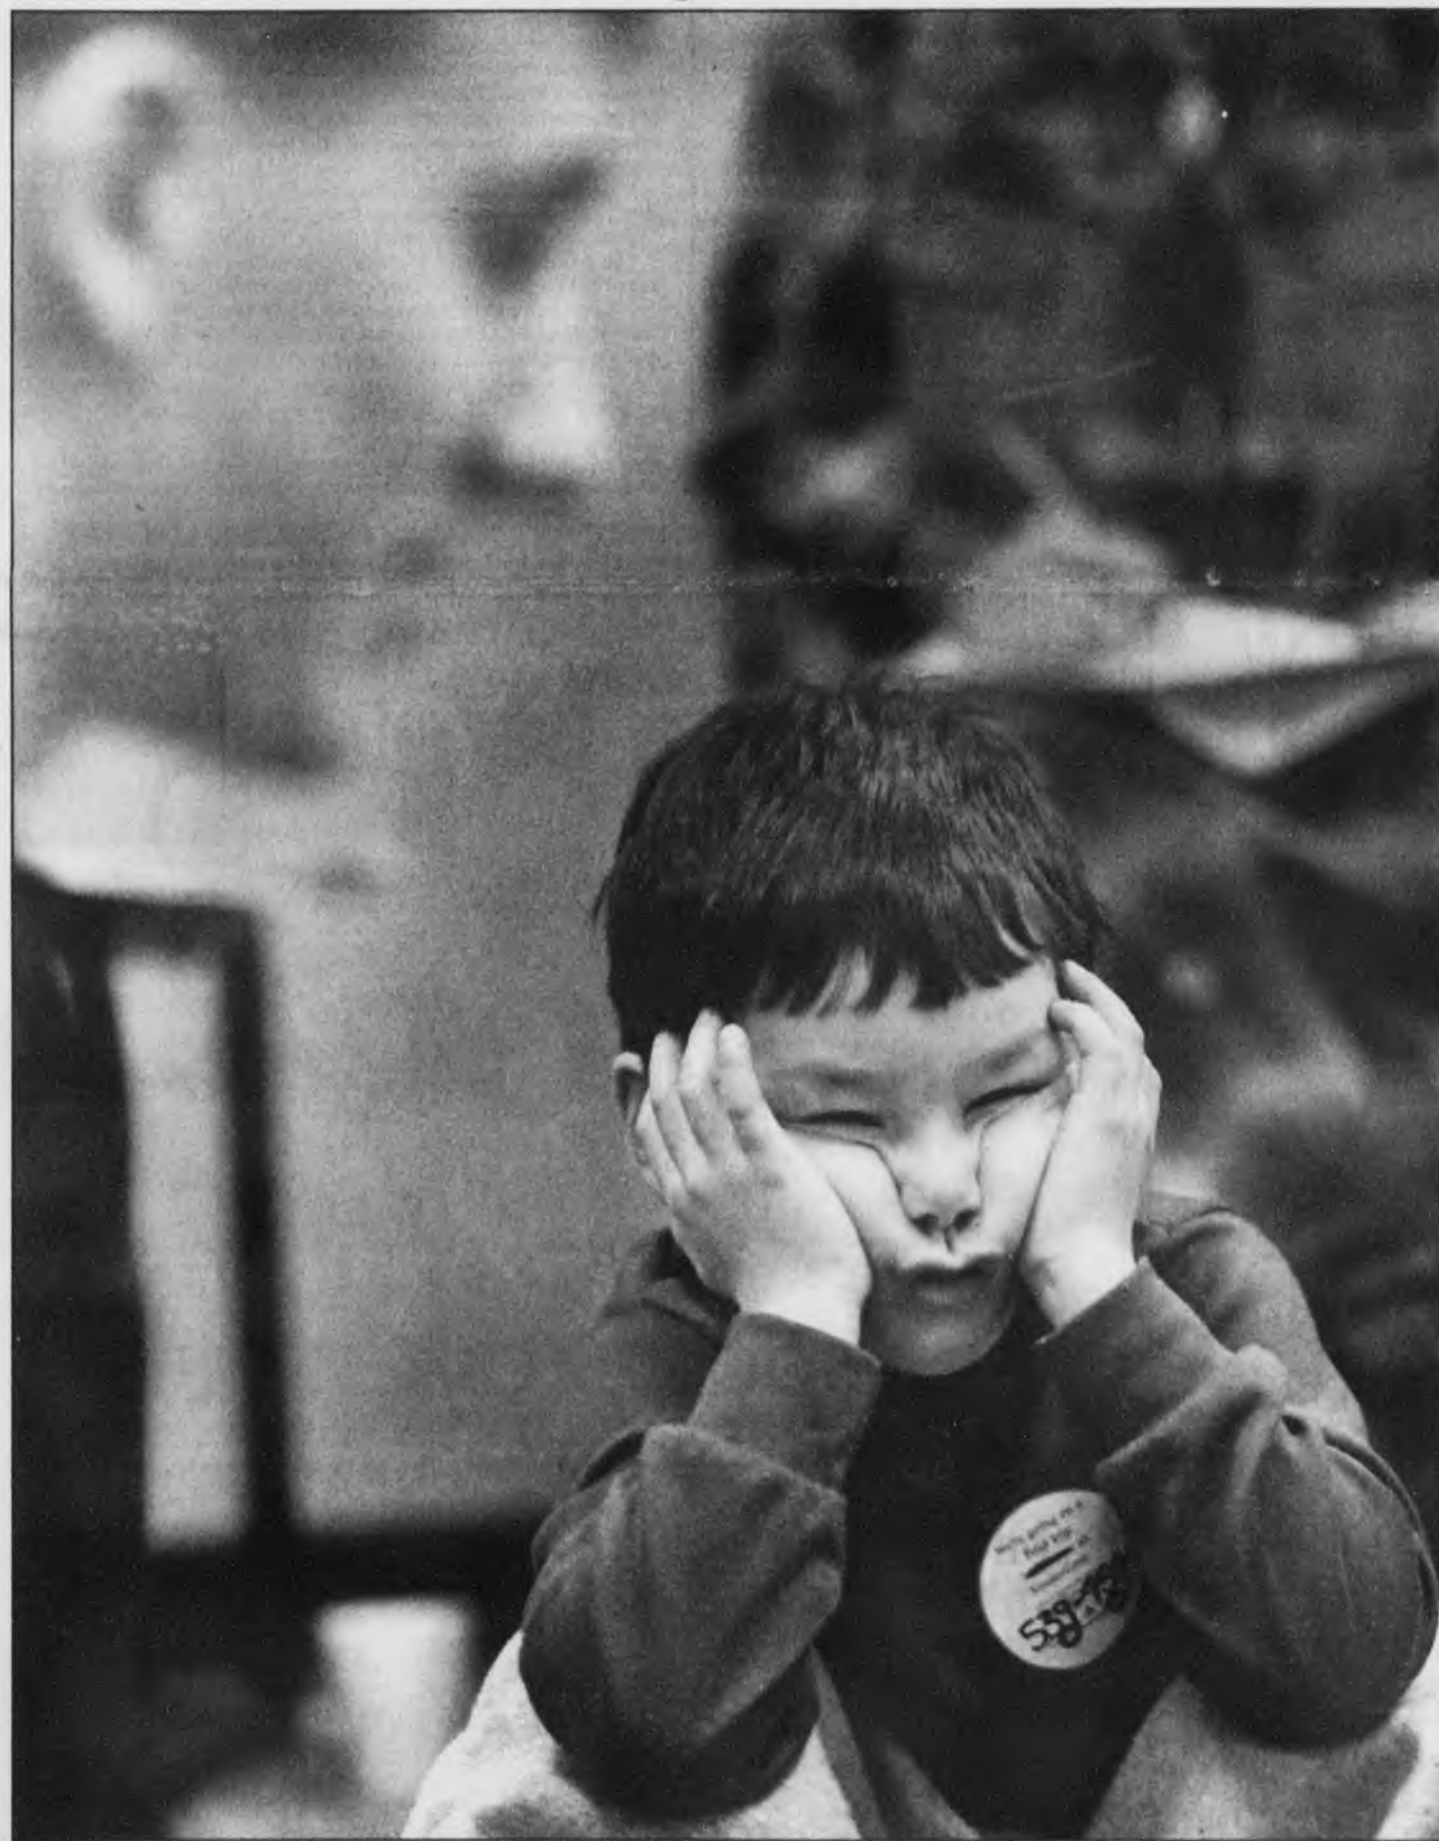

"Everyone is entitled to their day in court," Biggs said.

Library privilege fee likely to become issue in upcoming elections

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

Hale Library could be cited as one of the most beautiful libraries in the Big 12 Conference.

But the content of Hale Library ranks 11th in the Big 12.

Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock said Hale Library lacks funds. In the past year, 671 journal subscriptions were canceled. Periodicals' prices continue to rise.

In May 1997, Provost Jim Coffman and Faculty Senate President Jim Legg appointed the Task Force to Plan for Financing the Library of the Twenty-First Century. The task force's job was to develop a reasonable plan for funding the library.

The group created a three-part funding plan, in which one-third of a funding solution would come from the KSU Foundation, one-third from the Kansas Legislature and one-third from a student privilege fee.

The Legislature and Foundation have virtually committed to funding their two-thirds of the plan, but students have not yet responded.

The task force requested students pay a $2 per-cred-

Fee committee amends publications board bill

JESSI BRUNSON
Kansas State Collegian

Privilege fee funding for Student Publications Inc. might be in question as a result of an amendment to a bill that was recommended favorably by Privilege Fee Committee on Monday night.

The bill still must be approved by Student Senate, which will vote on it Thursday.

The bill allocates $318,000 of privilege fee money to Student Publications for the next two fiscal years — a 15-percent decrease from previous years. The Board of Student Publications requested the decrease in the fee, which makes up about 25 percent of its budget.

Committee members voted Monday to amend the legislation before sending it to Senate, mandating changes in the makeup of the board.

The board is made up of 10 voting members — two presidential appointments, five student at-large members and three representatives of Student Publications employees.

According to the newly amended bill, voting members of the board must be students at-large and presidential appointments, not employees of Student

Sororities given opportunity to bid fraternities for functions

LINDSEY FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

The Panhellenic and Interfraternity councils of K-State recently voted on and passed a proposal allowing sororities to take part in the function-bidding process.

In past years, fraternities were responsible for issuing invitations to sororities for a function. The proposal enables sororities to bid fraternities every other semester.

"This proposal allows the smaller fraternities to get involved as well," Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs, said. "This way it's not always the larger houses getting all the acceptances for functions."

Representatives from sororities on Panhellenic Council suggested the proposal for bidding, with the idea that sororities tackle both bidding for functions and Homecoming this semester.

"This provides the opportunity for both men and women to do the inviting," Robel said. "Hopefully, it will create more opportunity for everyone to be involved in functions."

Function bidding is a combination of songs, skits and dancing intended to persuade a greek organization to pair up with another greek organization for an evening of fun.

"Our goal for the fall of '98 is that sororities will bid for the fall functions,"

K-State-Salina police still investigating computer lab burglary from January

Investigations into the burglary and theft of computers in the K-State-Salina residence halls are still being conducted by the Salina Police Department.

The theft of computer parts on Jan. 22 included motherboards, RAM processors and hard drives in both the Harbin and Residence hall labs, totaling $4,020 in stolen equipment.

Commander of criminal investigations with the Salina Police Department, Mike Sweeney, said there has been indication that students were involved in the theft.

"It's a strong possibility," Sweeney said. Eric Figge, sophomore in mechanical engineering technology and president of the Hall Governing Board, also said he thought students were responsible.

"From what I know about the suspects and the whole situation is that it was a vengeance thing," Figge said. "The students were kicked out of school because of grades."

Figge said the computers in the residence halls were too old for certain software to be installed. With only Windows 95 available, students reloaded software and swapped hardware between computers. Computer Information Systems was constantly working on the machines to keep them running.

"We all knew what was going on. We thought they were working for CIS," Figge said.

Amanda Hoffman, freshman in airway science and social activities chair for the residence halls, said the computer lab is greatly missed.

"I was kind of upset. The computers are there for everybody, not just that one person," Hoffman said. "Having a lab in the dorm was very convenient because a lot of students don't have access to their own computer. We have computers in the library and two labs in the tech center, but they are also used in classes and are not always available."

Since the theft, the administration and HGB are working on new measures to ensure security of the new Gateway 2000 computers the Salina campus has received.

"Our main concern on the administration's side is that students have access," Mariana Lebron, coordinator of student life, said.

There are different long-term and short-term options being reviewed to see which would benefit students and meet their needs, Lebron said.

HGB must choose whether to recommend a system in which labs are open only when the resident assistants are on duty from 6 to 10 p.m., or recommend that a key be checked out that would have to be returned at 8 a.m. the next day.

Until the decision is finalized, Lebron said the new Gateways are being worked on to install security measures from within.

While Figge said he thought this was an isolated incident and did not foresee it happening again, he said he expected a decision about lab security measures to be made by HGB and K-State-Salina's administration in the next few weeks.

HIV researcher to lecture on prevention, awareness, education of deadly disease

Dr. Donna Sweet will lecture about AIDS and HIV at 8 tonight in the Union Big 12 Room.

The K-State chapter of Caduceus Pre-Med Club and the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee are sponsoring Sweet's program, "AIDS/HIV: Education, Prevention and Awareness."

Sweet was also one of 130 researchers and clinicians invited to take part in the first White House Conference for AIDS and HIV.

Sweet is a professor at the University of Kansas School of Medicine in Wichita. She also works as the director of Internal Medicine Education at Via-Christi Regional Medical Center at the St. Francis Hospital in Wichita.

She is also the director and principal investigator of the Kansas AIDS Education and Training Center. Sweet began a four-year term as Kansas governor of the American College of Physicians in 1996.

Sweet will be discussing and answering questions on new topics as well as old topics about AIDS, said Sheryl Kelly, Sweet's assistant nurse.

She also will discuss the increase in the number of cases of the disease, the cost per month for medication and new treatment methods.

School districts come to K-State, recruit teachers from pool of education students

Forty-one school districts came to campus Friday to search for teachers.

The on-campus education interviews, sponsored by Career and Employment Services, were designed to give busy education students an opportunity to meet with districts from around the nation in one day.

"It gives you an opportunity to come to one central location," Christine Gillen, senior in elementary education, said.

"I'm student teaching right now, and this way I don't have to take more time off to go to different schools."

Gillen said it is fairly early in the hiring process, and she was using this event as a first step in her job search.

"It's mainly practice. A lot of districts won't hire until later on in the summer. But when you show your interest to a district in February, it shows you're willing to make the first step," Gillen said.

Even though many recruiters and students were using the interviews as a screening process, Jeff Liftin, principal at Whitson Elementary School in Topeka, said his school district was ready to hire.

"We've offered two contracts today," Liftin said. "If we see the right candidate in a position that's hard to fill, we'll offer contracts during the last semester of their senior year."

Liftin said he looks for many important qualifications in potential teachers.

"I look for people who have a real desire to teach. They have to be eager to work with children and young adults and be resilient. Teaching's not an easy job," Liftin said.

Stephanie Prichard, elementary principal for the North Kansas City School District in Missouri, also was screening potential teachers on campus. As a K-State graduate in education, she said she could identify with the students to whom she was talking.

"I think about how they're feeling, how I'm feeling and how I felt when I was in their position," Prichard said. "I like this side of the process better. It's a lot less stressful."

Matt Thiessen, senior in secondary education, experienced his first interview with a school district at this event.

"I just didn't know what to expect. There was a lot more situational-type questions than I thought there would be," Thiessen said.

IVAN KOZAR/Collegian

Candidates want better management

► GLENDENING, CASTELANO SAY STUDENTS DESERVE MORE INPUT.

JESSI BRUNSON
Kansas State Collegian

Student body presidential candidate Bret Glendening and his running mate Shayne Castelano, tout themselves as diverse candidates with a combined 4 1/2 years of student government experience and a concern for issues that matter to students.

Glendening, senior in agricultural economics and political science, said one of his main concerns is the way student government represents students.

"It's time for a president and vice president to represent students to the administration and not the administration to the students," he said.

"There's a lot of stuff on campus that we see happening in student government that we're not necessarily in disagreement with, but we would approach differently," Glendening said. "We feel our approaches to those situations would, in effect, be more beneficial to students than the way situations have been approached in the past."

The pair's platform includes support for a Hale Library privilege fee, a plan to help students retire higher education debt faster and a city-campus bus system. Glendening said these issues will benefit the entire student body.

"We chose these issues because we feel like they matter to all students," he said. "They are issues that will be the most beneficial to all students when they get out and graduate."

Castelano, senior in biochemistry, said the operating-fund increase for Hale Library and money from the KSU Foundation is helpful, but not sufficient. That money should be supplemented with an 85-cent, per-credit-hour student fee, he said.

"We have seen historically that the Legislature has been really, really hard on giving any money at all to higher education," Castelano said. "Some people tell us the library is a necessity for the university, and why should you pay for a necessity?"

"But we can dramatically improve our placing among colleges just by increasing our library."

Glendening said a higher education debt-reduction plan would allow businesses that hire Kansas Board of Regents university graduates to receive a tax deduction if they help repay part of their new employees' student loans.

"You have to ask yourself, 'What can we actually do about the cost of tuition?' When it comes down to it, we can't do anything about it," he said. "But Shayne and I do believe that if you can't approach it from how much it costs in the beginning, then maybe you can approach it from, once you graduate, how much you have to pay back."

Another part of the platform would use City/University Tax Fund money to help finance a K-State and Manhattan bus system.

"The idea is that somebody living out at Brittany Ridge could go to Westloop, grab a bus, and get to campus in time for class," Castelano said.

"There might be a drop-off spot at each of the corners of campus or something like that."

Glendening said some have questioned the feasibility of his long-term goals, but he will be around to follow through.

"I don't think there's any concern about whether we'll be here or not. We feel strongly enough about them that we're going to make sure they don't get thrown off the ballot once we're out of office," Glendening said.

Besides bringing important issues to students, Castelano said he and Glendening offer diversity in their report and experiences.

"I think we offer more of a diversity than a lot of other candidates. That's the thing you get with Bret and I — you get two different views of the same issue. We sit down and hash things out and try to think of the best plan possible," he said.

Architects to take input on project

► STUDENTS, COMMUNITY GIVEN CHANCE TO EXPRESS CONCERNS ABOUT CENTER.

CLAUDETTE RILEY
Kansas State Collegian

Architects for the proposed alumni center announced a commitment to discuss student and community concerns about the building design and location in a forum later this month.

The forum has been scheduled for 7 p.m. March 17 at the Foundation Center, 2323 Anderson Ave. It was announced at a press conference Monday afternoon.

The Alumni Association offices are on the fourth floor of the Foundation Center.

Bill Livingston, principal architect with Gossen Livingston and K-State graduate, said his firm employed an interactive design process called problem seeking.

He said goals for the project were determined after fact-finding interviews with potential users to identify the size, quality and cost of the proposed facility.

"We involve people. This is an involving process," Livingston said. "They have insisted that we go to as many groups as possible."

Before several campus groups were interviewed, focus groups were conducted in six Kansas cities.

"From every one of these sessions, we gained something," he said.

However, K-State architecture students have expressed concern about not being involved in the process.

The March 17 meeting is open to the public, and Livingston said he is interested in input and informing others about aspects of the process.

Livingston said his firm stopped the programming stage with the last focus group Feb. 12, started the process of design the next day and feverishly finished conceptual plans, including several artist renderings, before the Feb. 21 presentation to the Alumni Association Board.

"The drawings were so hot that no one, even me, had seen them all together," Livingston said.

The alumni center site, on the southwest corner of the campus south of Memorial Stadium, means the loss of green space used by intramural sports teams.

Livingston said the center will maintain as much green space as possible, leaving an area for pedestrian passage between the center and Memorial Stadium.

Construction for the proposed three-story, 48,000-square-foot alumni center is tentatively slated to begin in June 1999.

"This is concept only and very, very preliminary. Is it going to change? I guarantee it," Livingston said. "This is totally flexible at this point."

Would-be freshmen need good first impression

Spring is less than a month away, and with the warm weather and graduation approaching, high school students will be touring campus and deciding where to attend college.

To them, K-State students are K-State. New students are looking for a place where they can learn, have fun, feel accepted and be themselves.

The adage about first impressions is true.

This means high school students walking around this campus should be greeted and made to feel welcome.

A lot of students say they chose K-State because of a feeling of comfort, friendliness or a large family atmosphere. They say the students they visited reached out to them.

Remember how it felt the first time you walked on this campus and how good it made you feel.

This is our opportunity to do the same.

If a young person is walking around this campus, clutching an admissions folder and looking wide-eyed and slightly lost, say hello. Take the time to answer the person's questions.

If a student knows someone cares, it makes a huge difference.

The admissions representatives work hard all year to bring students to K-State and help them see there is something here for almost everyone.

Generations of families have attended K-State, and they come here because they know someone and feel a connection.

This personal connection can come through friends, the faculty in a specific department or those in a living group. Each meeting with a prospective student is a chance to show that K-State doesn't just turn out good thinkers — but good people.

The high school and transfer students' peak visitation times often coincide with midterms and the final busy weeks each semester, but take a few minutes with someone.

It could make all the difference in the world.

Time to ~~Rock~~ the vote

The smell is in the air. Every year at this time, we turn our noses to the sky and breathe in the same scent. The severity of the stench is up to you. It's not smoke, gas or other unfriendly environmental hazards.

This is the smell of winners and losers. I could encourage you to read up on the candidates for this year's Student Governing Association elections.

I could encourage you to vote, and tell you that you'd only kick yourself next year if you didn't, then wanted to complain about something.

I could even tell you every vote makes a difference.

But would you believe it?

If you don't, you're worse than you need to be.

Whether or not you're pleased with the term of Tim Riemann and Jennafer Neufeld, it's almost too late to care. New blood is making noise, and it's the perfect time for you to let them know what you want. Otherwise, you'll have other people making decisions for you. These decisions will affect the rest of your time here. Unfortunately, these decisions could be based solely on one's popularity and not how much the candidates really know. How do I know?

Hollywood. Or is it Holly-weird?

Just three months into the new year, and we've had more awards shows and more nominees announced than you can shake a statuette at. People making decisions on "best" this and "favorite" that. As much fun as these shows are to watch, only a few of them can be compared to the SGA elections. Huh?

No one's denying that the Golden Globes, the Grammys and the Oscars are wonderful productions. But you and I don't have any say in who wins. A foreign press association, a recording arts and sciences association, and an old-boy Hollywood association decide.

Someone decided last week the best rock album went to John Fogerty for "Blue Moon Swamp" when I don't remember hearing much of that on my favorite rock station. Someone else decided Leonardo DiCaprio wasn't worthy of an Oscar nomination when I'm sure he was as good in "Titanic" as the other actors were in their films.

Is this the way you want your student government chosen? By not voting, you run the risk of some clique deciding the outcome. That outcome determines any new fees you'll have to pay, whether parking remains a yellow-ticket headache, and any other top-of-mind issues your candidates want to address.

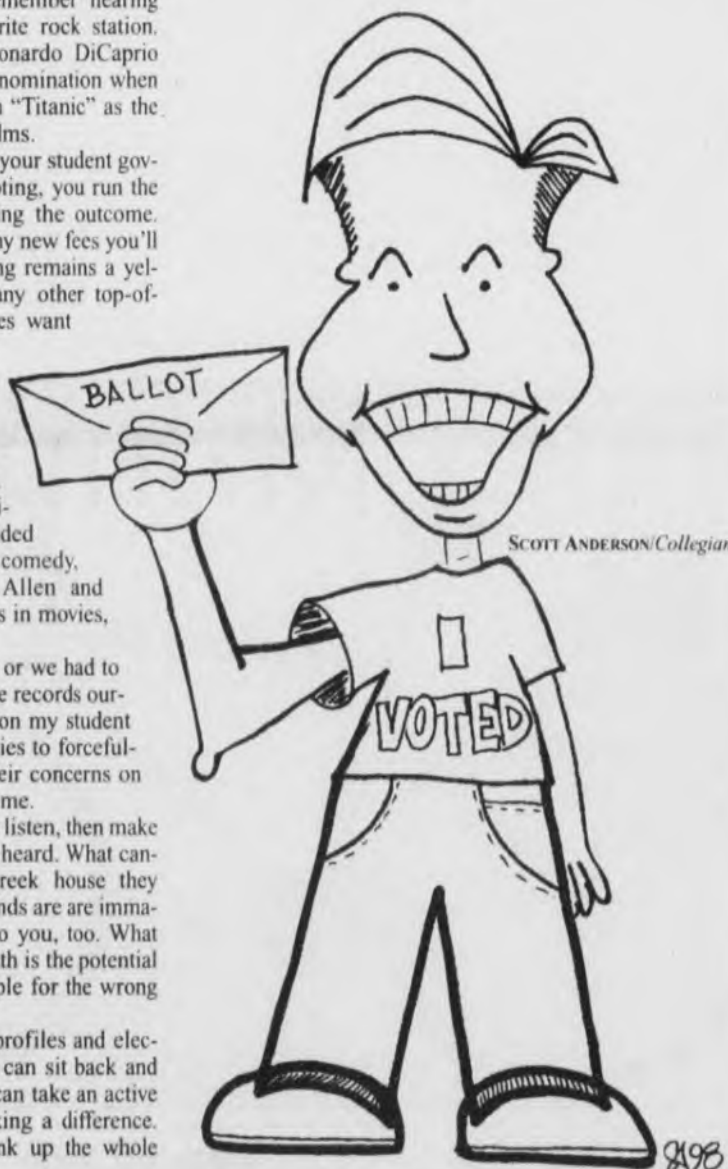

Instead, I prefer the route of the People's Choice Awards, the Soap Opera Awards or even the American Music Awards. Based on our active participation, we the people decided "Seinfeld" was the favorite comedy, and Harrison Ford, Tim Allen and Garth Brooks were favorites in movies, television and song.

People tallied our votes, or we had to fill out the ballots or buy the records ourselves. This is how I envision my student government. I want the parties to forcefully and confidently voice their concerns on university issues that affect me.

I want to take the time to listen, then make my vote based on what I've heard. What candidates look like, what greek house they belong to and who their friends are are immaterial to me. It should be to you, too. What you should be concerned with is the potential of votes for the wrong people for the wrong reasons.

As the SGA candidate profiles and elections begin, remember you can sit back and be told what to do, or you can take an active role and participate in making a difference. The wrong choice can stink up the whole election process.

Student library fee not good solution

Even though it still takes me about an hour to find the books Hale Library actually has, K-State has a problem. It has a beautiful library building but not the funds to continue its journal subscriptions to stock empty shelves.

Last semester, the library task force produced a study that would create a $2 per-credit-hour privilege fee to help the library with its problem. That idea fell mostly on deaf ears, not because of the price, but because of the timing when students believed they had to choose between the library or stadium expansion.

Now the library plan has been re-evaluated and labeled the "three-legged stool."

Leg No. 1 would be about $320,000 from the Kansas Legislature. The same amount would come from the KSU Foundation to account for the second leg. But to keep the stool from falling over, the plan asks for a student privilege fee to produce the same amount.

For those of you who thought the issue was dead, rest assured. A bill requesting an 85-cent per-credit-hour privilege fee has been introduced in Student Senate.

If you want your voice heard, please contact your student senator.

This plan seems the fairest course of action to bring Hale Library out of the cellar, where it is last in the Big 12 in the number of periodicals and eleventh in periodical budgets. However, I find it ironic that the funding plan has been called the three-legged stool.

Because I come from a farming background, the only three-legged stool I know of is used for milking cows, and that is what I believe this plan does — milks the students for money they do not need to pay.

Am I concerned about the status of Hale Library? The answer is yes.

Do I support a student privilege fee to help support the library? Unless persuaded otherwise or bombed with books, the answer is no.

This is why I will vote no for a library fee.

I know Hale needs the money, but philosophically, a library fee does not fall into the privilege fee category. According to a dictionary I found in the library, the word "privilege" means something granted as a peculiar benefit, advantage or favor.

To me, peculiar means out of the ordinary, exceptional or even strange.

Now, I have been a K-State student for almost four years, and there are certain things I believe should already exist at this university once I have paid my tuition — a classroom, an instructor, a desk, maybe some good lighting and a comfortable atmosphere, and a sufficient library to help me further my studies.

These are the givens, and if not, someone needs to explain to me what the purpose of tuition is and why it continues to increase. The exceptions I receive at K-State are from the privilege fees I pay every semester.

I do not consider attending a football game at a cheaper price, watching a movie at the K-State Student Union for $1.75, or playing a game of basketball at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex essential to my education at K-State.

These are perks I can take advantage of if I so choose. However, the library is a fundamental part of my education. Therefore, as a taxpayer of the state of Kansas, I ask my Legislature to please consider additional funding, and as a student of K-State, I ask my administrators to please reprioritize where the money goes.

Students do not need to pay for the library. We are already helping to pay for the building, and that is above and beyond the call of duty.

Glendening, Castelano looking out for best interests of students

"So, what are you going to do for me in your campaign?"

We've been asked this question many times by everyone throughout our campaign. Promptly, we tell them we are the only candidates who are working to improve 1 the quality of their education now, 2 the value of their degrees and the reduction of student loan debt in the future, and 3 the accessibility of services throughout Manhattan and the K-State campus.

Now, you might be asking how a pair of college students can promise so much to every student at K-State. The answer is very simple: We have the experience in student government and the ambition to get issues through to the students of K-State. We have been in Student Senate a combined 4.5 years, so we thoroughly understand the processes needed to make each of our issues a reality. Through the three programs we have proposed, students and alumni will be better off a year from now than they are now.

We are very much in favor of a Hale Library privilege fee. We feel this is the only solution available to us at this time. We have a state Legislature reluctant to give money to higher education and an administration slow to support the library. So the burden has fallen on the students to get the ball rolling before this becomes a bigger crisis. Other universities, such as the University of Nebraska and the University of Texas, already have a fee at a much higher level. With an improved library, students and alumni benefit with a greater value on their degree because this will surely improve our ranking among national universities.

Our second issue is the Rapid Retirement of Higher Educational Debt. This program creates a system where graduating students hired by businesses in the state of Kansas would have 50 to 75 percent of their loan debt paid off by the company. The company, in return, would get a tax deduction. Businesses like it because it makes them competitive with companies that can pay higher wages, and students have less to pay back on their loans. This also keeps the best and brightest — K-State students — in Kansas.

Our final issue is a city wide bus system. This can be created from funds already available through the City/University Tax Fund. The cost would be equivalent to a parking permit; you could pay for it during fee payment, and it will help decrease the parking woes we experience now and the congestion that is sure to be created by all the upcoming construction around campus. It also would be available to community members at a slightly increased rate.

When you go to the polls between March 9 and 11 you should ask yourself, "What candidates are looking out for the best interest of all students and are pushing the important issues?" The answer to these questions is clear: Bret Glendening and Shayne Castelano are your voice for the coming year in student government.

Cousin gives tribute to Greg Arpin's life

Editor,

I am writing this letter in remembrance of a wonderful young man who was taken from us too soon. "Full of life" doesn't even begin to describe my cousin, Greg Arpin. When I think of Greg I can't help but to smile.

I remember this young boy who at family dinners couldn't even sit still long enough to eat. He was always rushing off to climb something that was really tall, or do something daring that would get him attention and a couple of evil looks from his mother. All the women in the family would tell him, "I don't know what you're going to do now, but be careful," and Greg would just look back with his ornery grin and run off.

To say Greg loved the outdoors is an understatement. As he got older, he was always the last to show for a family gathering because he was constantly out hunting and fishing. He would come in long enough to eat and mingle with everyone, and then he was off to his next adventure. Sometimes he brought his adventures to us.

Often, the little cousins got treated to rides on the four-wheeler, or would get to watch in awe as Greg scaled the wall of an old building near my great-grandmother's home.

This past weekend, my mom and I were recalling stories about Greg, and she remembered a time when Greg had discussed with her how he wanted to do everything he possibly could while he was young, because you never know when your time here will be up. Maybe that's why Greg was so energetic. Maybe God knew his time with us would be short, so he gave Greg the gift of living each day to its fullest.

Right now is a very difficult time for Greg's parents, Jerry and Carolyn, his brother, Jeff, and all of us who knew him and loved him. But I know everyone would agree that it was better to have been a part of his life, and feel the pain of it ending, than to have not known him and miss out on all of the wonderful memories.

Greg was determined that he wasn't going to miss out on anything, and so he lived each day to its fullest. I know that all of us who loved him will carry his spirit, enthusiasm and strength in our hearts for the rest of our lives. He is gone, but never forgotten. We love you, Greg.

Sackett should climb off zealous high horse

Editor,

At first glance, I thought I must have accidentally picked up a flier from the Manhattan Christian College. Once my hands stopped burning, however, I quickly realized it was nothing more than the latest installment of Sam Sackett's sanctimonious drivel.

Since the beginning of the semester, we've been blessed with Sackett's narrow view of the world on everything from a woman's right to reproductive choice (which he opposes) to capital punishment (which he supports), to his latest commentary on legislating morality. Arguing for the legislation of morality while simultaneously stating that religious choice is up to the individual is the epitome of religious hypocrisy. Sackett should climb down from his religious high horse long enough to realize the Crusades are over.

Although I recognize that most ethicists reject the theory of ethical relativism (that is, that morality is relative to the norms of one's culture), the concept still raises important issues for discussion. First, it reminds us that different societies have different moral beliefs and that our beliefs are deeply influenced by culture. Second, it encourages us to explore the reasons underlying beliefs are different from our own, while challenging us to examine our reasons for the beliefs and values we do have.

Rather than discounting the views of billions of other individuals and attempting to proselytize everyone who is non-Christian, Sackett's religious zealotry and public relations major might better be served elsewhere. I'm sure that Jimmy Swaggart, Benny Hinn, Pat Robertson, Oral Roberts, Jerry Falwell, Pat Robertson or Robert Schuller could use his help.

Sports Round-up is your daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports outside of K-State. Compiled from Associated Press reports.

Associated Press announces All-Big 12 men's hoops teams

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Associated Press announced its All-Big 12 selections Monday and K-State forward Manny Dies was honored for his breakthrough season with placement on the second team.

DIES

In championship fashion, first-team selections to The Associated Press All-Big 12 basketball squad seem to be peaking at just the right time.

Nebraska point guard Tyrone Lue made all nine of his second-half shots in the regular-season finale Saturday, scoring 24 points as the Huskers beat Iowa State and stretched their winning streak to six in a row.

Oklahoma's Corey Brewer left Texas Tech in awe in the Sooners' final game of the regular season, hitting three three-pointers and scoring 18 points in one six-minute span of the second half.

Last week in No. 3 Kansas' final home game, Paul Pierce scored 31 points, including 15 in one six-for-six stretch on six consecutive possessions as the Jayhawks beat Oklahoma and extended their school-record home winning streak to 60 games.

Rafael LaFrentz, bidding to repeat as Big 12 player-of-the-year, had 32 rebounds in Kansas' past two games, including 14 to go with his 17 points in Sunday's 71-67 victory over Oklahoma State.

And Cory Carr of Texas Tech, the other first-team selection by a panel of 24 media representatives, kept his game on a consistently high plane throughout the year, becoming the Big 12's scoring leader for the second straight year.

LaFrentz, Pierce and Carr were all unanimous first-team selections. The 6-foot-11 LaFrentz, named Big 12 player of the year and a first-team All-American as a junior, is the only repeater on the No. 1 squad. He and Pierce helped Kansas win a fourth-straight conference title and post back-to-back 30-win seasons for the first time in 100 years of Jayhawk basketball.

Baylor senior Brian Skinner leads the second team. The 6-10 center finished second in the conference with 9.5 rebounds and first with a field-goal percentage of 56.5.

The other two top vote-getters on the second unit are a pair of Oklahoma State Cowboys.

Senior Brett Robisch, 6-11, whose emergence helped the Cowboys go from 17-15 in 1996-97 to 21-5 this season, averaged 15.6 points and 8.2 rebounds and provided a badly needed presence inside. Joining him is teammate Adrian Peterson, a 6-4 junior who was eighth in the conference in scoring (17.3 points per game) and fourth in free-throw percentage (79.9).

Rounding out the second team are Kris Clack, Texas' 6-5 junior guard who was slowed for much of the season by injury, and Dies, 6-8. Clack averaged 17.6 points and 6.6 rebounds while Dies led the improved Wildcats in scoring (16.3) and rebounding (7.5).

LaFrentz will finish his college career second on Kansas' all-time scoring list and is closing in on Danny Manning's school rebounding record.

Kansas fans are worried that Pierce, a 6-7 junior, might also be winding down his outstanding college career a year early.

He averaged 20.1 points for the 31-3 Jayhawks, who have lost only two Big 12 games since the conference began play in the 1996-97 season.

He has said he won't think about going early into the NBA draft until after the season is done.

Carr, 6-4, faced the same decision last year after leading the Big 12 in its inaugural season with 23.1 points per game. He opted to stay his senior year and repeated as conference scoring leader, putting in 23.4 for the Red Raiders despite being the focus of the opposing defense virtually every game.

Lue, 6-0, 175, perhaps the quickest player in the conference, is another junior facing a tough choice. He averaged 21.4 points, right behind Carr, and will go down as one of the greatest players in Nebraska history even if he does skip his senior season.

Heading into the postseason, Lue has led the Huskers on a six-game winning streak while ranking among the Big 12's top five in scoring, assists, free throw percentage and steals.

The Missouri native stands third on the school career charts in both scoring and assists, and fifth in steals. His 69 three-point goals are just one shy of the school record.

Brewer, a 6-2 senior, was the AP Big 12 newcomer of the year last season after transferring from Carl Albert Junior College and averaging 17.5 points, 4.5 rebounds, 3.5 assists and 1.9 steals. In his second season he finished third in the Big 12 with 21.2 points per game.

4 Wildcats win Big 12 track championships

JOEL WHITE
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State track teams continued their rise of prominence in the Big 12 on Friday and Saturday in the Big 12 Indoor Championships at Ames, Iowa.

The K-State women finished in third place while the men finished in a tie for fifth. Four Wildcats set Big 12 records.

The K-State men were led by sophomore Attila Zsivoczky, who captured the gold in the heptathlon and set a Big 12 record with a score of 5,786 points.

He defeated the second-place finisher, Chad Meyer of Texas A&M, by 298 points.

"Winning by 300 points in an indoor multi-event competition is a significant accomplishment," K-State coach Cliff Rovelto said. "He pretty much dominated the entire competition."

Zsivoczky set indoor personal records in six of the seven events of the competition. His personal records were in the 60-meter dash, long jump, shot put, 60-meter hurdles, pole vault and 1,000-meter run.

In the only event he did not set a personal record, high jump, Zsivoczky cleared 6-10 3/4 — five inches shorter than he jumped a week earlier.

"I was a little over-confident in the high jump, so that really wasn't a good event for me," Zsivoczky said.

Zsivoczky said his heptathlon teammates, Thomas Weiler, who took fifth place, and Ken Dennard, who finished in sixth, were instrumental in helping him win the gold.

"Without them it would have been much, much harder," Zsivoczky said. "It's not really a physical help, but it's a psychological help because it gives you someone to talk to throughout the competition."

Three K-State women, Emily Diederich, Renetta Seiler and Vanitta Kinard, left Ames with gold medals and Big 12 records.

Diederich won the 800-meter run with a time of 2:07.18 — an NCAA automatic qualifying mark. Her time was a personal record, and it broke the Big 12 record by 2.43 seconds.

"I felt like it was really under her control the whole way," Rovelto said. "I think we felt like she was ready to run fast, so I wasn't surprised with her time."

Seiler was the repeat Big 12 champion in the weight throw with a throw of 69 3/4, a personal record.

She beat the Big 12 record, her own, by nearly five feet.

Rovelto said if Seiler had not torn the cartilage in her left hand, which she did five weeks ago, she would have dominated even more.

"She has performed very well even though her injury caused her to miss so much training," Rovelto said. "I think it only speaks to the fact that she would be throwing over 70 feet right now if she hadn't missed that training."

Kinard repeated as the Big 12 champion in the triple jump with a leap of 43-9, breaking the Big 12 record, which she previously had, by 1 inch.

Although the jump was not Kinard's personal best, Rovelto said the performance was good considering the conditions.

"It was a good performance," Rovelto said. "I don't think it was particularly a great place to jump, so it was a good mark."

HE PRETTY MUCH DOMINATED THE ENTIRE COMPETITION.

Tennis team fails to gain 1st Big 12 win

SAM FELSENFELD
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's 60th-ranked tennis team entertained thoughts of messin' with Texas when it opened Big 12 play last weekend.

The Wildcats traveled to the Lone Star State to take on 38th-ranked Texas A&M and No. 4 Texas. On paper, the Cats were outmatched, but they played a tough pre-conference schedule to prepare for conference competition.

The Aggies and Longhorns were too much for K-State, handing the Cats losses in their first Big 12 matches of the season.

"Our kids were ready to play, and they fought," K-State coach Steve Bietau said. "Texas is just that strong."

The Cats fell 5-4 to the Aggies on Saturday and 8-1 to the Longhorns on Sunday.

At A&M, K-State came close to pulling off an upset on the road. Yana Dorodnova continued playing strong tennis in the No. 1 slot, beating Aggie Vanessa Rooks 6-4, 4-6, 6-2 to improve to 7-0 on the season.

At No. 2 singles, Anna Pampoulova beat A&M's Lisa Dingwell, 7-6, 7-5, while two of K-State's doubles teams, No. 1 Dorodnova and Lena Pilipchak and No. 3 Pampoulova and Dinah Watson beat their Aggie counterparts.

But the Cats couldn't knock off any other Aggies and win the match. Before the match, Bietau said the Texas weather could have affected the outcome. The Aggies have practiced outdoors for more than a month, something the Cats haven't been able to do in the Kansas winter.

But given the closeness of the match — two of K-State's singles losses went three sets and the No. 2 doubles team lost 9-7 — Bietau said the weather wasn't to blame.

"It was so close, everything could have been a factor," he said.

On Sunday, the Cats' fortune turned from bad to worse. K-State managed only one win against the Longhorns, at No. 3 doubles where Pampoulova and Watson picked up an 8-3 win over Texas' Jill Liberman and Sonia Moorthy.

"It's always tough to lose," Bietau said. "I hope our players learned a lot from this experience."

Dorodnova suffered her first singles loss of the season, falling 6-4, 6-1 to Sandy Surechong, ranked ninth in the nation. The Cats lost all six singles matches in straight sets. Although K-State wasn't favored to win the matches, Bietau said the Cats aren't taking the losses lightly.

"They've got a lot of pride in what they do," he said. "They don't like to lose."

SADNESS OR MADNESS?

► WILDCATS NEED VICTORIES IN CONFERENCE TOURNAMENT TO ADVANCE TO NEXT WEEK'S NCAA TOURNAMENT.

DAN MERKER
Kansas State Collegian

The No. 11 seed in a 12-team tournament isn't generally expected to do much, but as K-State has proven in the past, anything can happen in postseason play.

The women's basketball team starts action tonight in the Big 12 Tournament, playing No. 6 Baylor in the first round. The Wildcats hope to match last year's performance when they won three consecutive games to reach the finals of the tournament, eventually losing to Colorado 54-44.

K-State, which finished the regular season at 10-16 and 4-12 in the Big 12, faces an uphill battle. Only one team, Missouri, finished below the Cats in the conference standings. The Cats also have lost four consecutive games and nine of their past 10.

But the Cats are confident in their ability, and, despite losing four-straight games, have been playing better of late.

They ended the regular season with one of their best games, leading against the Big 12 champions and No. 6 team in the country, Texas Tech, for most of the game before losing 67-62.

Despite the losing streak, team members said they are playing well and are ready for the tournament.

"If we look at each one of them and dissect them, we have improved each game in big strides," guard Brit Jacobson said. "That is something you need to look at."

Team members said they thought their momentum in recent last-minute losses, despite falling short, will help them in the tournament.

"It really helped the way that we've played these last two games going into the Big 12 Tournament," center Angie Finkes said. "We just stepped up and went toe-to-toe with the No. 1 team in the league. I think when we go to the Big 12 Tournament, we have the mind set now. 'Give us whoever, and we'll play them.'"

The Cats and Lady Bears met only once this season, with K-State prevailing 62-59 on Jan. 24 in Bramlage Coliseum. Finkes led K-State with 20 points and eight rebounds, despite being matched up with Baylor post Kacy Moffitt, the seventh-leading scorer in the Big 12, who responded with 24 points.

The Lady Bears balance their inside attack with strong guard play in Lara Webb, the fifth-leading scorer in the conference at 18 points per game. In the teams' meeting earlier this season, Webb was kept to 12 points and forced to make eight turnovers.

Finkes has responded well in her past two games, averaging 24 points and nine rebounds per contest, and has overtaken Jacobson as the Cats' leading scorer with 13.6 points per game.

Wildcats' Jacobson always leaves court a champion even after losing

One thing about Brit Jacobson: She loves to sing "The Star Spangled Banner." Sings it before every game. She stands and kinda sways side to side, gaining adrenaline with each verse. If you listened closely this season, you could have heard her voice over the K-State pep band.

Before Saturday's game, her final game in Bramlage Coliseum, she tried to sing. Couldn't. She halfway opened her mouth and her eyes welled with tears. Trainer Galen Harkness comforted Jacobson. She laughed in embarrassment.

"And the rocket's red glare," she finally sang. A wide smile crept across her face.

She stood behind her teammates on the bench and when she, the lone senior, was honored before the game, she hugged every player and every coach and received flowers and was joined by her parents, Larry and Debbie Jacobson, at mid-court. Then she received a basket of flowers and two more bouquets. Yeah, she knew there was a lot on the line. Her last game at home. Her last time to play in front of her mother, who moved to Manhattan to be with her during the season, and her father, who traveled 2,791 miles from Chugiak, Alaska, to watch his daughter play one last time.

Jacobson set the flowers behind K-State's bench. This was no funeral. The Wildcats played their best basketball all season against No. 6 Texas Tech.

And Jacobson, who earned the nickname "Grandma" from her young teammates, showed why she would be remembered as the player who never gave up. She fought for life. She fought until the end.

Jacobson stole the ball on Tech's opening possession and was fouled while driving to the basket. She missed the first free throw. Made the second. Not three minutes passed and she made another steal at mid-court and followed with a layup. A minute and four seconds later, she was lying inches away from K-State's bench, wrestling for possession of the ball. She got a jump ball call, and K-State regained possession.

Jacobson looked at the scoreboard. K-State was ahead, 11-0.

"The only thing that was going on in my mind was to beat them," she said. "The more we scored and the better we defended — we were going to beat them."

Across the court was Tech's All-American forward Alicia Thompson. She was awesome. She was tough. She looked all season like she was playing in the wrong league.

She was averaging nearly 24 points a game. She had this wild kick thing when she shot a falling jumpshot in mid-air.

Jacobson didn't care. Oh, Thompson blocked one of Jacobson's shots earlier in the game, but when Tech tied the score for the fourth time at 41, Jacobson caught an outlet pass from Angie Finkes at mid-court.

Thompson was the only player who remained in her way.

Jacobson spun underneath the All-American, hit her layup, and without hesitation, she sprinted downcourt. K-State retained its lead against the conference giants.

Then, later in the game, after scoring five points in 27 minutes, Jacobson stood at the free-throw line. She sort of cracked a smile, shook her head and looked at Coach Deb Patterson.

No big deal, right? Make one free throw and become only the second player in school history to earn 1,500 points, 200 assists and 200 steals in her career. No pressure. Jacobson missed the first. Made the second. Got her name in the record books. Didn't seem to care.

"It wasn't about that," Jacobson said after the game while wiping her eyes one final time. "It was about playing as a team and just playing Tech the best that we could."

But there was Patterson, massaging her temples before calling a time out with the score tied again at 55.

There was Tech's Julie Lake hitting a jumpshot moments later, giving her team the lead for the first time in the game. And there it was, Jacobson's career dwindling down to a few seconds.

With 14 seconds left, Texas Tech was ahead 65-62, and K-State had one final chance. Jacobson saw teammate Jenny Coalson pass the ball to Kim Woodlee and saw her miss a three-pointer while trying to draw a foul. The seconds started to slowly tick.

K-State lost 67-62 to one of the best teams in America. Jacobson was the first Wildcat to begin shaking opponents' hands after the game.

The Wildcats broke huddle and Jacobson waved goodbye to a standing ovation one last time. She wiped her eyes. Coalson wrapped her arm around Jacobson's neck.

The two players jogged off the court together.

► REC COMPLEX SEEKING INSTRUCTORS TO TEACH AEROBICS THIS SUMMER, FALL.

STORY BY AMANDA DAVIDSON
PHOTOS BY JILL JARSULIC

Working out is a job to many students, but for aerobics instructors it actually pays.

Exercising and getting paid is a reality for the eight aerobics instructors employed at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

These eight instructors offer five to six classes a day Monday through Friday and one class on Saturday and Sunday.

"Teaching aerobics for me is a full-time job," said Robyn Pierce, senior in public health and nutrition and Rec Complex aerobics instructor. "Planning, preparation and teaching classes at the Rec and Nautilus take up most of my free time."

Just like any other teaching area, the instructors should have general knowledge of nutrition and kinesiology, said Robin Leaper, Rec Complex aerobics instructor direct supervisor.

But because of the Rec Complex's limited number of aerobics instructors, it does not require certification of the instructors it employs.

To be an aerobics instructor at the Rec Complex, an individual needs a drive to exercise and teaching abilities and must be a K-State student, Leaper said.

Many employers require aerobics instructors to be certified. Certification can be done by one of the many certification associations: National Dance and Exercise Instructor's Training Association, American Council of Exercise, American College of Sports Medicine, and Aerobic and Fitness Association of America.

"Teaching aerobics is like teaching anything else. The more knowledge you have, the better you can teach," said Kelli Sweeney, senior in kinesiology and Rec Complex aerobics instructor.

NDEITA and the Topeka YMCA are co-sponsoring an aerobics certification workshop on April 18.

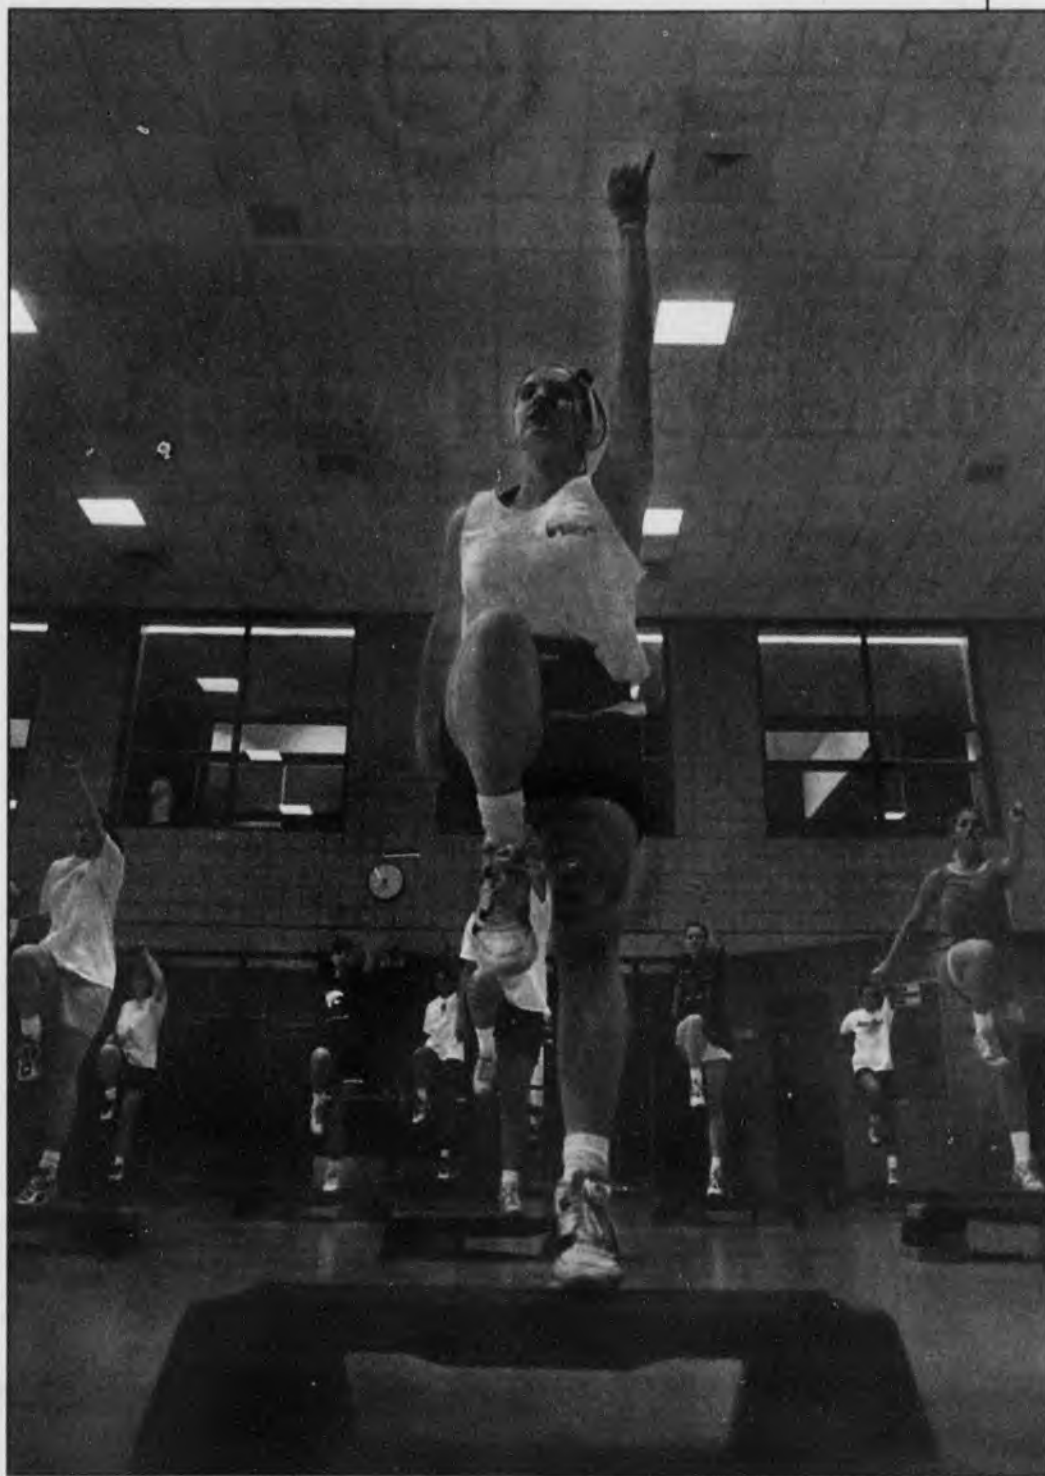

"Anyone with a desire to learn to teach aerobics is invited to join," Sheryl Hungerford, associate executive of the Topeka YMCA, said.

The cost of the workshop is $179, and the book is $22. There is a classroom setting from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. where the NDEITA instructors will teach basic anatomy, physiology, kinesiology and nutrition. A written test will be taken from 4 to 5 p.m. Once the certification is completed it will last for two years. In those two years an individual must complete 15 hours of classroom credit hours. The classes that count for the 15 hours are also scheduled by NDEITA.

For 1998 there are workshops for classroom credit offered by NDEITA in McPherson in March, Topeka in April and Wichita in June.

For renewal of certification an instructor must have proof of 15 hours of classroom credit, CPR certification and a $25 renewal fee. Becoming certified gives a better understanding of general knowledge needed to design aerobics programs, and it also increases the amount an instructor will be paid, he said. At the Rec Complex, an instructor without certification gets paid minimum wage. A certified instructor is paid $6.15 an hour.

Five of the eight Rec Complex aerobics instructors will be graduating in May, Leaper said, so positions for instructors for the summer and the fall will be open.

New food options offered

► HOUSING AND DINING CENTERS HAVE MEATLESS MEALS FOR VEGETARIANS.

AMY MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

The Department of Housing and Dining Services has been working for several years on the campus dining centers' daily meatless entrees.

Mark Edwards, unit director of Derby Food Center, said the progression to vegetarian meals in about the past eight years started with side dishes that were enhanced to stand alone as entrees.

"We began to increase the accompaniments. With that change, and growing awareness of people eating vegetarian, we began to jazz up those accompaniments," he said.

Grilled vegetables, for example, evolved to become grilled vegetable and mozzarella pitas, one of the vegetarian dishes now served at K-State's dining centers.

"We've expanded a lot over the years," said Mary Molt, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services. "We've tried to develop a hot entree alternative that would be meatless."

Molt, who is the chair of the committee that makes menus for Derby, Kramer and Van Zile food centers, said although the daily entrees might not fit the needs of vegans, they do fit the needs of most vegetarians.

Vegetarians won't have difficulty getting enough protein in their diets at the food centers.

"We've spent a lot of time developing recipes that have beans and chickpeas," she said.

Molt said she sees more and more students taking the meatless entree option.

She said more of today's college students grew up with vegetarian parents than ever before, and vegetarianism is more accepted by American society than it used to be. She said non-vegetarians sometimes choose the meatless entrees as well, whether for health reasons or just to try something new.

"Meat-eaters are taking vegetarian options," she said. "They may have it for lunch and have meat for dinner."

"We are dealing with a healthy population for the most part."

The availability of vegetable bases and new kinds of foods, such as pastas other than elbow macaroni, give vegetarian diners more variety, she said.

Rebecca Conley, sophomore in pre-art therapy, lived in a residence hall last year.

She said she preferred the veggie burgers to the other vegetarian entrees, but she often chose a cheese sandwich from the deli line or peanut butter sandwiches.

"I complained about the food at the time," she said. "But they had options, and it was pretty varied."

Most of the meatless entrees in the food centers do contain cheese or eggs.

Edwards said he thinks the next progression will be toward more vegan choices.

Manhattan Center for the Arts acquires new director

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Kansas State Collegian

After a year of three executive directors, the Manhattan Center for the Arts has hired a new executive director.

Galen Wixon, of Reston, Va., was hired in January as the executive director. He will begin at the center on April 15.

Wixon replaces interim director Karen Lauseng, who replaced interim director Chris Heavey, who left in December. Heavey was appointed by the center's board last September when Terrie McCants resigned. McCants had been director for one year.

During Heavey's term, he began a community discussion about how the center should work within the context of the Manhattan community.

That sort of community outreach is what attracted the board to Wixon, Don Wissman, president of the board, said.

Wissman said Wixon brings a diverse background to the position. Wixon is originally from Wichita, where in 1987 he received both a bachelor's and master's degree in music from Wichita State University. He later graduated from Carnegie Mellon University with a master's degree in arts management. He currently serves as executive director of the American String Teacher's Association.

"A lot of artists don't have the management experience," Wissman said. "He also has performance experience. I think he will fit well into the Manhattan community. He's had experience running large organizations."

We asked you what there was to do in Manhattan. So here's the best of the best, the worst of the worst and everything in between, including the list of prize winners.

Dates with Destiny

THE VERY BEST

The best date idea was submitted by a married couple:

Once the weather is cooperative, go to Konza Prairie Research Natural Area and hike up to the highest point. Watch the sun go down, sitting back to back. Go back to the apartment and shower together. Next, get dressed up and take in a meal at Harry's Uptown Supper Club. Window shop down Poyntz Avenue. By this time it's pretty late, but not too late for a movie followed by a cup of coffee. Sip coffee near a window so you can watch people outside and crack jokes about the funny drunks. Before falling asleep, give each other a body rub by candlelight.

LOW-BUDGET DATES

Two suggestions for the most inexpensive date in Manhattan:

The Friday night starts off at Rusty's Last Chance in Aggieville for the free food bar and the big screen entertainment. After dinner go to the arcade at Manhattan Town Center for an hour or so of playing video games together. A cool movie is playing at the dollar show in Aggieville so two tickets are bought for the 9 p.m. flick. After the movie, Lucky's looks semi-packed so if you are both 21 you can go inside and dance the rest of the night away.

The important part: Let's break down the cost:

Rusty's $2 for sodas.

Arcade $6 for quarters.

Movie $2 for tickets.

Lucky's is free — no cover on Friday nights.

My idea of a perfect date is to enjoy a candlelight dinner at McDonald's. You set out a table cloth, candles, napkins, roses and whatever else to make it romantic. After you have each had your fill of happy meals and playing with the complimentary toys, you head to the playland out back. Here you can jump in the balls and act like kids. One of my favorites is to bury myself in the colored balls and wait for little kids to scare.

DREAM DATE

One person took his imagination to the limit.

I'm walking home from my last class when a limousine pulls up next to me. The window rolls down, and a voluptuous woman asks if she can buy me drinks. I readily agree and hop into her limo. It is at that point that I realize the vehicle contains the entire contingency of models from Victoria's Secret. They all swoon over me as I direct the driver to Auntie Mae's Parlor. We all enter the bar, and I'm treated to a series of 50-year-old single-malt scotches and fine Cuban cigars.

As my lovely lady friends are spellbound by my witty and fascinating conversation, Jimi Hendrix, recently back from the dead, enters the bar with Eric Clapton, The Who, Pearl Jam and the Red Hot Chili Peppers. George Harrison buys everybody another round of drinks while an all-star rock 'n' roll jam session starts. I'm invited up to play guitar and immediately break into the old Robert Johnson classic "Crossroad" with me, Jimi and Keith Richards trading off solos. It is at this point Mick Jagger breaks away from his loving embrace with David Bowie to announce he's hungry and orders a catered banquet from Harry's Uptown Supper Club.

A beautiful female executive from PolyGram Records then approaches the stage with the idea of forming a band around me using all the musicians here at Mae's. At first I jokingly refuse. Neil Young says it would be a sin to nature not to accept, and Clapton announces he'd be honored to play backup to my lead guitar. It is while I'm signing my multimillion-dollar record contract when Harry's shows up with the feast consisting of such delicacies as Caspian Sea caviar, a sushi and raw oyster bar, roasted leg of lamb, fresh ham baked in port wine and some lettuce for George Harrison.

One of my model friends tells me the dalai lama is on the phone and wants to talk. As I try to hush the crowd so I can hear, the dalai lama tells me he got word from his eminence the pope that Jesus has returned and all hunger, disease and violence has forever ended and all on Earth have found true and universal enlightenment.

The celebration continues until sunrise. It is at this point that the Victoria's Secret models invite me back to their presidential suite at the Ramada Inn.

I go back with them, and we make wild and passionate love until my first class on Tuesday (because classes were canceled on Monday because of snow.)

DIFFERENT DATES

No two people came up with the same idea. Need proof?

Attend one of the fabulous productions at Nichols Theatre. The opera "Vanessa" is coming soon. Take ballroom dancing lessons with your love at UFM and practice your skills at the spring dance event at the K-State Student Union. Do volunteer work with your boyfriend or girlfriend at an organization that benefits children, such as Wonder Workshop Children's Museum, Hands to Hands, or Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc.

Dress is casual. Light cologne, jeans, nice button-down leather boots and a jacket.

Make her comfortable.

I would pick her up at her house and present her with three yellow roses. We would proceed to dinner at a fine, but not extremely pricey, restaurant. The conversation will float, but no sexual connotations, unless it is her invention. I pay. Remember comfort.

We proceed to some performance. Live music, a play, a sporting event or even a video game parlor. No movies. It really doesn't matter, as long as you are talking or trying to talk. Honesty has its benefits, and a little intrigue can spark curiosity. I pay. Flirt. OK, she's a little on edge.

Weather dependent, a stroll in the park or along a river, or some natural or awe-inspiring sight. It doesn't have to be secluded. This depends on how much she trusts me, which depends on the conversation. Remember comfort.

No alcohol. The sober female is a challenge and much more attractive. I don't need it either.

I take her home.

A good-night hug.

I will not come in, and I will not stay.

I will call her three days later.

There is no universal perfect date itinerary.

The perfect date is the next one, but only if she is cute.

Sing karaoke together at The Flashback Lounge. Meditate together. Go to an RV show. Make your own wine together. Play bingo.

Go to the zoo with someone special, then go eat at some cheap fast-food restaurant, and then rent a movie and cuddle with your loved one.

STRAIGHT SERIOUS

One person took a very serious stance on dating:

As a recent cancer conqueror, I have come to the conclusion that I don't need a lot of things beyond healthy personal relationships to make me content. There is nothing more satisfying to me than being with my friends or fiancé and sitting down over coffee and talking at Espresso Royale Caffé, Java Espresso and Bakery or Village Inn. God wants us to enjoy our life on Earth, and friends allow us the opportunities for personal growth. With honest and intimate relationships, we get to share the joys and frustrations in our lives so that each one of us can become the best person we have ever been. When I go out on a date, I enjoy country dancing and listening to music because I will still be able to laugh and enjoy the company of my friends.

PERFECT DATES

More of our best entries:

I will make dinner for my date. I have been known to make a simple meal like Swedish meatballs or patio steak. I will include all the other side dishes such as some type of potato, vegetable, dinner roll, side salad and dessert.

I will decorate the table with a table cloth, two candles and flowers laying off to the side wrapped up so they are prepared to go home with my date. (I will pick the flowers myself instead of letting a florist do it.)

After that I will go to a show at McCain Auditorium or the Manhattan Center for the Arts. It is a slight change from the dinner-movie thing people did back in high school.

The perfect date for me is to have a nice dinner at a local restaurant and then take a walk through Sunset Zoological Park. (It's open until 9 p.m. every Thursday during the summer months.) The zoo is a relaxing place to go and see some neat animals.

It is definitely the coolest thing to go to the playground on a nice autumn night and swing. Not only is it fun, but it's a great place to share memories. If you pick a nice night, you can lean back while you swing and look at the stars. Usually you'll get some privacy (with maybe an occasional police officer making sure you're behaving), but since you're moving, there's no pressure to get physical. But for those of us who do, there's also the ultra-romantic, unbalanced kiss!

Spring smells good this Friday night. The date is perfect! He smells good, too. We've gone to the lake and a spring gathering of local bands. Several well-known artists will be playing. This is a great gig for everyone, a win-win night out.

A night out in Manhattan would start out by my date picking me up on a motorcycle and taking a highway ride to Tuttle Creek Reservoir. There at the dock would be a row boat with flowers and wine waiting for us.

During the holiday take a stroll through Manhattan Town Center and sit on Santa Claus' or the Easter Bunny's lap and have a picture taken. Visit either the KS letters or the word Manhattan, and reflect on the beauty and nature of the wonderful sights in our city. Go to the library and research love and then make a romantic dinner and reflect on your relationship.

Stroll through the shrub garden near the International Student Center on your way to Call Hall for some K-State ice cream.

After dinner and a sinful dessert at Harry's Uptown Supper Club, we would drive up to Top of the World and gaze at the stars through the open sun roof of our limo while listening to Kenny G. on the stereo. The perfect evening would end at my place, where we would change into something more comfy and take turns massaging each other's back as we reminisce about the wonderful evening we experienced in the glorious town of Manhattan.

Playing pool and eating great burgers at Kickers, then dancing, if that's what you're into. Listening to Jeff Barrett at Rowdy Trouty's. Frisbee in City Park or kite flying at Cico Park.

The perfect night out with a date would be to pack a picnic dinner and drive out to Tuttle Creek State Park. Eat dinner by the lake watching the sunset. Then, start a campfire and roast marshmallows. Enjoy each other's company under the stars on a nice spring night. He would also serenade me by playing the guitar. Overall, it would be a perfect night out in Manhattan.

Asian economy affects some K-State students

MIKE BURGESS
Kansas State Collegian

Tuition and cost of living has quadrupled since last October for students from Indonesia who are supported by their parents.

The Indonesian rupiah depreciated 400 percent compared to the U.S. dollar, so parents sending support for students now have to send four times as much money.

Suryadi Oentoeng, graduate student in industrial engineering and native of Indonesia, said that in July one dollar equaled 2,500 rupiah, but now it equals 9,000. He added that about a month ago it was up to 16,000 rupiah.

"The crisis set the economy back for while. It just happened overnight. A lot of companies are laying-off people," he said.

South Korea, Thailand and Malaysia, among other countries, have also been affected but not to the extent of Indonesia.

Michael Babcock, professor of economics at, said currency markets work just like the stock market.

"If the Dow Jones hits 8,000 and if people think it is worth that, it will stay there. If the market gets news that causes investors to put a lower value on stocks, the Dow Jones Industrial will fall. Likewise with currency markets, if the currency market gets news that the currency is overvalued, then the value will fall," he said.

He went on to explain how this can affect international students.

"When the currencies fall in value, the country's economy usually contracts. As a result of the lower value of the currency, foreign students' money doesn't go as far," he said.

Hung Sun Cha, graduate student in accounting and president of the Korean Student Association, said most of the Korean students now have to have jobs because of the crisis.

Cha said the money his parents send is now only worth half as much as it was.

"A year ago, when my parents sent money, I got $2,000, but now that is only $1,000," he said.

Cha said that because of the crisis, he plans to look for a job in the United States after he graduates this May.

"It changed my plan. I'm looking for a job here because the economy is better," he said.

Ann Sirimanapong, graduate student in interior design and president of the Thai Student Association, said she and other Thai students have had to get jobs because of the crisis, but are very limited in what they can do.

"We cannot work off campus, so we have to work at the dining centers or bookstore," she said.

Albert Balendran, senior in electrical engineering and native of Malaysia, said his countrymen are also limited in the number of hours they can work.

"We are limited with an F-1 visa to working no greater than 20 hours per week," he said.

Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center, said students cannot apply to work off campus.

unless it is related to their field. She said students that have been here for one entire academic year can apply to work off campus in an unrelated job based on economic hardship. Even then, the permit takes several weeks to process.

"Immigration is very tight about working off campus," she said. "We have had students that have applied for permission to work off campus."

She added that some students have received help from their departments with assistantships.

So far, one southeast-Asian student has had to withdraw from school because of the crisis, Davis said. If the situation gets worse, there are still some other options.

"If the crisis worsens, there are alternatives we haven't yet explored that could help students remain in school," she said.

Ken Tan, senior in civil engineering, said the Malaysian ringgit is very unstable.

"Right now it is fluctuating a lot every day. It is not stable yet, and nobody knows what is going to happen," he said.

He said he works 18 hours per week to cover his rent and daily expenses. His parents are having to find a way to afford his tuition, he said.

Balendran said that he could not afford to take as many classes this semester because of the exchange rates and out-of-state tuition.

"I'm only taking 13 hours instead of 15 or 16 like I usually do, he said. "I didn't buy any books this semester."

Balendran said all 15 students from Malaysia are paying from their own pockets, and things are difficult with the exchange rates being the way they are.

"Whenever you spend cash, you have to think about it," he said.

New Engineering Ambassadors ready to visit local high schools

SHERYL WILLIAMS
Kansas State Collegian

Twenty members of the Engineering Ambassadors were initiated last week as executives of Epsilon Alpha Epsilon.

Engineering Ambassadors is a student organization whose members visit high schools to promote engineering and K-State and serve as hosts of campus activities, such as the All-University Open House.

Requirements for becoming an executive include one year of service in the Engineering Ambassadors, a grade point average of at least 2.5 and an interview conducted by peers after candidates submit applications.

Assistant Dean of Engineering Tom Roberts said the students' involvement in the organization is a learning experience.

"I see them learning self-confidence, practicing leadership skills," Roberts said.

Roberts said the ambassadors' high school visits are not limited to lectures and videos. High school students are challenged with exercises in creative problem solving to help them understand engineering. One presentation involved the high school students using blocks of wood, drinking straws and masking tape to build a tower with certain specifications and time limits.

Andrew Peterson, sophomore in biological and agricultural engineering, said the high school presentations are beneficial to the ambassadors as well as the high school students.

"It's a good way to practice presentations in front of groups," Peterson said. "They're not a highly critical group."

Ambassadors also answer the high school students' questions about areas of K-State that are not related to engineering.

"These students are not only learning their own field, but broadening their knowledge of the career field beyond what they might be studying," Roberts said.

As campus hosts, the ambassadors greet visitors at the Durland Hall/Rathbone Hall complex, meet visiting prospective students and conduct campus tours. Anjie Burkhart, president of Engineering Ambassadors, said the biggest advantage is leadership.

"It's given me a lot of opportunity to improve on leadership skills and presentation skills, plus it's a lot of fun to go out and plug engineering at K-State," Burkhart, senior in architectural engineering, said.

Committee recommends mandatory changes to board

Publications. The Collegian, Royal Purple yearbook and advertising staff's representative positions would be eliminated if the bill passes Senate on Thursday.

Committee Vice Chair Aaron Truax, who moved to amend the bill, said Student Publications Finance Committee Chair Carlton Getz supported eliminating the representative positions because they create a conflict of interest.

"Chairman Getz last week ... said he wanted to try and move toward eliminating conflicts of interest on the board. I took his words and wrote them down and proposed this amendment," Truax said.

"We collectively feel — and not just this committee, but the Senate ultimately and the student body president — selectively feel that it's something that's necessary to ensure that the money is spent how we want it to be and to whom we want it to be. We have the responsibility as elected officials to determine that with the contract," he said.

Though Truax said his amendment was based on Getz's goals for the board, Getz said he understands some of the reasoning behind the amendment but doesn't support it.

"There's a little fear out there that the three Student Publications representatives on the board will try to block any moves to eliminate their seats. I have a little more faith in the process," he said.

If it passes Senate on Thursday, the bill must be signed by six people, including board Chairman Todd Simon who said he wouldn't support it. Simon is also director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

Without Simon's signature, the future of the fee is uncertain.

"The bill as it stands now is something I can't sign. If the process yields the same result at the end of Senate I still won't be able to sign it on behalf of the board," he said.

Simon said several problems with the bylaws have been highlighted during the past year. But, he said, it's not the responsibility of Privilege Fee Committee or Student Senate to mandate that the bylaws be fixed.

"We've been delivered the ultimatum to change the bylaws and board composition. This is not a good way to make a decision," Simon said.

He said the board had planned to examine its bylaws more thoroughly next term. The representation on the board is stated in the bylaws and would have been one of the guidelines to be reviewed.

Committee members said it was necessary to mandate change on the board because the employee representatives wouldn't support a change in the bylaws to eliminate their positions. If all three representatives vote against such a measure, the bylaws can't be changed, keeping the board from altering its composition.

Getz said the board should have more time to thoroughly review its bylaws before changing them.

"That's something for next year's committee to sit down, for the bylaws, and think about and say, 'OK, this is what we want,'" Getz said. "I don't think putting forward a requirement like that ... is in the interest of Student Publications or the board itself."

Senator, committee secretary introduce Hale Library privilege fee at meeting

Privilege Fee Committee members sent a bill to create a privilege fee to help fund Hale Library to Student Senate at their meeting Monday.

Members recommended the bill, which would establish a $328,000 privilege fee, out of committee unfavorably.

The bill was written by Privilege Fee Committee Secretary Kimberly Peschka and Arts and Sciences Sen. Jeremy Claeys after the fee committee allowed its own library bill to die for lack of second last week.

Peschka said she and Claeys wrote the bill so it could be presented to the entire Senate body.

"It was written so they could formulate an opinion from Student Senate and not just the committee," she said.

The bill establishes the fee for two years only, instead of the proposed longer periods. Claeys said that should help its chance of passing Senate.

"I think it's going to be an uphill battle. But we are proposing it as more of a bail-out so it will have a better chance of passing," he said.

The bill requires a two-thirds vote to pass. Senators will debate and vote on the measure at their meeting Thursday.

Student funding of library still in question

it-hour fee, but Hobrock decreased the request to 85 cents per-credit-hour, matching the funds committed by the Foundation and Legislature. The proposed fee would generate $328,000 per year, as would state reallocations. The Foundation also has pledged about $300,000 per year.

Hobrock said a fee paid by all students wouldn't pay for journals and resources used solely by graduate students and faculty. Student money would be used to purchase books and electronic resources.

The library fee bill died in committee, but another bill has been proposed. It was passed out of Privilege Fee Committee to Student Senate with an unfavorable recommendation at a meeting Monday.

Aaron Otto, privilege fee chair, said he has mixed feelings about a student fee funding the library.

"I have been convinced the library has a need, but I haven't been convinced to vote for it yet," Otto said. "The students already put money into the bricks and mortar of the building. Money should come from other places. Why we're having trouble funding journals is frustrating."

Hobrock said student funding of the library is important because there are few options.

"Ordinarily, this would be one of the worst things to consider," he said.

Some students feel faculty should help fund the library, but Hobrock said the task force rejected this idea because there are not enough faculty members. A faculty fee to fund books and journals would be significantly higher than the 85 cents per hour being asked of students, he said.

Faculty believe they already help fund the library, and their point is valid, Hobrock said.

"The funds that will come from the state and from the Foundation are funds that the faculty would receive," Hobrock said.

Hobrock said he understands students who don't think they should pay for the library. He said he doesn't necessarily like asking the students for the money.

"It's a pretty rotten thing, but it's a consequence of the fact that our current funding philosophy in the state — and I don't mean just Kansas, I mean many states — is that the user of services should pay a larger portion," Hobrock said.

Hobrock said other universities charge students for library use. The University of Texas has a $2 per-credit-hour fee, Texas A&M has about the same as Texas, and the University of Nebraska has a $5 per-credit-hour fee, he said.

Cynthia McCahon, chair of the library task force, said she doesn't like asking the students for money either.

"I understand that students are contributing quite a bit of money to facilities. That's wonderful. It really shows a commitment by students in providing excess resources to further their education," McCahon said.

"I agree that the money should come from the Legislature, but given the political realities, it just hasn't happened," she said. "So instead of sitting back and saying, 'Please help us. Please help us,' it really shows wonderful unity if the student body can just pull themselves up by the boot straps and say, 'We're not going to depend on you. We're going to do it ourselves.'"

Jayne Morris-Hardeman, co-chair of a Student Senate ad hoc committee on library subscriptions, said students shouldn't help fund the library through a privilege fee. Her committee's report opposed the creation of a new fee.

"We really feel students already support the library by paying for the building," Morris-Hardeman said. "I think the library is essential to education and not really a privilege. Privileges benefit education, but they're not necessarily a part of education."

"It should be more funded by tuition than by privilege fees," she said.

Morris-Hardeman said if students didn't have Lafene Health Center, they could find other doctors or nurses to go to, but if they don't have a library, there is no other place to go in Manhattan for the information they need.

"We really feel it's the state's responsibility because we're a state university," she said, speaking for the committee.

Gary Hellebust, Foundation president and chief executive officer, said library funding should be a top issue for the next student body president and vice president.

"It ranks right up there with scholarships from the private sector point of view and from the viability of the university. You have to have quality students, and you have to have a quality library," Hellebust said.

Bidding changes means less time for preparation

said Greg Davis, senior in management information systems and president of IFC.

"Then fraternities can bid for Homecoming in the spring."

Function bidding has taken three weeks to prepare in the past, but with this year's change, bidding only took a week.

Greek houses were allowed more time to schedule functions throughout the semester.

"Bidding is a very time-consuming event," Davis said.

"Especially since we had to have the sororities bid two times in a row for both functions and Homecoming to get things going. That way, fraternities can bid Homecoming next year in the spring."

Houses are allowed to extend as many bids for functions as desired, although there is a maximum of three functions or exchange dinners.

"Functions are a way for fraternities to get together and not only do community services, but get together and have fun," Davis said.

He said when fraternities and sororities get together for functions, they help the community.

"It's kind of become a trend to do community service as a function. The houses have more fun when the community can benefit, and that's awesome," he said.

For both fraternities and sororities, the proposal for rotating roles in function bidding will be a change, and for some, there will be positive results.

"I think it's a relief for guys to not have to mess with bidding every year," said Zac Richmond, sophomore in industrial engineering and member of Sigma Chi fraternity. "It's fun to see what creative ideas sororities can come up with."

Richmond said bidding can help get rid of stereotypes that can build up between houses.

"You might get a different impression of a house you may have had preconceived assumptions about," he said.

Beach art museum director announces resignation

KELLEE MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

Nelson Britt, director of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, informed President Jon Wefald of his resignation Tuesday as director of the museum, effective Aug. 30.

Britt, first director of the museum, was hired five years ago to oversee its design and construction and to hire the professional staff. At press time, Britt was on vacation and could not be reached for comment.

Charles Reagan, chair of the museum advisory board, said Britt's resignation was due to a personal decision to pursue other career opportunities in the private gallery sector.

"I've been very pleased with the running of the museum," Reagan said. "Britt made a tremendous contribution during the building process."

Britt was director at an art museum in Greenville, N.C. before coming to K-State.

Reagan said Britt's work in the museum building process in Greenville was the main reason he was hired.

"We wanted a director who would help during the design and construction phase of the museum, and Britt had had that experience in Greenville," Reagan said.

Bill North, curator of the Beach art museum, said Britt's greatest contribution to K-State is the building he is leaving behind.

"He was very instrumental in helping select the architects and in the overseeing of the project," North said.

North said Britt's resignation was a surprise, but it won't have any bearing on the upcoming plans or schedule of the Beach art museum.

Reagan also said the Beach art museum would not suffer from the loss of its director. Exhibition schedules are planned two years in advance and the art museum is booked until 2000.

North said Britt did an outstanding job selecting a strong professional staff from all across the country.

"It was critical that the staff be in place before the museum opened to meet the expected challenges and to be able to function as a unit," North said. "Britt hired a staff that works well together and has a great chemistry."

North said the Beach art museum does not foresee any significant changes with the Beach art museum policies established by Britt or with the art museum's vision with the hiring of a new director.

"Britt set the museum on a course we hope and have every faith that we will continue on," North said. "We have no reason to expect that the museum's vision will change."

A national search will be conducted to find a replacement for Britt. Members of the art museum advisory committee will make up the search committee.

Reagan said he is unsure whether the position will be filled before the Aug. 30 deadline.

Reagan said he is pleased with the success of the art museum.

"The museum has been critically acclaimed for its beauty and there have been a tremendous number of visits, events and lectures in the museum," he said.

"It's a strong community resource."

Britt also served as the ex officio member of the Building Museum Committee, the Museum Operations Committee, and during the construction phase was a member of the university's negotiating committee.

Low salaries spur faculty to leave KSU

JENNIFER LUCKE
Kansas State Collegian

K-State is losing good professors to higher-paying jobs at other institutions.

K-State is ranked No. 42 of the 50 land-grant universities in terms of faculty salaries. The average salary of a tenured professor is about $48,000, Provost James Coffman said.

Coffman said the number of K-State professors leaving for better-paying jobs is starting to increase.

"For the last five or six years we've been protected somewhat by the fact that every state in the union was decreasing its higher education budget. Now that's starting to let up because the economy has improved," Coffman said.

Salaries at K-State are considerably lower than those at peer institutions.

According to the Office of Institutional Research at Iowa State University, the average salary of a full professor at ISU for the 1996-97 academic year was about $73,000.

Salaries at the University of Colorado-Boulder are also greater than those at K-State. UCB Office of Budget and Planning reported an average professor salary of $71,627 for the 1995-96 year.

Transportation study approved by commission

► PROJECT AIMS TO IMPROVE CITY, UNIVERSITY TRAFFIC SITUATIONS.

NATE JENKINS
Kansas State Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission on Tuesday night approved the details of a Kansas City, Mo., corporation's plan to do a citywide transportation study that will include K-State.

The study, which will be done by TranSystems Corp., is projected to last one year and will include everything from the feasibility of having a public transit system in Manhattan to looking at how often accidents occur on the K-State campus.

The total cost of the study is projected to be $267,072. K-State will pay $63,222 of that total.

Tom Swenson, TranSystems representative, was on hand to answer questions from the commission and the public about the plan's specifics.

"It's not our intention to reinvent the wheel here," Swenson said. "What we want to do for Manhattan is bring all the various transportation plans in the community together instead of looking at them independently."

Specifically, TranSystems will review traffic volumes in Manhattan and determine how changes in roadway networks can work together with a possible transit system, new parking facilities and new bicycle and pedestrian facilities.

Though the main purpose of the study is to develop transportation goals with a 20-year horizon, there are short-term objectives with a three- to five-year time line.

They include existing pedestrian and bicycle paths, improvements to roads, and parking facilities.

TranSystems' outline also includes developing a new campus plan for K-State that incorporates many of the same ideas. Mayor Bruce Snead told Swenson he wanted the firm to collaborate efforts for the city and university.

Kansas State Collegian

Student Senate is the main entity on campus whose purpose is to represent the entire student body.

Senate representation at K-State has traditionally been dependent upon major, and each college is allowed a certain number of elected senators determined by the number of students enrolled in that college.

Other representation options could be to apportion Senate seats according to living arrangements.

Senate Chair Jeff Dougan said the system is questioned and reviewed about every 10 years, and the most recent look was taken about three years ago.

"Senate created a long-term planning committee which also had a recommendation of changing apportionment from college major to living organization," he said.

"It was never endorsed and looked on pretty poorly. I think a lot of people thought that there was kind of a fairness issue. That it would be excluding a lot of the people that wanted to be involved, and there may be a lot of vacant seats, and the entire student body would not be represented as well."

Several other schools in the Big 12 Conference combine both college majors and living arrangements to achieve equal representation for the student population.

At Oklahoma State University, a total of 50 senators are elected, including four who are designated as residence hall members, three as greeks, one as a university apartment resident and 17 as off-campus residents. The remainder of the senators are elected by college.

OSU off-campus senator John Hendrix said the high off-campus senator numbers were a little lopsided.

"Sometimes it can be used to the disadvantage of other groups," he said.

Iowa State University also uses the dual apportionment method to elect Senate representation. Out of a total of 42 seats, 18 are elected from colleges, 18 from living arrangements and six are set aside as specialty seats. The specialty seats are elected to represent special groups such as nontraditional, disabled or minority students.

Jeremy Williams, director of financial affairs at ISU, said he has been involved in student government for four years and feels its form of representation works to benefit all students.

"The specialty seats kind of pick up the slack of those not represented by other seats," he said.

The University of Kansas Student Senate's representation includes both living arrangements and major. The seats elected according to living organization include five senators who live off-campus and one senator who lives in a residence hall.

Trent Schaaf, president of the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, said he has researched other schools' systems and said he thinks that with K-State's Senate representation now, certain living organizations' issues might be left out.

"People may tend to ignore the constituency of the people they represent. They see people they live with all the time and are influenced by them rather than their true constituents," he said.

Schaaf said if a change were made, there would be benefits across the board. He said the benefits of switching to representation by living arrangement are threefold.

"First, you would have better representation of the constituents. If you are a representative of a living organization you have the opportunity to interact with your constituents on a broader scale," he said.

The second improvement would be a better understanding of the issues concerning where students live. Schaaf cited campus safety as an example.

"What stake does an engineering major have on campus safety as opposed to a student that lives in a residence hall on campus? People that visit campus only for classes aren't as informed on these issues as someone who lives on campus," he said.

Finally, Schaaf said the academic issues wouldn't be lost if the system were changed; rather, students would only gain a broader knowledge of relevant topics.

"Everyone is here at K-State for academics. What really makes a difference in the college experience is

KU Medical School professor discusses recent discoveries about AIDS, HIV cases

Dr. Donna Sweet, professor at the University of Kansas School of Medicine in Wichita, said it is imperative for young people to understand AIDS at a lecture Tuesday.

"The misunderstanding about AIDS is still great, and the younger patients make it harder to get people to do things like take their medication," she said.

Sweet, who has worked with 550 to 600 AIDS and HIV patients since 1985, said 30 million people worldwide are infected with HIV.

More than a million of these people are children younger than 13, and 10,000 new cases are reported each day, which is more than five cases per minute.

Sweet said more than a million people and one in every 100 men in the United States are infected. Despite this fact, women in the age group 14 to 34 are at the greatest risk for being infected.

"The transfer of the virus from males to females is more efficient than from females to males," Sweet said. "If you just consider the sex act it is obvious why."

Most cases of HIV infection are attributed to drug users and the use of needles, Sweet said. Heterosexual sexual intercourse is the second-leading cause of HIV infection.

Sweet said new advances in the treatment of HIV and AIDS have lengthened the average life of patients.

"In 1985 the average life expectancy for an AIDS patient was six months. Now when a patient comes in and is able to get on some drug therapy, I can generally give them an estimate of five to eight years," Sweet said.

Sweet said the population of patients she sees now are much more difficult than when she first started.

"People expect HIV patients to look different," she said. "There is not one of you that would expect some of my patients are infected."

Wefald supports recommended budget, requests funding for salaries, insurance

TOPEKA — President Jon Wefald on Tuesday supported the governor's budget recommendation for K-State, but asked for more money for faculty salaries and health insurance for graduate student employees.

Wefald was among those making budgetary pitches to a Senate Ways and Means subcommittee formulating budgets for the six state universities, as well as allocations for Topeka's Washburn University.

In his budget proposal for fiscal year 1999, Gov. Bill Graves proposed increasing regents universities' general-use budgets by 4.1 percent. For K-State, Graves' recommendation for the main campus was nearly $254 million from all funding sources — an increase of 1.7 percent from the previous year.

Wefald used his time to talk about the academic achievements of K-State students, saying that of 500 public universities, K-State had the most recipients of nationally prestigious scholarships. He said the university has had six Rhodes Scholars since 1986, and seven Marshall Scholars since 1990.

He also mentioned K-State's Fiesta Bowl victory on New Year's Eve, but said the academic achievements were the equivalent of winning the Fiesta Bowl 20 years in a row.

Wefald said for this year, the state gave K-State $142 million in direct appropriations. Through research and other programs, the university generated $1.3 billion in economic development, Wefald said.

"For $142 million, we are getting the job done, with students, teaching, research and economic development for this state," Wefald said.

While Graves recommended a 4-percent salary increase for faculty, Wefald is asking for an increase of 5 percent. In addition, the university is asking for $517,000 for group health insurance for graduate student workers.

Senate questions Microsoft about limiting Netscape product promotions on Internet

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Microsoft Chairman Bill Gates came under intense questioning at a Senate hearing Tuesday as he was asked repeatedly whether his company restricts Internet businesses from promoting products of rival Netscape Communications Corp.

"You've been somewhat hard to nail down on a very specific question," Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said in his dogged questioning of Gates. "Do you put any limitation on content providers that limit them ... for advertising or promoting Netscape?"

"Every Internet content provider that has a business relationship with Microsoft is free to develop content that uses competitors' platforms and standards," Gates said.

Gates later said that Internet businesses that provide news, entertainment or other content to World Wide Web pages cannot promote Netscape on only a limited number of Web pages that link to a Microsoft service that simplifies navigating the Internet.

Microsoft's contracts with Internet businesses came under sharp focus at the hearing on the future of competition in the software industry. Earlier, Gates mounted a determined defense, arguing his company does not have a monopoly in the software business and urged the government to keep its hands off the industry.

Gates said government control would only restrict innovation, he said.

One of Gates' main rivals, Netscape Communications Corp. chief executive James Barksdale, enlisted the audience's help to challenge the Microsoft founder's version of the industry.

He asked audience members to raise their hands if they had a personal computer at home or work, and several dozen did. He then asked them to keep their arms up if they were among those without a Microsoft Windows operating system. Only a handful did.

"Gentlemen, that's a monopoly," Barksdale said.

Candidates want to put power back in students' hands

KELLEE MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

A silver dollar for luck and a word-of-mouth campaign are the strategies running mates Trey Hock, graduate student in English, and Bill Kraai, senior in graphic design, will use to obtain their goal of becoming next year's student body president and vice president.

The two said they hope the good-luck tradition of throwing a silver dollar into the Kansas River will bring them success in next week's elections.

SGA '98 Elections
MARCH 9-11

Hock said their three-part platform is student-oriented and focuses on creating an approachable Student Governing Association, taking an active approach to student concerns and building a strong university, both academically and athletically.

"We are two students who have had student struggles, who understand the concerns of juggling time and increased fees," he said. "We have student-based experience that will benefit the students."

For the past four years, Hock said SGA has been used as a tool by other authorities in the university besides students to get things done. Hock wants to change this focus and give power back to students.

"We want to work with the administration, but we don't want to do that if it means working against the students," he said.

Part of their plan to return the power to students is to strengthen the open-door policy of SGA, Hock said.

"I don't want anything about SGA to be stuffy," Hock said. "It should be very approachable and friendly."

Taking an active approach to find out the student needs and wants is one way to do this, Kraai said.

"If you can get students to vote for you, you can find out what students want by the same method," he said.

Hock said the campaign shouldn't end when the election is over, but continue throughout the year.

"It shouldn't be just one month out of the school year," he said. "We should be much more active by going out to the campus organizations and living groups."

Hock said he and Kraai are supporters of K-State's athletic program but believe the university should be strong academically, as well. He said the athletic program's notoriety is what gets students here, but the academic program is what keeps them here.

"The academic program is what most students are benefiting from," he said. "We need to make sure we keep funding student resources such as Hale Library and our other nationally accredited programs so they can continue their legacy of excellence."

Hock said part of the way to do this is to let all students, rather than a small, elite group, vote on issues such as fee increases.

He said the university has spent too much time waiting for funding from the Kansas Legislature for educational resources, and this power needs to be returned to the students.

"SGA has been way too hesitant and way too inactive waiting for the Kansas Legislature. We need to take the initiative and let them follow our lead," Hock said.

He said issues such as a lack of student parking have been around since he was a freshman and probably won't be solved until the Legislature or the administration decide it is needed or when the students vote for a fee increase.

"I would be lying if I said I could solve this problem," Hock said. "I think we are addressing some big issues that sound vague but are a lot more specific than people think."

Hock said he and Kraai's lack of involvement in SGA is a benefit.

"We are not SGA blood, but Bill and I have had 11 years of collective experience at K-State," he said. "Not being involved does not mean no experience."

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

TREY HOCK, LEFT, GRADUATE STUDENT IN ENGLISH, AND BILL KRAAI, RIGHT, SENIOR IN GRAPHIC DESIGN, SAY A LUCKY SILVER DOLLAR AND A WORD-OF-MOUTH PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN ARE STRATEGIES THEY'LL USE TO HELP THEM OBTAIN THE OFFICES OF STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT.

Hock and Kraai said their decision to run was because of a feeling of helplessness when issues such as a fee increase for the library are turned down by SGA without student input or a student vote.

"This is my way of getting my say and my way of saying everybody can have their say," Hock said.

Hock and Kraai said their five-year friendship is a strong asset to their ability to function as a team.

"We have an openness and an ability to communicate with each other," Hock said.

Hock said their main objective in running is to get their concerns addressed.

"We want the students to know you can do this. You can run for student body president," he said.

"We want them to learn how the system works so when someone is in power they can know what they are doing and how they are doing."

Federal program offers year-long paid community-service position for students

JAMI BOYLE
Kansas State Collegian

Americorps VISTA, along with Manhattan Habitat for Humanity, is offering a paid community-service position in Manhattan next year to help coordinate Habitat's activities.

Americorps VISTA is a federal program that pays full-time volunteers to work on local community-service projects for one year. The volunteer is paid a $629 monthly stipend and may choose between a $4,725 educational award or an extra $100 per month.

Volunteers are not allowed to be enrolled in school during their year of service, but can receive deferment on loans.

Marcia Schuley, Manhattan Habitat for Humanity president, said this position will offer many benefits to the Manhattan area.

"As far as the community, the whole purpose of Habitat is to help build up the community," she said.

"There's no way that we could hire a 40-hour-per-week person to do this."

Schuley said most of their volunteers have full-time jobs and are not able to have the kind of dedication the Americorps VISTA volunteer would have.

Four students served as Americorps VISTA volunteers last year through the Kansas Health and Safety Extension Corps at K-State, Glendia Henley, extension instructor, said. She said the students helped with health and service outreach programs to rural areas.

"I believe, as a VISTA sponsor, it's a wonderful opportunity for citizens to serve," Henley said.

Cambray Walker, junior in management, said he enjoyed serving as an Americorps VISTA volunteer on this project.

"I think it's a really good experience," he said. "Plus, you get the stipend to go to school. That's always helpful."

Walker said the experience showed him a new side of community service.

"It definitely opened my eyes to all of the work that goes into being a volunteer," he said. "It lets you know what real life is going to be like."

Manhattan Habitat for Humanity is looking for someone interested in volunteer management and construction coordination. Schuley said it would help if applicants are familiar with the organization.

Habitat for Humanity builds homes for low-income families. It is in the process of building its fifth home in Manhattan.

Americorps VISTA provides income for the volunteers. Its goal is to help foster the community-service program so it stays active after the volunteer is gone. It has assigned more than 100,000 volunteers to more than 12,000 organizations in the United States.

Privilege fee for library standing on its last leg

It's 85-cents-per-credit hour. It's only for two years. And, if it passes through Student Senate Thursday night, it will provide this campus with the journals to fill Hale Library.

Thursday night is most likely the last hope this year for a proposed student fee to fund Hale Library. The bill, which received an unfavorable recommendation in the Privilege Fee Committee meeting Monday night, would establish a $328,000 contribution from the student body to fund the rising costs of journal subscriptions to the library.

If the funding is not approved Thursday night, Senate will probably not have enough time to introduce another bill until next year's fee cycle.

The proposed bill established the fee for two years only, instead of the proposed longer period, which died in committee more than a week ago. It also requires that there be a continuance of state funding as long as students are contributing. It is, in a sense, as safe of a bill as can be written.

Student senators should have confidence in a bill that has little chance of exploiting students.

Aside from giving tremendous support to a desperate library, passage of this bill would be a symbolic gesture to the state that students at K-State are concerned about their education.

It sends an equal message to the library and the rest of the university that students aren't willing to be an endless resource for all of K-State's funding problems. For a crisis such as the Hale Library situation, this bill is a quick and dirty solution. And it's a great one.

It's now up to those 60 voting members of Senate to talk to their constituency to see how to vote.

It's equally up to the student body to communicate to senators and let them know how important Hale Library is to this campus.

HOME, HOME OF THE STRANGE

Kansas' reputation tarnished by "Wizard of Oz" stereotype, Legislature's shameful agenda

I'M not a native Kansan. I like to think of myself as being from Maine on permanent loan to America's heartland. And more than once in the past few years I've seriously thought about abandoning the amber waves of grain in search of America's brain.

First there's "The Wizard of Oz" stigma. "Oh, Kansas? Do you know Dorothy? Is your dog named Toto?" It wouldn't be so hard living down the questions if the state didn't seem intent on perpetuating the image. I'm still recovering from the emotional trauma of the "Ah... Kansas" tourism campaign. Dollars to doughnuts whoever thought up that gem was from out of state.

There are additional blemishes to the stature of the Kansan — Fred Phelps, being stuck between Missouri and Colorado — but they're superficial and external and don't have the pain of a self-inflicted indignity.

Even the cows in Kansas burn with shame after listening to the new agenda of the Kansas Legislature, which sent a request through the Kansas Board of Regents for a list of all courses containing subject matter directly relating to bisexuality or homosexuality. Ordinarily, I'd appreciate our government taking such an active interest in the educational process, but I feel about as confident as the night clerk at a Super 8 watching the U.S. Olympic Hockey Team check in.

There's only one appropriate response to this request: "Speech 100: BITE ME." Failing that, tell them that every class has homosexual content and if they can't see that, then they're just not looking hard enough. I'd love to see a subsequent critique of a cartography class.

In similarly asinine fiddling, Senate Bill No. 669 would undo recently enacted legislation protecting high school journalism with the freedom of the press. It's understandable, I guess. They're only teenagers in Kansas. Surely the Constitution doesn't apply to them.

The bill says if journalistic material doesn't conform to "high standards of English and journalism" it's not protected by freedom of expression. That covers roughly half of what I have to read for class. Who decides what those high standards are? The boards of education. I'll take "Unacceptably Vague" for $500, Alex.

It could be worse. They could have left it up to the Legislature.

The final blow to the dignity of the state is the fact that your tax dollars and mine go out to HCR 5024. This resolution designates the polka as a state ethnic dance, and the official state folk dance is now the square dance. How apropos.

These are the days that make monarchy look good.

There are still quite a few things to be proud of in Kansas, though they're hard to bring into focus when you're blurry-eyed from myopic legislation. Is it asking too much that common sense have some degree of bearing over making state laws?

I'd love to blame the system. I'd like to say I had no choice and my vote was a drop in the bucket in elections that are decided during the primaries, but that ignores the fact that those people in the Statehouse are working for me.

They can be and will be accountable for the decisions they make.

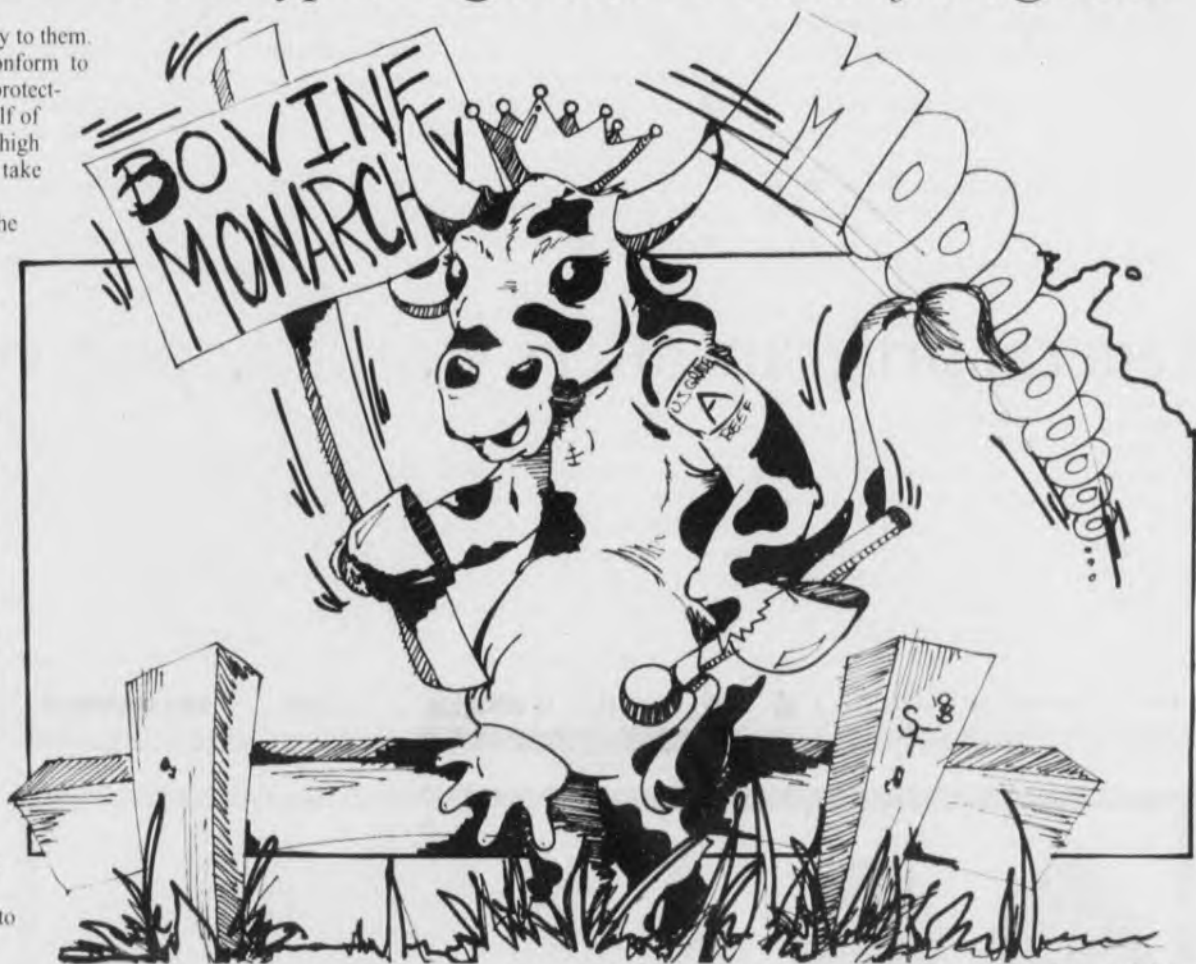

When their work is sub-par it reflects poorly not only on them but also on the state as a whole. Our representatives have mailboxes and e-mail accounts, and the opportunity for feedback should never be neglected.

If they screw up one more time, let's switch to bovine monarchy and run with it.

Candidates vow to keep power with students

When deciding to run for student body president and vice president, we, Trey Hock and Bill Kraai, first wanted to come up with a list of things that could make K-State even better than it already is. What we came up with was a three-part platform: 1) giving the power of Student Governing Association back to the students, 2) getting SGA to take a more active approach in finding out what student concerns are and 3) making sure we have a university that we can be proud of, for its athletic programs as well as its academic program.

The first part of our platform involves a dedication to the students. We want to keep the power of student government in the students' hands. Too often in the past, SGA has pandered its power to other authorities in the university at the expense of the students. Under a Hock and Kraai administration, SGA will speak always for the student and student interests.

Kraai has always been a good listener. As your vice president, he will keep his ear to the voice of the students. As running mates, we want to take a more active approach to finding out what the students want or need. This means that when elections are over, our campaigning has just begun. No longer campaigning for votes, but for student concerns. The "open door" policy of SGA is a good start, but it is time to move forward from a passive to a more interested SGA.

Finally, Kraai and Hock want a university that is as strong academically as it is athletically. This does not mean increasing fees for Hale Library or anything else without allowing the students to vote on each proposed increase. It does, however, mean getting the vote to the students, instead of allowing the proposal to die in committee. It should be the students who decide how best to spend their money. In addition, when funding for resources, SGA needs to stop waiting for the Kansas Legislature to lead the way. SGA needs to take responsibility and action. The student government of this university should lead the way in decisions of its academic standing.

In conclusion, we would like to point out when you vote for Hock and Kraai, you are putting your support behind two dedicated people and two concerned students. Because of our time at K-State, we can fully represent the students and their interests.

Alumni center proposal missing design architectural beauty

Editor,

This is an open letter to the KSU Alumni Association: Although I believe that the need for a new facility is justifiable and the location is an excellent choice, I am shocked at the unsightly, ugly, obtrusive rendering shown in the Collegian last week.

What the hell happened here?

I honestly thought that the "design bar" had been raised at K-State with construction of Hale Library and the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. How could a new alumni center, by definition the greeting spot for the campus, get approval with apparently such little regard for the need to harmonize with its picturesque Memorial Stadium setting?

Please demand a higher standard of design. If something more attractive can't be built within the existing budget, then wait until you can afford it.

Alumni should enter their alumni center proudly, not wincing with embarrassment. The beautification of our campus has come too far to allow such a big step backward as this.

Media exaggerates problems plaguing Middle East countries

Editor,

Reading Scott Hopper's column on the Middle East and the U.S. addiction to the oil flowing from that region, I was hoping the author would share some insight into the nature of this ailment and possible cures:

- explanation as to why the U.S. oil production is about 40-percent below its peak, which was reached in 1970.

- some information on the consumer consumption of oil in the United States (in 1993, in motor vehicles only, the oil consumption was at the staggering level of 8.5 million barrels per day and rising — data from The Center for Renewable Energy and Sustainable Technology).

I hoped for predictions of sociological and economical impact of the end of the era of cheap oil which, by the way, is approaching rather quickly; pessimistically speaking, global production of oil will decline in about 10 years, optimistically in 30 years (Scientific American, 3/98).

Instead, Hopper chose to write about counting Middle Easterners during CNN broadcasts attempting to discredit the U.S. anti-war movement.

In my opinion, the tone of the column somehow does not fit the title.

Hopper said, "It might appear that the nation is divided in its views about how to cope with Iraq. However, the leaders of these anti-government outbursts are Arabs."

Hopper failed to notice that it's only natural that those voices are heard. In fact, it would be worrisome if they were not heard.

I wonder — if I were to heavily bombard, say, Arizona, would people who have families in Arizona not protest? Would a voice from people who were brought up there not be heard? Would neighboring states be afraid of impending chaos?

Imagery of hate and destruction as beamed down to almost every home via the television helps in keeping American attention on the Middle East. This is needed, as the United States must convince itself of the need for control of oil prices.

The government thinks that it is good to have a bad guy in that neighborhood, as he will provide necessary justification of the military force presence. This situation is somewhat comparable to the protectorate of local restaurants in New York by the Mafia.

Note that Iraq is applying a similar technique of news media manipulation to its own citizens, trying to convince them that Iraq and its government is a victim in this mess.

This is what I find most distracting about Hopper's notion: It unquestionably embraces what is shown on the TV screen.

Average U.S. viewers would rather lazily absorb the pre-fabricated images of the 10 p.m. news after a day of hard work rather than form their own opinion.

Only a week ago, some viewers managed to catch via satellite Dan Rather reporting "live" on attacks on Baghdad. CBS aired Dan Rather reporting on the military actions in Iraq.

They had nifty three-dimensional graphics showing missiles and their routes and targets. They had "live" footage of attacks.

Only there was no attack.

The program that aired was just Dan Rather's "rehearsal."

Sackett column scrapes surface of human, religious morality

Editor,

I am responding to Sam Sackett's column titled "Man should check his résumé; He's unqualified to play God." While this column has a nice discussion about the difference between human morality and religious morality, it skips across the surface and does not examine the root cause of this debate. The problem is that religious morality is always subject to the viewpoint of man. The two concepts can never be fully separated because of this. By human nature, we tend to interpret religious text to support our own current viewpoint.

This provides a great deal of security to people because their views on morality then can receive the religious stamp of approval. Though many Christians would like us to believe that it is all clearly outlined in the Bible, there is a good reason that the United States has hundreds of Christian denominations. Every group believes that its interpretation of the Bible is the correct one, and everyone else is wrong.

If the Bible is so incredibly clear on these issues, then why are so many Christians at odds with each other?

Now I do understand that these denominations tend to agree on many of the big points (Ten Commandments, Golden Rule, etc.) but the universal front quickly falls apart after that.

A perfect example of this concerns the consumption of alcohol. Catholicism and some Protestant denominations incorporate the drinking of wine into their communion, but several Protestant groups only use grape juice. The grape juice-consuming Protestants (e.g. Methodists) can cite several verses out of the Bible (mostly Old Testament) that illustrate the evil of over-consuming alcohol, which supports their viewpoints. Never mind that there are other verses that say that wine lifts the hearts of men or that Jesus repeatedly used wine throughout the gospel.

This is a simple example, but it illustrates how easily division can occur. Similar arguments can be made, with both sides citing biblical verse, about current hot topics like abortion, homosexuality and evolution. Can anyone provide a completely objective assessment of which side is correct without tainting the judgment with his or her own societal biases? I don't think so. As a result, the debates will continue.

Claiming the moral high ground is easy when talking in vague high-minded principals, but as always, the devil is in the details.

NCAA WOMEN'S HOOPS Big 12 Conference Tournament Texas A&M 98, Texas 74

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kera Alexander scored 25 points and Prissy Sharpe had 19 to lead Texas A&M to a 98-74 upset victory over Texas in the opening round of the Big 12 Tournament on Tuesday.

Texas A&M (9-18), the 10th seed, outscored Texas 14-2 late in the first half to take a 48-34 halftime lead.

The Longhorns (12-15), the seventh seed, shot only 42 percent from the field in the second half and got no closer than 11 points.

Alexander scored mostly from the inside, including four three-point plays, while Sharpe was seven-for-10 from the field with two three-point shots.

Angela Jackson led Texas with 23 points before fouling out and Kim Lummus added 17.

The Aggies dominated the boards, outrebounding the Longhorns 46-29.

Texas A&M (9-18) advances to play No. 22 Iowa State at 6 tonight.

ALEXANDER

Oklahoma St. 67, Missouri 48

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Sara Jackson scored 18 points in the second half to spark Oklahoma State past Missouri 67-48 in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament on Tuesday.

Seven minutes into the second half, Jackson made a three-point play that tied the game at 37 and propelled the Cowgirls (18-9) to a 30-11 run in the last 13 minutes.

Jackson, who came into the game averaging 4.3 points per game, didn't take a shot in the first half but finished eight-for-eight from the field.

Missouri (11-16), the last seed, led the fifth-seeded Cowgirls throughout the first half and by as many as seven in the second half.

Ekpedeme Akpaffiong led the Tigers with 15 points and 11 rebounds and Julie Heim added 13 points.

Cheri Edwards added 15 points for Oklahoma State and Renee Roberts had 13.

Oklahoma State moves on to play No. 25 Nebraska at 2:20 p.m. today.

EDWARDS

Colorado 71, Oklahoma 66

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — La Shena Graham had 17 points and Colorado remained the only undefeated team in the Big 12 Conference Tournament's history with a 71-66 win over Oklahoma on Tuesday.

The Buffaloes (12-15 overall, 6-11 Big 12) will play sixth-ranked Texas Tech in the second round today.

Colorado opened up a 10-0 lead and never trailed, though it spent much of the game fighting off Oklahoma rallies.

Oklahoma threatened late in the game with a 6-0 run, but the rally was stopped when Graham hit a 10-foot fall-away jumper with 1:30 left.

Oklahoma (8-19, 4-13) was led by Jaime Anderson's 18 points. Roxanne Long added 17 and Phylesha Whaley 16.

GRAHAM

Colorado, the defending Big 12 Tournament champion, won its 10th-straight conference tournament game. The Buffaloes had also won the two previous Big 8 conference tournaments.

Bengals' Corey Dillon arrested

SEATTLE — Corey Dillon of the Cincinnati Bengals was arrested early Tuesday for investigation of drunken driving. The running back says he was not drinking.

Dillon, one of the top rookies in the NFL last year, was pulled over about 1 a.m. in downtown Seattle. Police said his car was turning without signaling and possibly speeding.

The 23-year-old player was booked into jail for investigation of DUI, negligent driving and driving with a suspended license.

He later posted bail and was released.

He told KOMO-TV he had not been drinking and that police did not give him sobriety tests. He also said officers searched his car without his permission or a warrant.

"I was harassed, the whole nine yards," said Dillon, a former star at the University of Washington.

Bengals spokesman Jack Brennan said the team had not yet been informed of the arrest.

4 elected to baseball Hall of Fame

TAMPA, Fla. — Larry Doby, heralded for more than a half-century as the first black player in the American League, was elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame Tuesday along with former AL president Lee MacPhail and two others.

Also chosen by the Veterans Committee were Negro leagues pitcher "Bullet" Joe Rogan and turn-of-the-century shortstop "Gorgeous" George Davis.

MacPhail joins his late father, Larry, as the only father-and-son combination in the Hall.

K-STATE SURVIVES OVERTIME TO ADVANCE TO ROUND 2 OF BIG 12 TOURNAMENT.

SUN DEE MILLS Kansas State Collegian

A new year in the Big 12 Tournament brought a new tournament opponent but the same result. The Wildcats scratched out first-round foe Baylor, 75-66, in overtime Tuesday night.

"I just thought it was an overall tremendously competitive game," K-State coach Deb Patterson said. "It was the kind of game that everyone at tournament time deserves and loves to see."

Sophomore center Angie Finkes hit the first shot in the game and didn't miss one until the 4:30 mark of the first half. By then, she'd already scored 12 points.

But turnovers forced by Baylor traps and presses troubled the Cats. Junior guard/forward Jenny Coalson notched five turnovers and three fouls by the end of the first half. Coalson had eight turnovers but also recorded a career-high 11 assists.

"We lost some composure," Patterson said. "We went through a spurt where we made real poor decisions versus their pressure."

The Bears were active on the offensive boards, grabbing 10 to the Cats' two at the end of the half and 22 for the game. But at first, second- and third-chance shots weren't falling for Baylor — the Bears finished the half shooting .364.

Finkes was 13-for-25 from the field, and sophomore forward Nicky Ramage was perfect at the half, going 11-for-13 for the game. Both players tipped in 27 points each, career highs for both.

Freshman guard Kim Woodlee shot three-of-eight from the three-point line to add nine points. Woodlee and Finkes both played the entire 45 minutes.

"Angie and Nicky took the responsibility and decided to be the two to say 'We're going to score,'" Patterson said. "Because they were, we're sitting here and sitting with another opportunity to play."

For the third time in three games, the Cats recorded better than 50-percent shooting at the half, shooting 57 percent from the field for the game.

FINKES

Baylor's shooting drought ended as the second half began. Lady Bear forward Kacy Moffitt scored eight points on Baylor's first six possessions, while guard Lara Webb hit her first of three three-pointers. Webb, who hit none in the first half, went three-of-13 from behind the arc.

Patterson said immediate team changes were necessary to shut down Moffitt's performance.

"Kacy was finding gaps and getting the ball too easily," Patterson said. "Eight out of 10 times her hands were on the ball, something good is going to happen. We changed our entire defensive scheme."

The Cats never let the game get away, keeping the Bears within six points at the largest margin. Finkes and Ramage continued to operate inside, and a three-pointer by Woodlee brought the Cats within one with 4:36 left. A Finkes basket gave the Cats the lead back.

Until 3:35 of the second half, K-State had not hit a free throw. Ramage stepped to the line and sank two, cementing a 61-58 Cats lead for about two minutes.

In the last two minutes, Ramage hit the front end of a one-and-one, but Webb and post player Tasia Wright dropped in points to tie the game at 62. Ramage's one of two missed shots, with seven seconds left, sent it into overtime.

But senior guard Brit Jacobson spent the overtime on the bench. With a minute left, she recorded her fifth foul. She said she never lost faith.

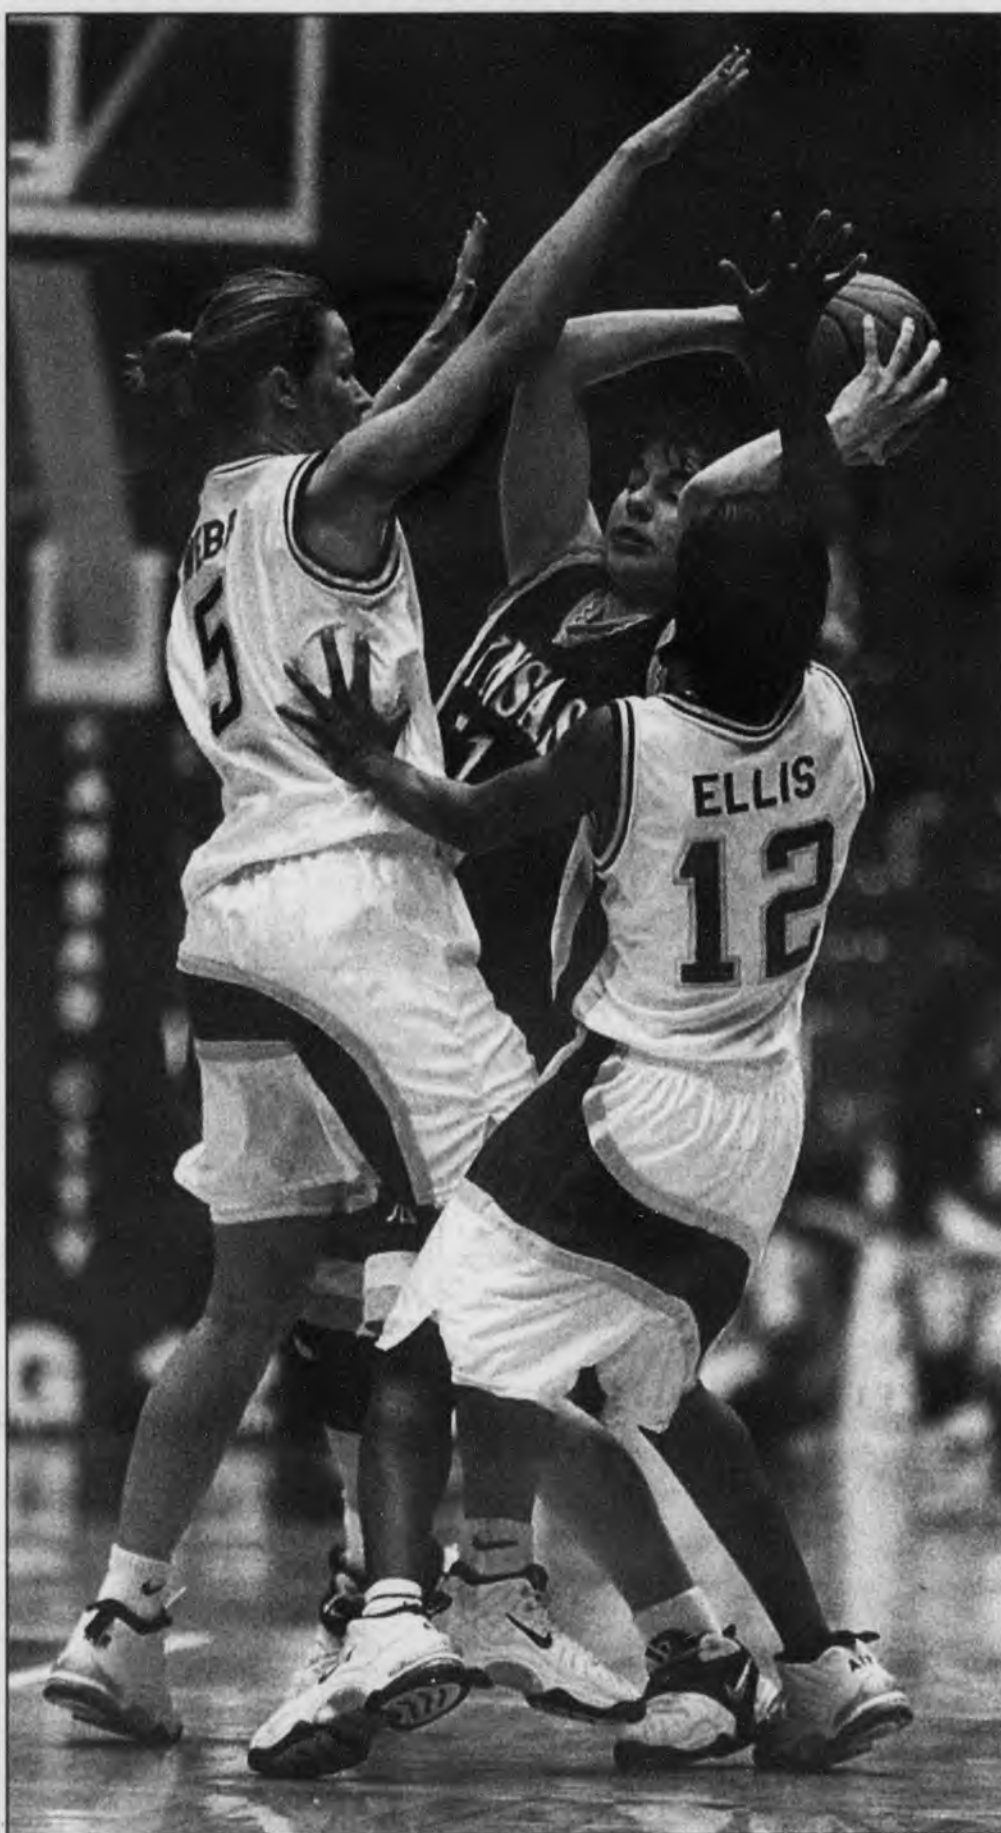

"We had Morgen (Finneran) go in and step up," Jacobson said. "Maybe in other games we haven't felt like other players can go in then and step up, but this game it felt good. It was fun."

In overtime, things clicked for the Cats under the basket and on the free-throw line. Ramage was again perfect from the field and the free-throw line, and Finkes added six overtime points.

Finneran hit two free shots to seal the victory.

The Cats move to round two to face the Kansas Jayhawks at 8:20 tonight. Patterson said the team's not reliving feelings of last year's climb to the championship game.

"I'm feeling terrific about the way we're playing right now," she said. "It's more a feeling of happiness of having an opportunity to line it up again."

Sophomores step up in Wildcats' 1st-round victory over Baylor

► The Cats continue their run through the Big 12 Conference Tournament at 8:20 tonight against Kansas in Kansas City, Mo.

DAN MERKER Kansas State Collegian

Strong inside play led the K-State women's basketball team to a first-round win in the Big 12 Tournament on Tuesday night, as the Wildcats pulled out a 75-66 overtime victory over the Baylor Lady Bears.

Forward Nicky Ramage started for only the sixth time all season and responded with the best game of her career, pouring in a career-high 27 points and adding 10 rebounds, also a career high. She shot 11-of-13 from the field and five-of-eight from the free-throw line in what she called her best game of the season.

Not to be outdone, center Angie Finkes, the Cats' leading scorer, matched Ramage's mark with 27 points, a career high for her. She also added 10 boards to complement Ramage on the inside.

Much of the Cats' success inside was attributed to lob passes by the guards. Baylor center Kacy Moffitt tried to prevent the Cats' post players from catching the ball by fronting them, but without help underneath. This tactic proved not to work.

K-State used that to its advantage, scoring six of its first eight points off this defensive tactic.

"At the beginning of the game, they didn't have any help-side (defense)," Finkes said. "I was a little surprised they didn't have a little help-side."

Ramage stepped up time and again for the Cats, with 19 of her points coming after halftime. It seemed every time K-State needed a basket, Ramage responded. She scored the Cats' first points of overtime and grabbed a crucial rebound on the defensive end with K-State up by six to ensure a victory.

But the game nearly soured for Ramage near the end of regulation. Her second and last missed field goal of the game came with less than 10 sec-

K-State broke the Baylor press, and Ramage had a free path to the basket.

She put up a shot from in close, but the shot, which just as easily could have fallen into the basket, rolled off the front rim. Moffitt grabbed the rebound and Ramage was called for an over-the-back foul with 7.9 seconds left, resulting in a one-and-one.

Moffitt missed the front end, which gave the Cats another life and allowed for heroics from Finkes and Ramage.

"This was a great step for our program and our team to see these two young ladies assert themselves possession after possession," K-State coach Deb Patterson said. "For two sophomores to step on the floor and dominate the paint as they did on the offensive end of the floor for us bodes very well for their future and the future of this program."

THIS WAS A GREAT STEP FOR OUR PROGRAM AND OUR TEAM TO SEE THESE TWO YOUNG LADIES ASSERT THEMSELVES POSSESSION AFTER POSSESSION. DEB PATTERSON

A moment of silence for part of Bobby Knight that once was great

Robert Montgomery Knight, 1960-1994: a eulogy.

There once lived a great college basketball coach. He was the only man ever to play in three national championship games and coach in three as well. He coached his teams to 11 Big Ten championships, five Final Four appearances and three NCAA championships. He was named Big Ten Coach of the Year six times, and he earned National Coach of the Year honors four times. He even won an Olympic gold medal.

In his first 26 years of coaching the men's basketball teams at Army and Indiana University, he amassed more victories than you can throw a chair at. He engineered the last undefeated season we'll probably ever see. He was by far the best X's-and-O's coach in the history of college hoops.

But now he's gone.

Sure, Knight continues to prowls the sidelines at Indiana. He's probably preparing the Hoosiers for their first-ever Big Ten Tournament game this very moment. Bob Knight, the man, is very much alive, but the greatness has long since passed. Since being reported missing after an 80-61 drubbing of Kansas on Dec. 18, 1994, Hoosier fans have finally accepted that the coach they once knew will never return.

Forget about the tirades. Forget about how he cussed at his players. Forget about the way he belittled the press. Forget about that security guard at the Pan American Games he beat up and stuffed in a trash can.

OK, maybe don't forget about that. All the morass and boorishness were part of his genius. He always scored a D-minus on the personality test, but history will place him up with John Wooden and Adolph Rupp.

Now is the time to remember how he used to extract every ounce of ability from his players, how he could mold a handful of talentless Indiana farm boys with three-inch vertical leaps into All-Americans, how he'd win a national championship with players who would never start an NBA game in a million years. Let's remember those things, because they're ancient history now.

Since 1994, Knight has managed to turn top prospects into dreadful underachievers. Just look at this year's seniors. Andrae Patterson, who was the No. 2-rated high school player behind Raef LaFrentz in 1994 and once torched Duke for 39 points in a game, is averaging only 10.9 points this year. Charlie Miller, named Florida's Mr. Basketball after averaging 33 points in his senior season, now averages a mere 3.7 points. Richard Mandeville and Rob Eggers round out the senior class with averages of 1.3 and 0.9, respectively.

Oh, but remember how Knight used to graduate all of his players. Remember that only two Hoosiers — Isaiah Thomas and Jay Edwards — have ever left IU early for the NBA. Remember Knight's incomprehensible 98-percent graduation rate, because it's gone as well.

In the past four seasons alone, 10 Indiana players have bolted Bloomington. They could erect a memorial for all the players Knight has scared away. Rob Foster, Steve Hart, Sherron Wilkerson, Neil Reid, Michael Hermon, Rob Hodgson, Lou Moore, Chris Rowles, Jean Paul and Jason Collier have all departed prematurely since 1994.

Mathematically speaking, that's the worst graduation rate since the Class of '93 at Topeka High School.

Remember the later success of Knight players, such as Thomas, Quinn Buckner and Mike Krzyzewski, because few of his recent graduates enjoy rewarding careers. (Damon Bailey, anyone?) Remember the last Big Ten title in 1993, the last Final Four in 1992 and the last national championship in 1987.

And most of all, remember his stellar NCAA Tournament record. Remember his 40 tournament wins. Remember them fondly, because there haven't been any since 1994. Since then, Knight has failed to so much as squash a grape at the Big Dance. Don't expect him to get any further this year.

For the last four seasons, Knight's soul has been wandering the Hoosier bench aimlessly. Only on rare occasions has his once-brilliant coaching shown signs of vitality. For the first time in his life, the general's loyal army is even beginning to wane.

No, he's not actually dead. He's not even sick, despite what the perpetual, boiling-red hue of his face might lead you to believe. In fact, at 57, Knight is still pretty young — considering what a dinosaur he is.

New restaurants to spice up Manhattan

► THREE RESTAURANTS TO OFFER NEW OPTIONS FOR DINING OUT IN CITY.

AMANDA FINGER
Kansas State Collegian

Three new restaurants are joining the Manhattan business community.

Mi Casita Mexican Restaurant was scheduled to open Monday. Chili's Grill and Bar and Schlotzsky's Deli are set to open later this year.

Chili's Grill and Bar is expected to open in late June. Andy Carlson, general manager of Manhattan Town Center, said the restaurant will be in the solitary building along Fort Riley Boulevard in the mall's southeast parking lot.

Chili's is part of Brinker International, which owns nine dining concepts including Romano's Macaroni Grill and On The Border Mexican Cafe. There are 560 Chili's locations across the United States and in 10 other countries.

Dave Uphoff, who will be managing partner of Chili's, said he expects the business to do well. Uphoff said he is excited to come to Manhattan.

"Our food is excellent. We have a great variety to fit anyone's needs," he said.

Menu items range from Tex-Mex foods to a variety of salads, steaks, hamburgers and some Mexican dishes.

Schlotzsky's Deli, originally scheduled to open in late 1997, is expected to open in the beginning of next month.

Brad Claussen, Manhattan's city building official, said construction will be delayed because the company had to redraw the building plans. But he said it has devised a new floor layout.

"We are in the process of reviewing the plans now," Claussen said.

The deli will be in the former Burger King building at 301 Poyntz Ave.

Schlotzsky's Deli serves 15 kinds of sandwiches, 12 pizza styles and home-style soups and salads.

Mi Casita Mexican Restaurant will bring the same tastes of El Cazador Authentic Mexican Food & Cantina, which is already on Manhattan's west side.

Santiago Palemino, manager of El Cazador's and Mi Casita, said the new restaurant will serve an array of Mexican entrees.

Amarillo Mesquite Grill adds Southwest flavor

AMANDA FINGER
Kansas State Collegian

Now in its third week of business, Amarillo Mesquite Grill, a southwest steakhouse, opened its doors Feb. 11, adding a new flavor to Manhattan's restaurant scene.

Brian Bick, manager up front of the restaurant, said it had a good first week, with the help of Valentine's Day, bringing in close to $50,000 in only five days. This amount does not include the free VIP dinners the restaurant provided Feb. 9 and 10.

"We have been very well-received by Manhattan," general manager Robin Grenko said.

Grenko said there were several reasons Manhattan was chosen as a site for Amarillo Mesquite Grill.

One of the reasons was it wanted to stay within Kansas, and there weren't that many restaurants in Manhattan.

There are seven restaurant locations in Kansas and five in Oklahoma, Arkansas and Missouri.

The presence of K-State was a factor in the location decision because of

"WE HAVE BEEN VERY WELL-RECEIVED BY MANHATTAN."

ROBIN GRENGO
general manager

the good employment rate among college students.

Another important reason was the restaurant received a good deal on the lot.

The building has a seating capacity of 170 people, but the restaurant's bar adds close to 30 more seats, Bick said.

Restaurant hours are 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. Friday and Saturday, and 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. Sunday.

Anthrax vaccinations to be given to American troops, officials in Iraq ► U.S. GOVERNMENT AIMS TO PROTECT AMERICANS BY ANTHRAX IMMUNIZATIONS.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Vaccinating America's 36,000 troops in the Persian Gulf against anthrax is a prudent action to protect them in the event of an Iraqi attack, Defense Secretary William Cohen said Tuesday.

Gen. Anthony Zinni, the commander in the Gulf region, requested the move because Iraq is known to have developed the biological agent and put it on weapons, Pentagon officials said.

All 1.4 million U.S. military women and men in uniform, as well as the 1 million who are in the reserves, will get the mandatory vaccinations in the coming months.

Civilians working for the Pentagon in the Gulf also will get the inoculations, officials said.

The immunization program consists of a series of six shots for each service member in an 18-month period, followed by an annual booster.

Both Cohen and Gen. Henry H. Shelton, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, have started the vaccination program by getting their shots, a Pentagon statement said.

Lt. Gen. Ronald Blanck, the Army's surgeon general, said anthrax is a disease normally associated with animals such as sheep or goats, but it can be used as a weapon when spores are released into the air and people breathe it into their lungs.

Once a victim develops symptoms, the disease is fatal in more than 95 percent of cases and death usually occurs in two to three days, Blanck said.

The vaccine used by the military was licensed by the Food and Drug Administration in 1970, Blanck said.

The vaccine was given to more than one-quarter of U.S. forces who served in the 1991 Persian Gulf War.

Blanck said several studies done by scientific groups working outside the Pentagon found no evidence linking the anthrax vaccine to the illnesses suffered by Gulf War veterans.

Since the Gulf War, the Pentagon was criticized for lacking a good record-keeping system that tracked the medical care received by the military.

In light of that, Blanck said Cohen insisted the new program not move forward until a computerized tracking system was in place to monitor those who received the vaccinations and an education program was mounted to inform service members about the vaccine.

Appearance concerns may cause health problems

SHELLY SLATIER
Kansas State Collegian

Students change their bodies in numerous ways because they are never really happy with them, said Reita Currie, registered nurse and health educator at Lafene Health Center.

Currie discussed health-care issues with a group of 10 students Tuesday night in Derby Food Center. She said she noticed students are more concerned with the way they look this time of year because of spring break.

"A lot of times I find students want to change their weight before spring break," Currie said, "and they don't realize that this can lead to eating disorders and even death."

She said the average clothing size women wear in the United States is 12 to 14, but people think they are too big because models wear smaller sizes.

"Although we see stores with small-sized models, I think now we have more resources to find stores with larger clothes," Currie said. "I think we've gotten carried away with our body images."

She said students need to acknowledge the effect of advertising on self-image and realize advertising plays with emotions as well as wanting people to try to change their looks.

"Media ads and even loved ones are telling us what we should look like," she said, "and we are fighting a losing battle when we look at the media and then our bodies."

Currie said more than $300 million a year is spent solely on diet products. She said anyone who has tried to lose weight knows it's not easy.

"People go to extreme measures to change the way they look," Currie said.

"These innocent little things people do can propel to bigger problems such as eating disorders."

She said 18 percent of all college students have an eating disorder, and they occur in women and men. Currie said students should talk to a dietitian if they are unhappy about their weight.

"If you need to change your weight, talk to a dietitian in Lafene and find out a healthy way to change your eating patterns," she said.

Currie said weight loss is like a merry-go-round, and it's a behavior change that takes some time to get used to.

She said tanning is also a big concern this time of year.

"I'm not here to bash tanning salons, but do take precautions because UVA rays can cause cancer," Currie said. "There are risks to exposing yourself to the sun, and everyone needs to use common sense."

She said to decrease chances of skin cancer, people should avoid the sun between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., keep skin covered, be cautious of cloudy skies, don't assume wet clothes will protect skin, wear sunglasses, wear hats and avoid artificial tanning.

"Check your skin regularly for changes in moles," Currie said. "If you notice ragged edges, change in color or texture, report it to a doctor."

She said more than a million cases of skin cancer are reported each year. Currie said if students choose to tan indoors, they should go to a reputable salon approved by the Food and Drug Administration.

"I want everyone to have a happy and fun spring break," she said, "but I also want everyone to accept themselves as the healthy, happy, beautiful human beings that you are."

"Four Centuries of Women Composers" will highlight the accomplishments of women as composers at 8 tonight in All Faiths Chapel. The concert will benefit the Women's Studies Scholarship and Awards Program.

"We've tried to achieve a balance of historical periods, including baroque and some early harpsichord," Cora Cooper, associate professor of music, said.

The work of artists Amy Cheney Beach, Rebecca Clarke, Elisabeth-Claude Jacquet de la Guerre, Adeline Shepard, Clara Schumann and Irene Giblyn, among others, will be included.

The choice of pieces and composers depended more on the musicians involved with the concert than necessarily representing the broadest selection of pieces available, Cooper said.

"It was merely a question of who was performing and what pieces would work for what instruments," she said.

Some pieces were selected because musicians specifically like them, and others have been specially written for this benefit.

"We knew that the Rebecca Clarke sonata was a very beautiful piece, so it was included. Laurel Littrell wrote a fanfare that is composed for a trumpet ensemble, called 'Shattering the Glass Ceiling: A Fanfare for Women on the Rise,'" Cooper said.

Faculty members, students and special guests will be performing the selected works.

The concert will include only women composers in an effort to introduce these women to those who have no experience with their work.

Cooper also said the benefit concert is not trying to place undue emphasis on women.

"If we find neglected pieces out there, we would like them to gain exposure. Hopefully someday it won't be a matter of a composer being a man or woman," Cooper said.

The proceeds of the concert will go toward a fund for scholarships or help in buying books and other needs for women.

"Single mothers lose welfare benefits for choosing to go to a university instead of a vocational school, so these scholarships could be a great help to many of them," Cooper said.

The concert is free, but any donations will be directed toward this fund.

A silent auction, also in All Faiths, will precede the concert, beginning at 7 p.m. Among items to be auctioned off are prints by artist James Munce.

Benefit concert to highlight centuries of work of women composers

DIANA LEE

Four hundred years of women composers, who have been traditionally overlooked among the musical greats, will be showcased in tonight's benefit concert in All Faiths Chapel.

"Historically, music was an amateur vocation for women. They were expected to have some musical skills in the 18th and 19th centuries, but only for entertaining at parties," Cora Cooper, associate professor of music, said.

During the Victorian period, it was not considered ladylike to be professionally interested in music or composition, so little of the women's work was disseminated or taken seriously, Cooper said.

Some of the more well-known composers, such as Clara Schumann, did have some of their work published, although in Schumann's case it might have helped that she was married to Robert Schumann, also a composer.

"Clara Schumann, who was married to Robert Schumann, is one of the more well-known women composers. They had some of their works jointly published, and he was supportive of her work," Cooper said.

There was also a trend toward keeping women from learning how to be composers until a fairly recent time.

"Prejudice towards women actually studying composition has traditionally been a problem. The first woman to receive her doctorate did so in the seventies," Cooper said.

There is hope that the benefit concert will help educate people about these composers and their accomplishments.

"It's a shame that it has to be done, but we're trying to educate people about who and what's out there," Cooper said.

Students gain concert experience

KATELYN COLEMAN, A KINDERGARTNER FROM BLUEMONT SCHOOL, PRETENDED TO PLAY THE ORGAN WHILE LISTENING TO THE YOUNG AUDIENCE CONCERT TUESDAY MORNING IN ALL FAITHS CHAPEL. MARY ELLEN SUTTON, PROFESSOR OF MUSIC, PERFORMED FOR THE CHILDREN.

STORY BY MARY RENEE SMITH • PHOTO BY JILL JARSULIC

Wiggling feet and the sounds of Bach filled All Faiths Chapel Tuesday morning as first and second graders listened to an organ performance as part of the Young People's Concert program.

Mary Ellen Sutton, professor of music, performed traditional and modern classical music for the children on the pipe organ. Sutton said the concerts are a wonderful learning experience for the children even if they don't express it verbally.

"They learn how to behave in concerts," she said. "It also gives them exposure to literature that you listen to."

Mary Ellen Titus, coordinator of the Young People's Concerts, said the concerts are in their 14th year. She said the program is important for children.

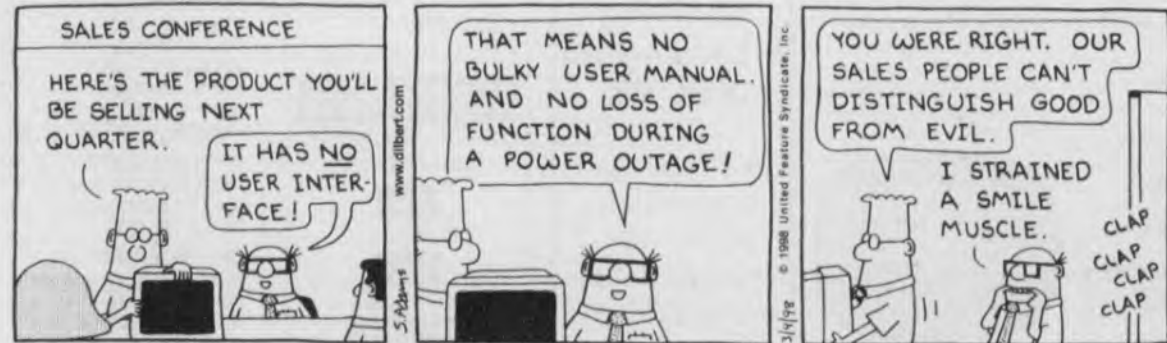

"They need this because for most of these children this is the only formal concert they'll ever go to," she said.

Titus said she coordinates not only the performers but transportation for the children to and from the elementary schools. The concert series is made possible by Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, Manhattan Center for the Arts and the K-State Department of Music.

"This wouldn't happen without them," Titus said.

The next concert will be March 19 for second and third graders, and the K-State percussion ensemble will be performing. Another concert for first and second graders is April 15 with the KSU Jazz Ensemble. An organ performance for second and third graders on May 1 will complete the spring program.

California band Hepcat does it again, produces another fantastic ska album

PHIL KELLUM
Kansas State Collegian

With its new album, Los Angeles' Hepcat has secured itself a spot at the top of the ska heap.

Simply put, these nine cats are the best contemporary ska band working today. Each album Hepcat has put out has been fantastic, with its debut album, "Out Of Nowhere," being the best. But the new one, titled "Right On Time," comes close to knocking "Out Of Nowhere" from the top.

Unlike most bands that call themselves ska in the '90s, Hepcat pays full respect to the roots of the music.

Traditional ska? You bet. Smooth and sweet? You know it.

The album kicks off with co-lead vocalist Greg Lee's father leaving an answering machine message telling his son how great this album is.

"I Can't Wait" originally appeared on the Helcat "Give 'Em The Boot" compilation and is an ultra-smooth ska tune with a heavy Latin influence. It features the absolutely wonderful three-part harmonies between Lee and co-vocalists Alex Desert and keyboardist/vocalist Deston Berry. It's a bittersweet love song with a chorus of, "Baby, if I cause you pain, why don't you go his way?"

Desert tackles the lead vocals on "Goodbye Street" with his deeper, almost baritone style. It's a beautiful love song perfect for slow dancing with that special someone.

"The Secret" appeared in an earlier version on "Out Of Nowhere." It's got a bit of a dub influence and sound to it, especially in the bass sound. Dare I say it sounds fuller than the original?

Hepcat also does some killer instrumental tracks as well, such as "Pharaoh's Dreams," which harkens back to the days of Studio One and Jamaica. Listening to it, I can just picture Desert and Lee cutting loose and dancing across the stage as only they can. They are dancing kings.

The chorus on "No Worries" will stick in your head all day. The song itself is a big, brassy, swingy tune that is one of the best songs on the album.

Hepcat also covers the classic rude-boy reggae song, "Rudies All Around" by Joe White and even tosses in a bit of "Underneath The Mango Tree" from the James Bond film "Dr. No."

"Tommy's Song" is a big-sounding instrumental track in the vein of The Skatalites. Maybe it's for Skatalites leader Tommy McCook.

"Nigel" is the second song on "Right On Time" that appeared in an earlier version somewhere else. It was originally on Hepcat's ultra-rare debut seven-inch single. It's a track all about the king rude boy in Jamaica and features Desert going off on lead vocals.

Berry takes over lead vocals on "Together Someday." The harmonies on this one sound very doo-wop-influenced. Not a bad thing at all.

The last listed track is Desert's reply to Jeff "King Django" Baker with "Open Season ... Is Closed." The Stubborn All-Stars recorded a song in 1995 called "Open Season," where Baker boasted that he was the boss ska DJ and how he was better than any other ska vocalist.

Desert replies on this track that he, in fact, is the king DJ. The whole battle is in the tradition of Jamaican DJ battles back in the '60s. It's all in fun, or is it?

Baker said he was "a lyrics mountain," and Desert said, "You may think you're a lyrics mountain, but to me it's just a molehill." It's a great song with very cool falsetto back-up vocals.

Rumor has it that Desert spent more time on this track than on any other one on the Compact Disc.

There's even an unlisted track on the CD at 3:08 on track 14. It's a dub mix of "The Secret" that is just awesome. The echoing, deep bass line kills me every time.

Hepcat's "Right On Time" most definitely gets five stars. These boys can do no wrong in my book.

Don't forget to go check out Hepcat appearing at the Bottleneck in Lawrence as they make a stop with the Helcat tour, along with The Slackers, from New York City; and The Gadjits, from Lakewood. Doors open at 6 p.m., and tickets are $10.

It could be the ska show of the year.

K-State ranked among lowest in tenured faculty salaries

pared to their peers for the last 70 years," Coffman said.

The university is doing what it can to raise salaries, Coffman said. The Kansas Board of Regents is working with the Kansas Legislature to enhance salary packages, Coffman said. At the moment, that is tied to seeing what the House of Representative Select Committee comes up with, he said.

Kansas universities have a history of being underfunded, so it will take a lot of work to convince the state Legislature to appropriate more funds for faculty salaries, Coffman said.

"This absolutely has to be solved to have Kansas State competitive 20 years from now," he said.

In the meantime, the university is attempting to keep qualified individuals from leaving K-State.

"In instances of specifically high-productivity people who are at greater risk of being recruited away, we are making specific efforts to address their salary situation, but that's a Band-Aid type approach. What we absolutely have to do is make a major move in the average salary," Coffman said.

Coffman said K-State is hiring competitively.

"We've hired really key people in a very competitive way. One way we've done that is to hire assistant professors at very competitive salaries. By the time they're tenured is when we're at real risk to have them hired away," Coffman said.

Coffman compared those tenured professors to the cream of the crop. He said once they are promoted to full professor they have gained a great deal of experience and are attractive to other universities. K-State has trouble offering competitive salaries to experienced professors being recruited by other institutions.

Philip Clark, assistant professor of philosophy, came to K-State last fall. He and his wife, also in the philosophy department, were able to find jobs together.

"We had to find work together. She was a real find for K-State, someone they wouldn't have normally been able to hire. K-State, as I've heard, has a policy of hiring people as couples and also people who are likely to stay," Clark said.

Clark said that although K-State doesn't pay well, money is not the only thing faculty members are looking for.

"If you're in academics it means that you didn't cash in your academic ability, so you've got a group of people who probably weigh other things more heavily," he said.

Low pay might not be the only reason the university is losing qualified professors, Clark said.

"It isn't so much the salary as a lot of other things about the professional department that might drive people away. For example, the philosophy department doesn't have a grad program," he said.

No graduate program means faculty do not have the opportunity to teach higher-level classes or use graduate teaching assistants.

Students, faculty consider how well Senate make-up represents campus

who you live with," he said.

On the other hand, Dougan said K-State's system has been this way for at least 10 years and is the fairest representation.

"I think we can reach more people that way. No one's really been able to convince anyone there's a problem with the way we do things now," he said.

Senate adviser Gayle Spencer said she thinks representation by college has served the students well, even though there might be more greek senators than senators from other living groups.

Regarding an issue that might pertain to a certain living group, such as campus safety, Spencer said it is the responsibility of the constituents to let their senators know how they stand.

"That's up to ARH to come to maybe the appropriate Student Senate committee and let people know that the issue exists for their students," she said.

Schaaf said in a perfect world senators would research every idea thoroughly but it doesn't always happen that way.

"It needs to happen. It is a responsibility of every senator to research the issue. If you move to a living-group type of arrangement, you are going to lose a representative of that specific college," he said.

He said this doesn't mean you lose representation of the issue involved.

"Senators still need to take the initiative to go out and do research," he said.

No one has actual numbers on greek, off-campus or on-campus representation in Senate.

Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said a survey taken a couple of years ago showed greeks composed 20 percent of the undergraduate student population but had 65 percent of the campus leadership positions in all organizations.

"But we've not replicated that study for a few years now. We just don't pay any attention to their affiliation," she said.

Dougan said a demographic survey of living arrangements hasn't been made for Student Senate.

"We're here as students first, not as greek or non-greek."

Student elections plagued by lack of candidates

NATE JENKINS
Kansas State Collegian

When student voters look at their ballots during next week's Student Governing Association elections, they will see more blank lines than usual.

A shortage of candidates for several boards, college councils and Student Senate means write-in votes will decide many of this year's student leaders.

Union Governing Board has no candidates on the ballot for its four open spots, and Fine Arts Council faces the same predicament. It has two, one-year student terms available, but no candidates.

UGB and the Fine Arts Council aren't alone in their search for motivated students to fill positions.

From the College of Agriculture to the College of Veterinary Medicine, many positions will have to be filled by write-in candidates. In Student Senate, a total of 19 seats — nearly one-third of the body — have no official candidates.

Write-in candidates nominated for college councils are contacted and selected for remaining positions by elected council members. College council members also contact write-in nominees and recommend them for Senate seats.

Jonathan Kulaga, assistant dean of student life, said there might be several reasons for the shortage of candidates.

"I don't know if there is a lack of student interest or if there are just so many options for students to get involved on campus and they can't give the phenomenal time commitment it requires," Kulaga said.

"Maybe it was the coverage of the Student Publications and Ron Johnson situation that poisoned the well, or the reaming of Tim Riemann in the Collegian, but that's speculation," he said.

Kathleen Copple, graduate assistant in the Office of Student Activities and Services, said this year's shortage of candidates is the largest she's seen.

"We've never had so many colleges with this many write-in spots. It's definitely up," Copple said. "The College of Arts and Sciences usually has a full list of candidates, but not this year."

There are 18 open positions on Arts and Sciences College Council and eight people on the ballot to fill them. It's the job of voters and the eight new council members to fill the other 10 spots.

The College of Human Ecology is faced with the biggest shortage of candidates. There are five candidates for 16 openings on the college's council. Human ecology is also allotted four spots on Student Senate; there are three candidates.

The College of Business Administration has the largest candidate pool and is the only college with more candidates than open positions. There are 19 people available for 15 council seats and 12 candidates for eight Senate seats.

Cherle Hodgson, faculty adviser for the Business Administration College Council, said the college's emphasis on student participation combined with the type of education business students are looking for plays a part.

"We stress involvement in activities and clubs inside and outside the college because it enhances students' skills," Hodgson said. "In the business world you have to work well with people, and involvement in student government provides leadership skills."

Freshman struck by automobile, injured in campus crosswalk

COLLEGIAN STAFF

At 10:44 p.m. Wednesday, an accident was reported near the intersection of Platt Street and Denison Avenue.

Mindy Hines, 19, a freshman in music from Topeka, was transported to Mercy Health Center on College Avenue for medical treatment after she was struck by a car at the crosswalk on Denison west of Durland Hall.

Hines was transported to Mercy for medical treatment. The press release also stated that "preliminary reports indicate she received lacerations to the facial area and a fracture to her right leg."

At press time, a hospital spokeswoman said an accident victim had been admitted to Mercy, but would not release her name or condition.

The driver of the vehicle, Ashlie Huston, sophomore in pre-business, was given citations for failure to yield right of way to a pedestrian in a crosswalk. Huston and her passengers were reportedly uninjured.

Jenny Krumwiede, senior in nutrition and exercise science, 1800 Platt St., reported the accident to RCPD when she said her roommate heard the accident and told her to call the police.

Though she said the accident sounded loud enough to be a car collision, she said a woman appeared to have been hit by a car.

"It was a pretty hard hit," she said. "The car window was pretty shattered."

She said the woman did not move or get up the entire time the accident was being handled by police, but she appeared to be conscious the whole time.

"She was hurt really bad," Krumwiede said. "There was a question about whether she broke her neck or not."

Bill Burns, junior in finance, said he saw the accident scene on his way home from Durland Hall.

He said the crosswalk is not well-lit and that pedestrians would be hard to see.

"It's not a surprise that somebody got hit," he said.

Fast-food franchises, other Union changes could boost earnings

KELLEE MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

The K-State Student Union is the host to the campus, with 17,000 people visiting it each day. With an increase in commercialization in the works and a scheduled remodeling, the Union will experience a substantial facelift in the next few years.

Additions such as well-known fast food franchises, mall-type vending carts and Commerce Bank have raised the issue of whether the Union is gaining a mall-like atmosphere.

Patrick Carney, Union Governing Board president and co-chair of the Union enhancement committee, said he is 99-percent sure that internal changes in the Union will benefit the students.

"We came in with the mentality that the Union would not become like a mall," he said. "It will remain a center for student activities and student involvement."

Union Director Bernard Pitts said the Union's main roles on campus will remain the same. He said the Union has made adjustments in its service areas to better serve students and programs are consistent with the collegiate atmosphere and climate.

Pitts said the education program supporting student leadership and supervising positions will continue to build new skills for students. He also said the Union will remain committed to the community-type atmosphere in which students can access their needs.

"Our focal point is still true," Pitts said. "We are taking pressure off the need for student fee dollars."

Two surveys in the past five years had proven that the Union was not meeting the needs of students and there was a desire for competition by brand-name concepts, Carney said.

"For many years we maintained a monopolized type of control with no external

Presidential hopefuls gather for debate

Student body presidential candidates were put on the spot Wednesday night in a debate at Derby Food Center.

The debate, sponsored by the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, featured three-minute answers to a variety of questions.

The first panel of questions was given directly to a specific set of candidates. For instance, Tracey Mann, junior in political science and agricultural economics, and running mate Andy Macklin, junior in mechanical engineering, were asked the goal of their campaign ideas, which include improvements to advising and a parking permit for the Chester E.

Peters Recreation Complex.

"We have two major goals we would like to address," Mann said. "Our main goal is to try and save the students money and our second goal is to strive for academic excellence."

Presidential candidate Greg Davis, senior in management information systems and marketing, and vice presidential candidate Jim Boomer, senior in accounting, were asked to explain their slogan, "For the right reasons."

"Jim and I share the same leadership beliefs," Davis said. "We believe in a student voice and the student body."

Another question given to the panel was what each group of candidates' position would be on changing the representation of Student Senate to organize it by living organization and not by college.

"I don't think we as members of the Senate should be able to say, 'No, you can't run because we already have a certain number of those type of people,'" said presidential candidate Bret Glendening, senior in agricultural economics and

Conference showcases research projects, address water conversation problems

The 15th annual Water and the Future of Kansas Conference attracted people from varied backgrounds who were interested in issues involving Kansas water usage and water safety.

The purpose of Tuesday's conference was to provide information that would help the attendees, such as farmers and individuals with state agencies, with their water concerns, make them aware of the challenges of other water users and showcase some of the water-related research projects at K-State.

This year's conference theme was "Building Alliances."

Dan Rogers, conference chairman, said there has to be a consensus to accomplish any kind of goal, because finding a solution to one water problem might have a detrimental result in another area's water.

"You might be able to fix erosion from cropland by requiring the farmer to do no tillage, but if there's no tillage done, then the consequence is to control weeds you may have to spray more," said Rogers, extension agricultural engineer for Cooperative Extension Service.

"You can't legislate one thing without recognizing that there might be another effect, so it has to be considered all at once, and it takes a broad perspective to figure out what the optimal solution is," Rogers said.

This was the first year the conference had an international speaker. Harold Rudy, from the Ontario Soil and Crop Improvement Association, explained a farm plan implemented in Ontario, Canada, in which local farmers work together to address their water-related problems, such as tillage, cropping and manure management.

Rogers said K-State's Whole Farm Plan is similar to the farm plan in Ontario.

Other water-related topics included on-site waste water treatment, which, Rogers said, is a problem as the population is dispersed into the countryside. There was also a presentation by the Groundwater Guardian Program, which teaches people about the importance of groundwater and how it moves.

Various organizations and researchers set up poster board presentations, including Joel Basinger, graduate student in agronomy. Basinger has been working with a probe developed to monitor the moisture content in soil. Basinger said, depending on what the moisture content is, there will be more or less runoff of chemicals.

"Up until now, there's not been a good way to measure content next to the surface of the soil," Basinger said. "You can go down deep, but not close to the surface, and that's where all your runoff comes from, right at the top."

Basinger said he hopes to prove that the off-surface soil wetness should be a factor farmers consider when putting their chemicals down.

Professor to give all-university speech on similarities of U.S., Russian cultures

Russian professor Ada Baskina will be giving an all-university lecture at 3 p.m. today in the Big 12 Room of the K-State Student Union.

Baskina is a professor of journalism at Moscow State University and American University in Washington, D.C. She will be visiting K-State Tuesday through Friday and will be available to speak to classes and groups of faculty during that time.

Her lecture, "America and Russia: Similarities and Differences of Two Cultures in Everyday Life," is sponsored by the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications at K-State.

Baskina worked with the director of the school, Todd Simon, at Michigan State where she taught journalism, women's studies and sociology.

Simon was unavailable for comment, but according to K-State News Services, Simon said Baskina will provide an interesting perspective to the classes she will visit in the journalism and women's studies departments.

Baskina is doing research for her sixth book, tentatively titled "Social Life in the United States." She is also a columnist and has published numerous magazine and newspaper articles in both Russian and English.

For more information or to reserve time with Baskina, contact the journalism of school at 532-6890.

State Supreme Court to rule in previous sexual predator case in southeast Kansas

TOPEKA — The question of who should be told when a convicted rapist is released from prison and who is responsible for that notification was brought before the Kansas Supreme Court on Tuesday.

The case stems from the 1993 rape and murder of Stephanie Schmidt, a Pittsburg State University student, by a man she had worked with.

Schmidt's parents sued the restaurant where their daughter and the rapist, Donald Ray Gideon, had worked. They claimed restaurant managers should have checked Gideon's criminal history and warned the waitresses.

The parents also sued Gideon's parole officer saying he had the duty to notify Gideon's employer.

Crawford County District Court Judge Donald R. Noland had dismissed the claim against the restaurant, but ruled that the state had a duty to protect Schmidt.

The state and Schmidt's parents both appealed to the Supreme Court. Under normal handling, the court should have a ruling on April 17.

Parole officer Robert Schirk "put a wolf in sheep's clothing in that restaurant with no warning," attorney James Adler said Tuesday, arguing for the Schmidts.

The Kansas Department of Corrections had an unwritten policy at the time of the rape that required parole officers to assess whether a parolee could be a danger to anyone and notify those people.

The waitresses at Hamilton's restaurant were in direct contact with Gideon, and it would have been easy for Schirk to notify them, but he didn't, Adler said.

Schirk testified in a deposition that he knew it was highly likely that Gideon would rape again, but that he didn't notify the restaurant management because he didn't want Gideon to lose his job, Adler said.

But an attorney for the state argued that Gideon had been a model employee who hadn't attempted to date waitresses at Hamilton's since his release.

"There was no evidence that Stephanie Schmidt had been threatened or that she was afraid," Corrections Department attorney Lisa Mendoza said.

Restaurant owner Thomas Hamilton testified in a deposition that Gideon had lied in his employment application about his criminal past, and that he would not have hired Gideon had he known the man was a convicted rapist.

But Gideon later told Hamilton that he had spent time in prison for assault, and Hamilton should have checked his background then, the Schmidts' attorneys argued.

Gideon killed Schmidt three days before her 21st birthday after offering her a ride home from a bar. Gideon had been paroled less than a year earlier after serving 10 years for a 1982 rape and sodomy conviction.

He is now serving nearly 100 years in prison for Schmidt's June 30, 1993, slaying.

The case led to passage of a sexual predator law that is being copied in other states. It allows the state to commit sexual offenders to Larned Correctional Mental Health Center for treatment after they complete their prison sentences.

College of Business seeks accreditation

► COLLEGE ATTEMPTING TO STAY IN TOP ONE-FIFTH OF NATION'S PROGRAMS.

AMANDA DAVIDSON
Kansas State Collegian

In the entire country, only one-fifth of the business administration colleges can claim they are accredited.

"K-State can boast to be among that small percentage and working hard every year to keep their accreditation status," said Yar Ebadi, dean of the K-State College of Business Administration. "The students and faculty are very lucky to be a part of the business program. It's one of the best in the country."

Accreditation of the department means the college displays a high standard of quality that can only be given by earning the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business stamp of approval, Ebadi said. The AACSB is the premier accrediting agency for bachelor's, master's and doctoral degree programs in business administration.

The College of Business first became accredited in 1973 for the undergraduate and graduate programs.

Every 10 years an accredited school must be evaluated to determine if the high standards set by the AACSB are still being met, Ebadi said. Due to some changes made in the reaccreditation process, the College of Business is coming up for reaccreditation in 1999, which means this year is self-study year.

"The ninth year is a self-study year where faculty, department heads and myself review and create a written report for the AACSB," Ebadi said.

The self study covers such areas as the quality and quantity of students and faculty, quality of the curriculum, type of facilities, available technology, diversity issues and the international programs. The self study is submitted in June for a committee to review and raise additional questions before the reaccreditation. Maurice Stark is the coordinator for the self study but the department heads, the dean and other faculty gather the information and submit it to Stark.

During the 10th year, a committee assigned by AACSB, consisting of deans and senior faculty from other colleges of business around the country, come to K-State for three to four days to evaluate the quality of the business program.

The visitation committee then decides whether the College of Business deserves reaccreditation.

"My only concern is the increase in student enrollment," Ebadi said.

The AACSB requires an adequate faculty for each college, proportionate to its students. With the dramatic increase in enrollment — up 10 percent from last spring — the College of Business is lacking in faculty.

"When I decided my major and I was told that the college of business was accredited, I didn't think anything about it," Abby Levin, senior in management, said. "Now I understand the importance of graduating from an accredited institution. Employers really look for that."

K-State, the University of Kansas and Wichita State are the only colleges in Kansas that have accredited business programs. K-State is the only college in Kansas to have the accounting program separately accredited.

"The accounting department, along with everyone else, is working hard to keep the accreditation of the college because to lose it would be very damaging," said Finley Graves, head of the accounting department.

Ebadi said reaccreditation is an ongoing process.

"The reaccreditation process is continual and very important to the quality of education the students receive," Ebadi said. "I am confident we have the tools to earn reaccreditation."

JILL JARSULIC/

Candidates want student feedback

► MANN, MACKLIN WANT TO IMPROVE BOOK SWAP, REC COMPLEX PARKING.

ANDREW WIMMER
Kansas State Collegian

Basing their campaign on achievable goals, Tracey Mann and Andy Macklin said they hope to make a "K-Statement" with their administration if elected student body president and vice president.

Mann, junior in political science and agricultural economics, said his campaign focuses on three main issues that could be reasonably accomplished during a year in the president's seat.

The candidates said their first priority if elected would be to work toward creating a better advising program at K-State. Mann said the system is not broken, but it needs to be more consistent throughout the university.

"Our goal would be to reward those advisers who are doing a good job," Mann said, "and critique those who may not be meeting the students' needs."

Mann said he has a great adviser, but has heard from other students who feel the advising system has failed them.

"What we need to do is sit down with all the players — students, faculty and the administration — and find out what we can do to reform the system," he said. "For this to work, we need student feedback, both positive and negative."

Second, Mann and Macklin said they want to institute a book-swap program similar to the one in place at Michigan State University. The program would run on the university or Student Senate home page, allowing students to buy and sell books on the Internet.

"It will cut out the middle man," Macklin, junior in mechanical engineering, said. "Students will be able to buy books without the retail markup of the area bookstores."

The current book swap, on the second floor of the K-State Student Union, is not effective, partially because of the design and partially because it is unknown to a large percentage of the student body, Mann said. The candidates said their proposal, once up and running, would be self-supporting and would not cause an increase in student fees.

The third issue on Mann and Macklin's platform is the creation of a parking permit for the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. The permit would only be valid at the Rec Complex and would cost less than the permit required for regular campus parking. Students without campus parking permits can now park in a limited number of metered spaces provided at the Rec Complex or run the risk of getting a ticket.

"A Rec pass really makes a lot of sense," Mann said. "With a limited number of metered parking, students without parking passes are penalized for their healthy actions."

If elected, Mann and Macklin said they would be pro-active by leading the way on tough issues. The two said they would explore different avenues for Hale Library funding. Mann said all other avenues should be used before the creation of a student fee.

"There are a lot of options that have yet to be looked into," he said. "We haven't exhausted every other available venue, so we should not be asking the students to foot the bill."

Macklin agreed, and said student fees in general should only be used when other funding isn't available.

"A student fee should be asked for only as a last resort," he said. "Not the first option."

The candidates said they want to create a link between Student Governing Association and the student body.

"We want to let students know what we are doing," Mann said. "And at the same time we want to know what they expect from us. We will be very proactive to students' needs."

Mandates set frightening precedent for corporations

At an early morning meeting on Wednesday, the Board of Student Publications created an ad hoc committee to review and change its bylaws.

The board, composed of elected students and faculty appointments, should have an opportunity to change its own rules.

Student Publications Inc., which prints the Collegian, Royal Purple yearbook and campus directory, asked for a 15-percent decrease in its student fee this year. In a bill that Student Senate will debate tonight, Student Publications gets more than what it asks for — or deserves.

The bill, which takes effect July 1 if passed by Senate, mandates that the board change its bylaws. The changes would eliminate three positions on the board filled by Student Publications employees. It would also remove Todd Simon as chairman because he is also director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

If the board doesn't make the mandated changes by the July 1 deadline, it could presumably lose $318,000 in student fee money, forcing Student Publications into financial turmoil.

Senate should be able to make recommendations as to how the board should operate, but the current bill doesn't make recommendations. It mandates change, speeding a delicate process that was already under way.

The ad hoc committee will report to its board by April 5 with its recommendation. Using privilege fee legislation to further strong-arm the board is unethical and unnecessary.

A student service hangs in the balance at tonight's Senate meeting. If Senate passes the bill without an amendment, the future of a freely distributed campus newspaper is in jeopardy.

The bill could also set precedent for two other corporate boards on campus. Union Governing Board and Intercollegiate Athletic Council have the potential for similar situations and should be allowed to solve them on their own, without Senate mandates.

Senators should propose an amendment to the fee bill making changes to the board a recommendation, not a mandate. The ad hoc committee simply needs time to review, evaluate and rewrite bylaws to eliminate conflicts of interest.

Instead of working against the board, senators and Privilege Fee Committee members should communicate with Simon and other board members. An amendment to change the requirements to recommendations would allow the ad hoc committee time to work and accomplish its goals in everyone's best interest, including students who pay a privilege fee for Student Publications.

Earlier this year, Privilege Fee Committee members said they wanted open dialogue with Simon and board members about Student Publications. But committee members didn't communicate with Simon before they mandated change in the privilege fee bill — a mandate with incredible implications.

Board members are eager to correct problems that plague the board's bylaws. Senate shouldn't create more problems by hurrying the process.

Consider the BIGGER picture before voting in the SGA elections

Despite the viewpoints you've read the past several days, despite the Americana-swathed rhetoric you've been exposed to lately, voting in Student Governing Association's elections isn't that big a deal. The following is a voter's guide for those firmly anchored in reality.

Every candidate is alike. Isn't everyone at K-State just trying to get an education? We've all come here to expand our horizons by taking advantage of the modest sums the taxpayers of Kansas are willing to devote to higher education. We're all equals, right? So why should it matter who amongst us fills the slots? Isn't SGA just something some people do? As long as we end up with the correct number of warm bodies, right?

Vote for write-in candidate Mr. Ceteris Paribus. Last year around 10 percent of the entire student body voted in the SGA elections. The Collegian's editorial board dared to criticize the performance of the student body president who was elected by the few who did vote, and published several former student body presidents' assessments of his term in office. The opinions expressed were critical of his performance, and supporters including his vice-president and a cabinet member (what an example of nonpartisanship) rushed out of the woodwork to decry the foul deed, claiming bias and mistreatment.

When elected representatives can garner support like this, the process must be a success, right? One out of every five students voted; someone else will take care of that chore, right? Geez, two years ago, one out of every five students voted, and they elected a student body president who parlayed his experiences into a seat in the Kansas Legislature. He obviously didn't miss the remaining 80 percent of the student body, right?

Vote for write-in candidate Ms. Cui Bono.

Several student body presidential candidates have already admitted to having spent more on their campaigns than the $815 that was the previous limit, right? With students running for office with that sort of spare change lying around, why the fuss about an increase in a privilege fee?

Vote for write-in candidate Mr. Private Ambitions.

According to those involved with SGA, one of its best characteristics is the amount of time it consumes. When the process of making decisions is so lengthy, certainly the answers yielded are proper, right? This process limits participation to those students who are willing to dedicate themselves to such a time commitment, which is admirable, right?

Vote for write-in candidate Ms. Egalitarian.

This same time commitment allows members of SGA to center themselves around their SGA activities, right? By being elected to multiple positions, one might even avoid close contact with any student who's not a member of some SGA committee or another, after one's initial semester on campus.

Visualize with me this week's schedule (Ooh! A light week): two committee meetings, one regular session meeting and an impromptu get-together with fellow SGAers who are spending time in the Office of Student Activities and Services coming up with jargon and inside jokes. Spending so much time together allows one to forge strong lines of communication and socialize as well, right? The team that plays together stays together, right?

Vote for write-in candidate Ms. C.L. Ique.

Recently expressed attitudes have made it clear that SGA's job is not to decide issues, but rather, to provide a framework through which these questions can be brought to the student body. Since the student body will make all the really important decisions anyway, what's there to worry about?

Vote for Ms. A. Pathos.

If there's ever been a time, now is the time. Ask yourself before you take the time to vote in the SGA elections, "Who cares?"

Don't Vote March 9, 10 or 11. We'll all be happier that way.

Space exploration covers up problems that humans face

The moon came up empty. Mars was a no-go. Our next hope of life outside our own might lie on one of Jupiter's moons, Europa.

NASA's Galileo spacecraft beamed back images of Europa's icy surface during its fly-by on Dec. 16, 1997. These pictures point to the fact there might be liquid water beneath its crust. Slushy, partially melted regions were discovered that hint toward a possible ocean beneath the frozen surface. In this water, life might exist. Realistically, NASA does not expect the existence of intelligent life there, but maybe the beginnings of small life forms such as in our own oceans exist there.

More interesting than the possibility of extraterrestrial life is the need to believe we are not alone in the universe. Where does this need to believe come from? Countless movies, documentaries, sitcoms and magazine articles are dedicated to investigating the possibility of little green men with huge eyes. What is the fascination with another being that could teach us to solve all of Earth's problems? If they do exist, they probably have problems of their own and don't need our extra aid.

The reason people have fabricated the alien theory is because it scares us to think we are the only ones in the universe. If we are the only ones, then it is up to us to solve our own problems. It is much easier to believe in a special guiding force. It takes the control out of our own hands.

Galileo's images of Europa are exciting. Maybe life does exist in the oceans under the icy crust. However, why are we looking for life on other planets, when we have millions of species right here? Many species haven't been discovered yet on Earth, and our oceans have been left basically untouched by explorers.

The most shocking irony is that we search the solar system for different forms of life, but then drive our own species to extinction. Before we dedicate millions of dollars to other planets and moons, we need to get our own environment in order.

The grass is always greener on the other side. Somehow, I don't believe Mars, the moon or even Europa can compare to the world we have right here.

Ask around. Most people believe in life on other planets, particularly intelligent life. Has anyone really looked at why they believe? There is no confirmed evidence. Most people claim they never have seen a UFO. Where does this blind faith come from? Part of it has to do with the catch-all clause: The government covered it up. If the world needs a hero that bad, I can package something up to believe in and mark it "conspiracy."

Maybe there is life on other planets. Maybe Europa has the answers the world has been waiting for. Maybe the government has covered up previous alien evidence.

Until they find an alien that can pay my rent or pass my classes for me, I refuse to dwell on the idea of extraterrestrial life. I have much more important things to dream about. I am fine with the fact that we are the only ones in the universe. I don't need someone or something to believe in.

Let's focus on our own world. We have problems on Earth, but nothing that needs an alien to solve. We can do it alone. The money spent to search the solar system can feed many hungry people around the world. If we want to search for life, we have plenty here still undiscovered.

Until a spaceship lands in my yard, I will spend my time thinking of much more pressing issues.

Mann, Macklin guarantee to fulfill campaign promises, provide experience

VIEWPOINT

TRACEY MANN AND ANDY MACKLIN

It is important to realize that the fulfillment of campaign promises only scratches the surface of the duties of student body president and vice president.

The single most important duty of these two offices is the representation of student voice to faculty, administration and even the Kansas Board of Regents and other regents schools. While these offices do not require prior experience in student government or a knowledge of the general workings of student government, such experience is highly valuable in carrying out their duties.

Our ticket includes the experiences accumulated through serving as Senate Vice Chair, serving on several Student Senate committees and voting as members of Senate. We also have the knowledge and experience gained from residence hall, off-campus and greek living, and therefore feel we are sensitive to the needs of students from all three.

We have decided to run our campaign around ideas that are tangible and doable. Students have told us they don't care about all-encompassing, broad statements, even though such statements sound great. In response to this, out of the many ideas we have about next year, we are focusing on three main, tangible issues for the campaign. These are issues we can guarantee will get done.

We feel advising at K-State is somewhat inconsistent and would like to bring all colleges to the level a few have reached in providing comprehensive advising to students.

We believe that students need to be advised at all stages of their education, from indecisiveness as a freshman to making career choices as a senior.

We want to work with the students, faculty and administration from every college to gain feedback and suggestions, as well as reward good advising.

Another issue of our campaign is a book-swap system. Students consistently lose unnecessary amounts of money when they buy and sell their textbooks every semester, and we can change that. We are proposing a K-State book-swap system that will be a K-State Internet site at which students can type in their names and titles of books they need and be linked to students who are trying to sell those same books. By cutting out the middle man, the swap system will save students money.

The final idea that we have focused on is a Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex parking permit. With a $20 permit, students could park at the Rec Complex at all times of the day without paying the $60 for a campus wide pass. By allowing students to use the Rec Complex at all hours of the day, the permit will ease the heavy use during the evening hours and spread it throughout the day.

The permit will save students from having to compete with each other for the use of a meter, free students from having to use carpools, give them flexibility to use the Rec Complex at any time and save them money.

The Tracey Mann and Andy Macklin campaign guarantees enthusiasm, tangible issues, and most importantly, a wide variety of valuable campus experiences.

Discussion yields tips for safe drinking Cattleman's Day planned

SHELLY SLATER
Kansas State Collegian

The main objective of spring break is to have fun, and for most students that includes drinking alcohol, said the director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education services at University Counseling Services.

Director Bill Arck said it's OK to have fun, but there is a personal responsibility in how much a student chooses to drink. In a group discussion Wednesday at Derby Food Center, Arck gave students some things to think about when drinking.

"To be safe these days you have to control what you put into your system," he said.

Arck said there are a few party-smart tips that might keep students out of danger when drinking.

"When you walk into a party, especially when you don't know anybody, don't accept any drinks out of a punch bowl," he said. "You don't know what was put in it."

Another tip he gave was to stay away from drinking out of unmarked bottles and to not leave a drink unattended.

"If you are at a bar, just to be safe, have the bartender bring your beer to you and then you pop the top," Arck said.

He said the use of preoperative drugs such as rohypnol, or roofies, and gamma-hydroxybutyrate can easily be slipped into drinks. According to the Alcohol and Other Drug Education services in Lafene Health Center, roofies is a hypnotic-sedative drug that is 10 times stronger than Valium, and the sedation lasts from eight to 12 hours.

Side effects of roofies include drowsiness, headaches, memory impairment, nightmares and dizziness.

GHB has side effects that include drowsiness, dizziness and euphoria. Arck said roofies can show up in mixed drinks as a blue color, and in beer it will show up as a green or a murky brown color. GHB is usually odorless and tasteless but sometimes can be salty.

Another safe party tip Arck gave was to party with friends in a group and to preplan a safe ride home.

A yearly anonymous survey conducted by University Counseling Services reported 94 percent of K-State students drink and 81 percent drink and drive.

"You should never let a friend talk you into drinking and doing stupid stuff when your common sense tells you not to," Arck said. "You will eventually have to suffer the consequences."

Arck said there are many myths of drinking alcohol such as it helps people sleep better, is a sex stimulant and creates warmth.

"Alcohol is a (central nervous system) depressant that does not increase sex drive, and it also dilates blood vessels to create that warm feeling that goes away after a few minutes," he said.

YOU SHOULD NEVER LET A FRIEND TALK YOU INTO DRINKING AND DOING STUPID STUFF WHEN YOUR COMMON SENSE TELLS YOU NOT TO. YOU WILL EVENTUALLY HAVE TO SUFFER THE CONSEQUENCES.

Students interested in learning more about the beef industry should plan to attend the 85th annual Cattleman's Day on Friday.

The event will present the latest research in beef science being done at K-State. Twig Marston, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry, said the event has topics of interest for students as well as the Kansas cattlemen who attend.

"If students attend, they'd get stuff that will supplement any classes in beef science that they might be taking," Marston said. "If they have any term papers or other presentations, they can get really good information from the speakers."

K-State faculty will discuss topics such as irradiation of beef products and environmental concerns of lagoons and waste management.

Marston said the event is also a good opportunity for students to meet people in the industry.

"There are a lot of people from the beef industry that attend, and students that attend could make some great contacts for future jobs or internships," he said.

Another event for students to attend is the Special "K" Bull and Heifer Sale. More than 70 of K-State's stock will be sold in Weber Arena at the 4:30 p.m. auction.

Miles McKee, professor of animal sciences and industry, said the auction is open to everyone, and he encourages students to attend to see how an auction is run.

"The auction is a way for students to see how animals are sold if they haven't ever been to a livestock auction," he said.

McKee said the stock for sale is raised at K-State's Purebred Beef Barn, and the animals are known for their high quality.

"We need good animals to teach with, and so we do our best to produce the best stock."

"Then the sale is the avenue for us to market the stock we raise here," McKee said.

Sports Roundup is a daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports outside of K-State. Compiled from Associated Press reports.

Cincinnati signs former Cat to 3-year football contract

CINCINNATI — The Cincinnati Bengals on Wednesday signed former New York Giants cornerback Thomas Randolph, in a continuing off-season effort to strengthen their defense.

Randolph signed a three-year contract. Terms weren't disclosed.

On Tuesday, the Bengals signed former Pittsburgh Steelers linebacker Jerry Olsavsky to a two-year deal. Randolph and Olsavsky are considered to be likely starters for Cincinnati.

Last month the Bengals signed Michael Bankston, a defensive end from the Arizona Cardinals, to a three-year deal.

Randolph was the Giants' second-round draft choice in 1994 from K-State, and had played the past four seasons for New York, including 32 starts.

He started four games last season and finished with 34 tackles and one interception.

WOMEN'S NCAA HOOPS

No. 6 Texas Tech 80, Colorado 49

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Angie Brazziel scored a 23 points and grabbed 12 rebounds Wednesday as No. 6 Texas Tech rolled past Colorado 80-49 in the second round of the Big 12 Women's Basketball Tournament.

Brazziel, teamed in with All-American candidate Alicia Thompson, dominated the Buffaloes (23-4) on offense and defense. Thompson had 21 points and five rebounds. Colorado (12-16) led early.

With the game tied at 13, the Buffaloes missed nine out of their next 10 shots and committed six turnovers as the Lady Raiders went on a 25-4 run over the next nine minutes.

Texas Tech led at halftime, 46-30.

Colorado then scored just two points over a seven-minute span. The Lady Raiders kept the 1997 conference tournament champions to 19 second-half points, and just six in the final 11 minutes.

Kami Carmann led Colorado with 12 points and La Shena Graham had 10.

Tech, which received a first round bye as the tourney's top seed, plays in Thursday's semifinals at Municipal Auditorium.

No. 22 Iowa State 88, Texas A&M 68

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jayme Olson poured in 21 points from the inside and Stacy Frese added 21 from the outside as No. 22 Iowa State beat Texas A&M 88-68 on Wednesday in the Big 12 Conference tournament quarterfinals.

Olson made nine-of-18 shots from the floor, while Frese hit five three-pointers to lead the Cyclones (24-6) into the tournament semifinals on Thursday.

Iowa State kept the Aggies to 38-percent shooting in the first half to take a 47-34 half-time lead. But the Cyclones didn't put the game away until an 11-2 run late in the game.

Texas A&M (9-19) was led by Kera Alexander with 20 points and Prissy Sharpe with 16.

Megan Taylor had 17 points and nine rebounds for Iowa State and Janel Grimm added 13 points, nine rebounds and eight assists.

Oklahoma St. 83, No. 25 Nebraska 69

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jennifer Crow scored 25 points as Oklahoma State upset No. 25 Nebraska 83-69 Wednesday in the quarterfinals of the Big 12 conference tournament.

Cheri Edwards added 17 points as the Cowgirls (19-9) used a 20-0 first-half run to take control of the game.

Anna DeForge scored 29 points to lead Nebraska (22-9), which never got back in the game after falling behind 32-9.

Three Huskers — Jami Kubik, Nicole Kubik and Brooke Schwartz — fouled out toward the end of the game, leaving Nebraska short-handed.

The Cowgirls shot 50 percent from the field and made 25-of-33 free throws in a game marred by 49 fouls.

Oklahoma State plays No. 6 Texas Tech (23-4) in the semis Thursday.

Boxing promoter Don King robbed of Rolex in Mexico City

MEXICO CITY — Don King, despite his conspicuous presence, is certain that armed bandits had no idea who he was when they robbed him of his gold watch.

"Had they known I was Don King, I'm confident they never would have stopped me," the boxing promoter said Wednesday.

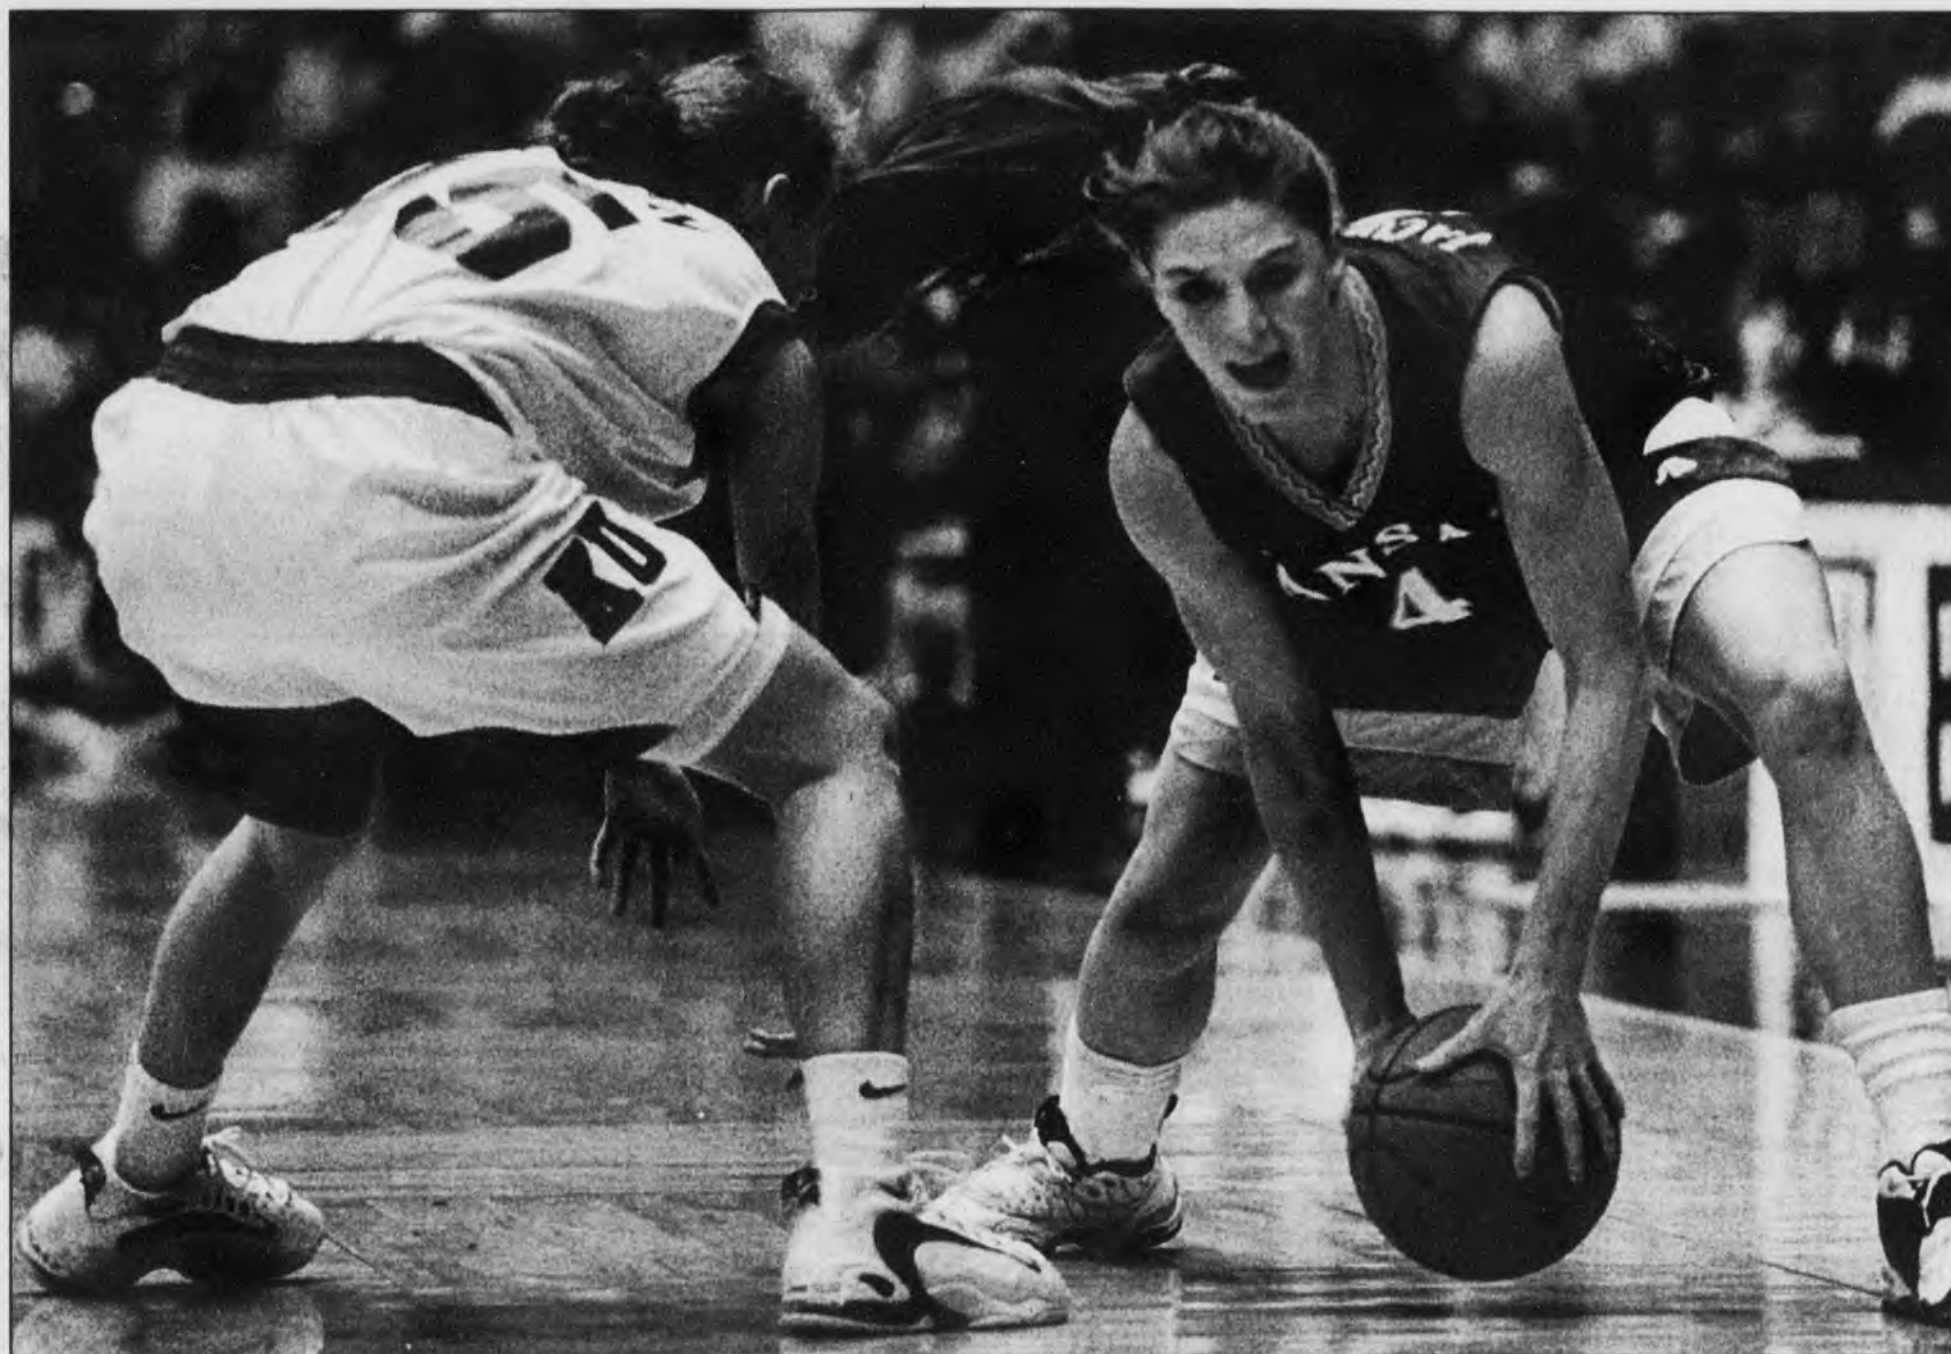

King, in Mexico for Saturday night's super lightweight title bout between Julio Cesar Chavez and Miguel Angel Gonzalez, and others with him were robbed of their watches Tuesday night. King said it all happened within a couple of minutes near their hotel.

King described his diamond-studded gold watch, reported to be a Rolex worth $100,000, as "a shiny doodad... a gaudy little thing that sparkles; nothing of significance."

"The watch is meaningless. Your life is everything," King said. "I'm very thankful to them for not hurting the people who were with me."

Although the boxing impresario appeared shaken, his easily recognized hair-do was unruffled.

King said that in 30 years of traveling in Mexico, he has never felt unsafe and that Tuesday night's trouble was an "isolated incident that could happen in any country in the world."

► 11TH-SEEDED WILDCATS FALL FROM BIG 12 TOURNEY AFTER 50-46 LOSS TO KU.

DAN MERKER
Kansas State Collegian

Going into any basketball game, one thing is given — one team will win and one will lose.

Wednesday night's Big 12 Tournament quarterfinal matchup between K-State and the Kansas Jayhawks was a battle of weaknesses. The Wildcats couldn't hold onto the ball, and the Jayhawks couldn't hit a shot.

But in a game that was close from the opening tip to the buzzer, the No. 3-seeded Hawks did just enough things right to win 50-46 and advance to Thursday's semifinal against Iowa State. K-State, the No. 11 seed, failed to pull off its second-consecutive upset of a higher seed and stay alive in the tournament.

The Cats ended the season with a 11-17 record. The Jayhawks shut down K-State's post play, at least compared with what the Cats' inside players did Tuesday night against Baylor. Nicky Ramage and Angie Finkes were kept to 14 points and 11 rebounds, after combining for 54 points and 20 rebounds against the Lady Bears.

"It just came down to us not executing on offense," Finkes said.

After shooting more than 60 percent in the first half of their past three games, the Cats started out cold against KU, shooting only 35 percent in the first stanza.

The Hawks could do no better, though, making only 31 percent of their first-half shots.

An attacking, trapping, full-court pressure defense caused K-State to commit 12 turnovers in the first 12 minutes and 15 in the first half.

Guard Brit Jacobson poured down 10 points before halftime, accounting for nearly half of K-State's scoring in the first half. Despite the turnovers, the Cats entered the break trailing by only one, 23-22.

"I think it's real tough in a game like the one we played tonight, a low-scoring game, to waste away so many possessions," K-State coach Deb Patterson said. "I went into the half feeling as though we played very poorly, and we were still right there within one point."

Neither team was much more successful in the second half. The Cats ended up shooting 34.7 percent for the game, just better than the Hawks' 33.9 percent clip.

K-State managed to take a pair of one-point leads early in the half, but the Hawks battled back.

After K-State took a 28-27 lead, KU went on a 10-2 run over the next six minutes with several inside buckets, led by forward Nikki White and guard Lynn Pride.

As they have done many times this season, the Cats battled back, taking a 44-43 lead on a pair of free throws by forward Brandy Harris with 4:16 left. As they did all night, KU answered, especially on the defensive end of the floor.

After two defensive stands, the Hawks took the lead on a three-pointer by guard Jennifer Jackson.

They continued with their solid defense, keeping the Cats to just two more points the rest of the game. After the teams traded baskets, K-State had a chance to tie with less than a minute left, but KU forward Jaclyn Johnson knocked the ball away from Finkes, leading to an uncontested layup by Pride with 26 seconds remaining.

The Cats were trying to get back within striking distance, but Jacobson was forced to dribble along the baseline. As she was falling out of bounds, her attempt to keep the ball alive hit the base of the basket, and KU got the ball up by four with 10.2 seconds left.

The Cats tried to foul to stop the clock, but KU played keep-away, the clock ticked down to zeros and the season ended.

Cats ready to take on Buffaloes in Big 12 Tourney

SUN DEE MILLS
Kansas State Collegian

If a game was ever up for grabs, it's today's matchup in Kansas City, Mo., between the Wildcats and Colorado.

In the first game of the first round of the Big 12 Tournament at Kemper Arena, the Cats meet the Buffaloes for the third time this season.

But drawing from the past will be important to the Cats' success.

In Manhattan on Jan. 25, Buffalo guard Kenny Price nailed five three-point shots. Price hit four in the game in Boulder, Colo., on Jan. 31, and he led in scoring in both games.

"We must contain Price on the perimeter," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "We also must keep them off the boards. We did that here, but we didn't do it in Boulder."

Colorado outrebounded the Cats by nine in Boulder, taking advantage of the Cats' mistakes by answering with points. Asbury said that is expected in Big 12 games.

"Scouting is very important," Asbury said. "People understand and exploit your weaknesses. Whether you're a starter or whether you're coming off the bench, you've got a weakness."

Two of the Cats' strengths might be sitting on the bench again this afternoon. Sophomore guard Duane Davis will still be out with his ankle injury, but Asbury would not comment on junior forward Manny Dies' playing status for the tournament. Dies has been practicing throughout his suspension.

Senior guard Aaron Swartzendruber has stepped back in as a part-time point guard to help out junior guard Chris Griffin.

Swartzendruber is more experienced at the position than Griffin or Davis, but less successful. In Missouri on Saturday, Swartzendruber turned the ball over eight times while only scoring three points.

"Now Aaron's trying to wear so many hats," Asbury said. "His minutes have gone up, the pressure on him has gone up. He's had to play point guard, and will have to play some point guard this week. He's probably trying too hard. Yes, he's missed Duane."

But Asbury said if the Cats' season continues for two or three weeks, Davis could return.

"Maybe," Asbury said. "What he doesn't have is what he needs the most, which is his speed and quickness. If he doesn't have it, he's a sitting duck at his size in this league."

No matter what, Asbury insisted the bench will need to produce in their minutes on the court in order for the Cats to continue into the postseason.

"We've gotten production off the bench this year, which is good," he said. "Now is when it shows up the most."

Sprewell deserved more than a slap on the wrist, 5-month suspension

K-State has had its share of off-the-court and off-the-field action lately — arrests, fights, trials and various charges. As the facts fall out in each case, charges have been changed and some even dropped because of lack of evidence.

But in Golden State Warrior Latrell Sprewell's case, no facts ever changed.

He tried to choke his coach, P.J. Carlesimo.

His teammates saw it. His coach was on the other end of it.

But Sprewell's sentence of a year's banishment from the NBA changed yesterday.

Arbitrator John Feerick reduced the ban from one year to five months while telling the Warriors they must reinstate his contract. On July 1, Sprewell becomes a Warrior again.

Of course, being a warrior is what got Sprewell into this mess in the first place.

NBA security officials assigned to the case in December talked to 23 witnesses who all told the same story.

They each said Sprewell got into a fight with Carlesimo at practice and choked him, returning to the scene of the crime about 20 minutes later to attempt to punch him.

The NBA's players union and the arbitrator disagreed about whether a punch landed in the second altercation, but WHO CARES?!!

Is this the message we want to send to children? "Yeah, Coach is full of it. Let's kick his tail after practice. We might get suspended for a while, but eventually we'll get to play again, when everyone stops talking about it."

ESPN SportZone reported an incident similar to the above example that actually occurred in Oakland, Calif., in a high school. Geez.

Sorry, Sir Charles. Tough luck, Rodman. Whether you like it or not, the youth of America are watching you.

These days, children pick up more habits from watching sports on television and actors in the movies than they pick up multiplication tables in 12 years of school.

My deep-seeded fear is that some kook out there will actually figure out how to blow up the White House or devise some elaborate scheme to hijack a bus and rig its speedometer while I'm riding it.

But then, I think to myself, it's only a movie, right?

In real life, criminals, if found guilty, are punished for their wrongdoings. If a person were to get into a fight with his or her boss at work, no doubt that person would be more than suspended. Fired, at the least, while facing a possible criminal charge for battery or assault or whatever the attorneys on the case dreamed up.

In real life, a child who did something like that to a teacher or coach would go to the principal's office to be told they would not be in school for a long while.

The child would probably also be told that his skills were no longer needed on the field, court or wherever.

No one would argue that. No one would try to reduce the sentence or get the child back on the team. Most high school coaches would be afraid to give a child who attacked him or her a second chance to do it again.

Teaching and coaching are about making mistakes and giving children second chances, true, but if a precedent is not set, danger looms.

NBA commissioner David Stern thought a year's suspension from the league was setting a precedent for this type of violation. Stern argued that the attack was premeditated.

It would seem that even if the first incident was not, the one that occurred 20 minutes later most certainly was.

But the arbitrator thought the year away from the game he loved was too stiff for Sprewell.

"The arbitrator is a very charitable man and he made a charitable decision in respects to Mr. Sprewell in this decision," Stern told The Associated Press.

Well, Latrell, I guess this is real life. But you're allowed back on the playground.

The NBA said a $6.4 million dollar loss of five months' salary and missing 68 games is enough. You can come out of timeout now. Just try and play well with others in the future.

Do it again and you might lose two recesses.

A CONTESTANT EXCITES THE CROWD DURING THE OPENING NIGHT OF COMPETITION FOR THE MEN OF K-STATE CALENDAR ON WEDNESDAY NIGHT AT THE WAREHAM OPERA HOUSE. THE FIRST NIGHT OF COMPETITION FOR THE WOMEN'S CALENDAR BEGINS TONIGHT.

Students compete in annual calendar contest

TODD PACEY
Kansas State Collegian

Looking for K-State's finest, aesthetically? Try the Wareham Opera House this month.

K-State men and women will be vying for their spot in their respective calendars in a contest at the Wareham. The men will be competing the first three Wednesdays of March and the women on the first three Thursdays. This is the first year the contest, sponsored in part by KJCK-FM 94.5, will be at the Wareham.

"I think that it's a better venue for the contest. The Wareham has a bigger stage, and the inside is set up nicely for this contest," said J.J. Davis, program director at Big Cat 94.5 and master of ceremonies for the event.

The contest includes three rounds: formal wear, sportswear and swimwear. Four winners each night will be chosen by a panel of judges to appear in the calendars. Winners will also receive prize packages from the sponsors of the event. Davis said there will be about 12 contestants each night. Besides the prizes, contestants each have different reasons for entering.

"You never know what something is going to be like until you try it," said Jennifer Healy, sophomore in fisheries and wildlife biology. She said she is entering for fun.

This is the first year Bill Price, president of University Calendars Inc., will make the Women of K-State Calendar. Price has produced the Men of K-State Calendar since 1996. Each calendar will mimic a typical school year beginning in September and ending in August. Price said they have a storyboard of ideas for each month.

"If they have clothes that fit into the storyboard, we suggest they wear their clothes, but otherwise we rely on clothes from local sponsors," Price said.

The calendars will be premiered June 26-28 at the Country Stampede at Tuttle Creek State Park. The calendars will be available to the general public beginning in July. Price said the calendars will cost between $7 and $8.50.

Physician enjoys educating others about disease

CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

Educating others on sensitive issues can be difficult, but it doesn't come without its rewards. Just ask Dr. Donna Sweet.

Sweet, local physician and professor of medicine at the University of Kansas-Wichita, has treated AIDS patients since 1983 and now sees more than 500 on a regular basis. She said that during the past couple of years AIDS patients were treated earlier and more aggressively, thanks to new drug treatments. Sweet said because doctors can map out the various stages of HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, it's easier to know when and how to initiate this drug therapy.

The drug therapy process begins with Viral Load Testing. Sweet said, in which the patient's T-Cells are counted every three months along with the number of cells carrying HIV. If the virus count reaches 20,000 or more, the patient begins therapy.

One of the most widely used forms of drug therapy is Active Retroviral Therapy. With ART, also known as the Triple Drug Combo Therapy, the patient takes three drugs in the form of pills on a daily basis. These three drugs — AZT (given mostly to pregnant women with HIV), 3TC and Crixivan — cost an estimated $1,200 per month and $14-15,000 per year.

Sweet said in order for the therapy to work, the patient must be willing to take the drugs on a regular basis.

"The problem is not only cost, but getting people to take the drugs. It's not easy, but it's worthwhile," she said.

"People on these drugs have to be committed to taking them. You can't just start on them and then leave them hanging out to dry."

When her patients do follow through with the drug treatment, Sweet said, the results prompt optimism in not only herself but in her patients.

"Thanks to these therapies, my patients are living longer, and I'm signing less death certificates," Sweet said.

Sweet said the public isn't as informed as it could be on the subject of developments in the field of AIDS research. In a recent survey, for instance, Americans have said they believe an AIDS vaccine will become available to the public by the year 2002.

Sweet said this information is mistaken, and said a vaccine won't even be tested for another 10 years. She said AIDS should still be a concern, even after a vaccine has been found.

"The public needs to understand this is still a problem," Sweet said.

However, three new therapeutic drugs are scheduled to be released to the public in the next six months, she said.

Although her occupation has spanned 15 years, Sweet said she enjoys her work now more than ever.

"My patients have always been a rewarding group of people to work with," she said.

New band debuts Saturday in Topeka

SANDY DAVIS
Kansas State Collegian

Country fans, mark your calendars. K-Stater Rick Davis and his new band, Longshot, will open for Kevin Sharp on Saturday at Remington's in Topeka.

Davis, senior in feed science and agriculture technology management, said he and his band are looking forward to the concert. "I saw Kevin Sharp at Stampede last summer, and he was really good," Davis said. "We're really excited about it."

This isn't the first time Davis has opened for a big-name country act. Last October he opened for Tracy Byrd at Remington's. He won the privilege after winning the Jimmy Dean Country Showdown last summer. Also that summer, he opened for Wade Hayes in Iowa.

In Manhattan, Davis has played at Longhorn's and, more recently, Kickers Saloon & Grill, with his new band.

Davis had been playing solo, although he was searching for band members. He finally found them, and they are all K-State students.

Jeff Weber, senior in feed science, plays the fiddle. "He said he wasn't that good, but then he played 'The Devil Went Down to Georgia,'" Davis said. "He is very good."

Heath Stimmel, senior in animal science, is the bass player. "I didn't know him before," Davis said. "A friend introduced me to him. He's just great."

Sherman Canapp, third-year veterinary medicine student, is the drummer.

"He's an unbelievable drummer. He's not really country," Davis said. "He actually lives next to me, and I knew he played. So he said, 'Let's play.'"

Davis said that after much debate, they finally settled on calling themselves Rick Davis and Longshot.

"I really wanted a simple one-word name, but oh well," Davis said.

On April 3, Davis and the band will also open for Blackhawk at Remington's.

For the Kevin Sharp concert, doors open at 5 p.m., and the music starts around 8 p.m. Tickets are $7 in advance, $9 at the door and can be purchased at Remington's or by phone with a credit card. Concert-goers must be 21 to attend.

College of Agriculture names associate dean

AMY EBERT
Kansas State Collegian

The new associate dean and director of academic programs for the College of Agriculture was named Wednesday.

Larry Erpelding, associate director of agriculture academic programs, replaces David Mugler, who will retire in June after 16 years in the position.

Erpelding, who has been in his current position with the College of Agriculture for 20 years, will begin the new position June 15.

Erpelding said his two decades of experience in the academic programs office will help ease the transition to the new position.

"It will be very helpful that I've been in the office for 20 years. I've worked on most of the phases and functions of the academic programs office for some time now, and that will make the move easier," he said.

Also easing the transition is the presence of Mugler, who will remain associate dean until June, Erpelding said.

"I think the transition will be smooth since Dr. Mugler will be here the next few months. He's been a great mentor to me, so I'll be able to continue to work with him in the transition of duties," he said.

Erpelding's new role will entail more administrative duties, he said.

"The role will certainly deal more with budgets and faculty evaluations," he said.

Erpelding said although his role will change in several ways, the one thing to remain constant is his involvement with students.

"I certainly want to continue to have major involvement with students and their activities in the college," he said. "I'll continue to work for and with our students."

Erpelding said the search for his replacement as associate director will begin soon.

Interim vice provost, dean promoted from within KSU

ANDREW WIMMER
Kansas State Collegian

K-State has appointed Ron Trewyn, associate provost for research, to serve as interim vice provost for research and dean of K-State's Graduate School.

Trewyn will take over for Tim Donoghue, who is retiring in June. Donoghue has served as vice provost of research and dean of the Graduate School for nine years.

Trewyn has been associate vice provost at K-State for 3 1/2 years. He has served as president of the Kansas State Research Foundation since 1995.

Trewyn graduated with a degree in biology from the University of Wisconsin-Whitewater in 1970. At Oregon State, he earned his doctorate in microbial physiology in 1974. He spent 16 years as a teacher and cancer researcher at Ohio State University.

As vice provost of research, Trewyn will facilitate the acquisition of research grants and ensure that the process of gaining grants meets federal guidelines. K-State received $53 million in grants last year.

K-State Provost Jim Coffman has formed a task force to search for a permanent vice provost.

"The task force will be looking into the possibility of splitting the two positions, vice provost and dean," Trewyn said.

Trewyn said the task force could take several months to complete a nationwide search looking for possible candidates. Trewyn said he would like to be considered for the permanent position.

"If the situation is right, sure, I'll throw my hat in the ring," Trewyn said.

Union commercialization could boost budget, student use

competition," he said. "Students felt trapped and had to pay those prices."

Carney said the additions are a positive step toward increasing the amount of incoming revenue. He said the Union's goal is to decrease the revenue loss each year, start receiving positive sales receipts and begin making money for students.

The Union's domino theory predicts a decrease in pricing due to franchise competition as well as better food receipts in the coming years. The increase in revenue would also make it possible for Union reserves to be built up. In the future, there would be less need for student support for other renovations, Carney said.

"We are not trying to turn it into a Manhattan Town East," he said. "We have no plans to add a Dillard's or Lerner's. The Union will remain dedicated to its original goal as a center for students. We want the Union to remain the living room for the students."

Union Associate Director John Connaughton said only 34.4 percent of the 250,000-square-foot building is used for retail space. Fifty percent of the Union is public space, such as the lounge areas.

Connaughton said a typical mall has no free, nonprofit footage available like that in the Union for student use.

Pat Bosco, co-chair of the Union enhancement committee and dean of student life, said the committee looked at branded concepts and outside businesses as a successful way to minimize student fees and to raise student revenue.

"We were interested in finding additional sources of income instead of continually going back to the students for fee increases," Bosco said.

Bosco said the enhancement committee is looking at a far-reaching plan with a fiscal base that will balance the non-revenue areas in the Union, such as lounge areas, with the revenue areas.

Carney said the Union will lose its monopoly, but past increases in fees to keep that monopoly had not benefited the students.

"We were pricing students out of the educational market," he said.

Carney said he would not call the Union changes a commercialization, but instead an opportunity to increase the services and businesses offered for student use on campus.

He said the history of the Union shows that a new system of revenue needs to be established.

"We have proven that in the last 12 years we have failed to have a winning year," Carney said. "We were losing hundreds of thousands of dollars in food service."

Bosco said unions were first formed because there were no businesses conveniently located nearby or interested in providing student services. Today that market has changed, he said.

"We can't have a student center subsidized by student fees," he said.

Pitts and Bosco said the renovations taking place in the Union are in step with a trend that is occurring in college unions across the country.

"Branded concepts are an effective tool in today's market," Bosco said.

"We're certainly not on the cutting edge of this trend," Pitts said.

Pitts said this sort of food-court trend has already been established on campus in the Van Zile food service area. The main difference, he said, is they prepare all of their own food.

Pitts said when the Union was privately operated, it was not able to provide revenue for improvements in food-service areas.

"We were not able to make the margin or to put money back in the Union for modernizations," Pitts said. "The out-sources will allow us to bring our food area up to speed."

Pitts said these franchises will allow students to access their needs on campus. He said the franchise additions are because of a brand name consciousness.

"When a community takes advantage of brand-name concepts every day, you can't expect not to have that same orientation," Pitts said.

Presidential candidates address campus issues during campaign debate political science. "I don't think it's important that we limit who runs and who doesn't."

Chris Van Tyle, senior in animal sciences industry and agriculture education, and his vice presidential running mate John Stucky, junior in agricultural technology management and agricultural economics, had a different view.

"Most people at this university associate with people they live with," Stucky said.

"The main two groups are the Greeks and the residence halls. We need to spread the voice around. We want to create a campus without boundaries and better represent all campus concerns and issues."

Other issues addressed in the debate dealt with ideas on how to combat apathy on campus about Student Governing Association.

Mann said student apathy could be a result of good work by student leaders.

"Every SGA across the nation deals with apathy," he said. "We're trying to get students to vote. When things are going good, students don't see a need to get involved."

Bill Kraai, senior in graphic design, and vice presidential candidate with Trey Hock, graduate student in English, answered the issue with a different approach.

"We want SGA to have an image of being fun and definitely not intimidating to students. We need to actually go to the residence halls, Greek organizations, et cetera, all year long, not just one month out of the year," Kraai said.

"You have to stay involved with these organizations."

The final question of the evening asked candidates what their favorite university activity has been and why.

Shayne Castelano, senior in biochemistry and Glendening's running mate, said his favorite activity has been tutoring chemistry and physics at Leasure Hall.

"I love to explain problems so people understand them," he said.

While a variety of answers came from each of the candidates, a camaraderie was seen between all of them. All of them want to get students involved and make a difference for the university.

Some of the debate's questions focused on issues not specifically related to the campaign. A diverse response came from the entire panel when asked what animal they would like to be and why.

"I would be a dog," Davis said, "because they can use the restroom outdoors."

Write-in votes will elect student representatives

K-State Student Union Director Bernard Pitts said he agreed that participation in SGA is a valuable experience and would like to see students step forward more, especially to fill open spots on the Union Governing Board.

"It's a shame that people aren't taking advantage of leadership opportunities that have a big impact on student services," Pitts said. "It's not every day that people have the opportunity to give the level of input that the UGB provides."

Though the shortage of candidates is a concern among faculty and students, some people warn that it's too easy to blame the shortage on student apathy.

Senate Chair Jeff Dougan said participation in student government might be part of a cyclical process based on the length of terms senators and council members have.

"Sometimes it peaks and sometimes it doesn't," Dougan said.

"It may be that this year will be worse than others simply because many people's terms are up and next year will be different.

"The early filing deadline this year for people to announce candidacy might have something to do with it, too."

Dougan also said it's wrong to think write-in candidates who end up being on college councils or in Senate can't do a good job.

"That's how I got involved in student government at first," Dougan said.

"I was a write-in candidate, and it worked out well for me. It's wrong to think you have to run in the first place to do a good job."

Hale Library fee fails in Student Senate; 5 graduate students not allowed to vote

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
Kansas State Collegian

Student Senate defeated 26-26-1 a bill that would have created a privilege fee to fund Hale Library at its meeting Thursday night.

The legislation would have created a $328,000 student fee, about 85 cents per-credit-hour. It needed 36 votes — a two-thirds majority — to pass.

The bill would have required the Kansas Legislature and KSU Foundation to collectively provide $656,000 for the library during the length of the fee, which was set at two years.

After two years, the fee would have ended if either party had failed to provide funding.

Senators questioned the Foundation and Legislature's commitments to help boost resources for the library, which is ranked 11th in the Big 12 Conference.

Governmental Relations Chair Patrick Carney said legislative support should be more actively sought by administrators before students pay a fee. Before asking students to pay a fee to build Hale Library, Carney said administrators should have been more aggressive with the Legislature to find money to fill it, as well.

"Does the library provide a service? Yes," he said. "Should we be paying for that service through privilege fees? No."

"The fault does not lie with this student body. The fault is very clear. The focus of this administration should have always been on the library."

Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock said the Legislature has been repeatedly asked to support library needs in Kansas Board of Regents universities, but hasn't provided that support.

"The Legislature does not wish to pay an adequate amount for us to operate the universities," he said. "We are a direct reflection of how poorly the university is funded."

Hobrock said all other possible funding sources had been exhausted to fix the library's budget shortages, and a student fee was the only other alternative.

"We are out of ideas. We are out of possibilities for how we're going to provide the things that you need for your education," he said.

Graduate Sen. Jayme Morris-Hardeman, who co-chaired a Senate ad hoc committee that opposed a student fee, said a student fee isn't the solution to the library's woes.

"Instead of students providing money for this,

Manhattan, K-State join forces to create plan for improved bicycle routes in city, campus

K-State's parking lots are full of cars. Paths and sidewalks are congested with students going to class. Pedestrians and bicyclists share the roadways on and adjacent to campus.

Students have said this arrangement causes problems for motorists, pedestrians and bicyclists, and changes to the area's bicycle system should be made.

The Bicycle Master Plan, a collective work of the city of Manhattan and K-State, calls for the expansion of bicycle paths around the city and campus. The project is ongoing, to be completed as funds become available and other public works are improved.

Funds for the improvements are generated from the City/University Tax Fund, which is generated from sales tax collected on campus. That money is earmarked for improvements that will benefit both Manhattan and K-State.

Assistant City Manager Ron Fehr said the improvements to bicycle paths on campus and to the linear park, a path around the city, form a cohesive unit.

"What you could compare the project to is a bicycle wheel," he said. "The spokes are the improvements that are being made to campus facilities, and the rim is the connections made to the city's linear parks."

Fehr said the city has budgeted $40,000 for improvements to campus facilities for bicycles and $10,000 for improvements and links of the campus trails to the city's parks.

The city will add trails when it makes repairs to roads where the bicycle path plan is, Fehr said.

"We are going to make these changes as we improve the city's roads," he said. "We aren't on any real deadline, so everything is really flexible."

Director of K-State Facilities Planning Jerry Carter said student input to the project is crucial.

"We've received feedback from students, and we've done our best to fulfill their needs," he said. "The bike pathway from Leasure Hall and Hale Library is one of the improvements we have made with the city/university fund."

Carter said more changes could be made, but there is a lack of funds available for changes.

"More changes are on the way," he said. "We just need to find ways to finance them."

Students said bicycle paths, racks and other accommodations would encourage students to bicycle to class

K-State professor receives honor for assisting agriculture students

AMY EBERT
Kansas State Collegian

Miles McKee always tells his family, fellow teachers and students that people are far more important than things.

McKee, professor of animal sciences and industry, was honored Thursday night at the 28th annual Stockmen's Dinner as a distinguished teacher, adviser, stockman and friend.

"I'm a lucky old man to get to do something I enjoy to do still so much today," McKee said when presented with the award.

Don Good, former department head of animal sciences and industry and director of development with the Livestock and Meat Industry Council Inc., talked about McKee as a youth, student and herdsman.

McKee, who earned his grade school education in a one-room schoolhouse in Chase County, began his career as a stockman when riding his horse daily to school.

"He was a natural with animals, and while he was a student at K-State, the livestock judging team he was on won the 1950 International Livestock Contest in Chicago," Good said.

After serving in the Marine Corps, McKee returned to K-State as an assistant herdsman.

His work as a teacher and adviser was acknowledged by Jack Riley, department head of animal sciences and industry. Riley said he reviewed some of McKee's personnel files to illustrate the effect McKee has on his students and advisees.

"The recurring theme about Miles is that he would always take the time and make the time, and the students will always remember him for that," Riley said. "Miles is a true model for a famous quote we all know, 'I don't care how much you know, until I know how much you care.'"

Keith Bolsen, professor of animal sciences and industry, said he agreed McKee always takes extra time for students.

"Yesterday, when things were really busy in Weber, I walked by Miles' office at 1:15, and he was talking with a high school senior and her dad. I walked back by an hour later, and he was still there with that student," Bolsen said.

Along with his dedicated work with students, Bolsen said McKee takes care of his fellow faculty members as well.

"The old man beats us all to work every day. And we expect him to have the coffee brewed and a Collegian on all of our desks before we get there. He seldom ever fails in his duty," Bolsen said.

Along with being honored as a herdsman, teacher, adviser and faculty member, McKee was honored as a family man by Bolsen.

"God truly holds Miles McKee in the palm of his hand," Riley said.

K-STATE TODAY

Visiting journalist discusses differences of American, Russian cultures at Union

Russian journalist Ada Baskina provided humorous insight into the differences between American and Russian cultures in a lecture Thursday in the K-State Student Union.

Baskina was introduced by Todd Simon, director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, who worked with her at Michigan State University. Baskina is a professor of journalism at Moscow State University and at American University in Washington, D.C.

Baskina said her first experience in the United States was strange.

Her plane arrived on Halloween and, without her glasses, she said she was confused by the costumes. She said she thought Americans would look more like Russians.

"I thought Americans looked very much like Russians at first," she said. "But Russians would never have a holiday like Halloween."

Despite similar faces and shapes, Baskina said numerous everyday differences exist between Russians and Americans.

"American smiles are very confusing to Russians. In Russia, it's bad style to show that you are happy. If you ask an American how he is, he will say, 'I'm fine.' In Russia, it is considered modest to say, 'I'm so-so,' or, 'Not so good,'" she said.

Baskina said there are more important differences than appearances.

"The philosophy, or main concepts, are different. In America is individualism, in Russia, collectivism," she said.

She said a benefit of the Russian system is that co-workers form a strong bond that is like a second family. This second family supports its members in case of death or injury.

She also said Russians support their children and elderly more and more often than Americans.

"We will sometimes keep providing for children from birth, through school, until they are beginning their own family life," she said.

Baskina said Russia has changed during the past 10 years.

"Yes, there is more freedom," she said. "But freedom itself is nothing without being parallel to responsibility."

College of Veterinary Medicine reports theft of sterilizing device last weekend

An autoclave, a sterilizing device valued at $2,400, was stolen over the weekend from the College of Veterinary Medicine in the clinical sciences department.

The device, which was described as looking like a toaster, was reported stolen from the College at 8:30 Monday morning, said Sergeant Troy Lane of the K-State Police Department. The autoclave was last seen on Saturday.

The autoclave is a steam-operated device in which surgical instruments, cloths and cotton are bacteriologically sterilized through steam treatment.

Interim Dean of Veterinary Medicine Neil Anderson said the autoclave could have been stolen for numerous reasons, including industrial use and being mistaken for electronic equipment.

"The person that took it may not have even known what it was," he said. "They may have thought that it was electronic equipment because of the programming buttons that are on it."

Anderson also said that there should not have been anyone in that area of the College during the night.

K-State police are investigating the crime and have no immediate suspects at this time.

Director of the Veterinary Medicine Teaching Hospital Roger Finland was unavailable for comment.

Mercy Health Center refuses to release condition of freshman hit by motorist

At her parents' request, Mercy Health Center on College Avenue declined from commenting on the condition of Mindy Hines.

Hines, 19, freshman in music from Topeka, was struck at 10:44 p.m. Wednesday by an automobile driven by Ashlie Huston, sophomore in pre-business. The car hit Hines while she was crossing Denison Avenue near Platt Street.

The accident was reported to the Riley County Police Department by Jenny Krumwiede, senior in nutrition and exercise science, after she said her roommate heard the crash and told her to call the police.

According to a press release from the RCPD, Hines received lacerations to the facial area and a fracture to her right leg. Huston was cited for failing to yield to a pedestrian.

Jerry Petty, director of public works for the city of Manhattan, said there would probably be no change in the crosswalk situation on a citywide basis. He also said K-State is aware of the crosswalk issue.

"K-State has plans to add some street lighting near crosswalks near and around campus. This has been in its plans for a long time. It was not instigated by this accident," Petty said.

Petty said the city and K-State stand united in the issue of pedestrian safety.

"K-State and the city share a concern for pedestrian safety, particularly on, and adjacent to, campus," Petty said.

He said their concerns are focused predominantly on Manhattan Avenue, not Denison Avenue.

NATIONAL NEWS

Council asks for government funding to reduce threat of E. coli contamination

KEARNEY, Neb. — A national food safety council wants to take up the fight against E. coli contamination in America's beef.

The Beef Industry Food Safety Council, chaired by Nebraska rancher Chuck Schroeder, hopes to persuade Congress and state governments to help fund an effort to stop the bacteria.

Schroeder also is chief executive officer of the National Cattlemen's Beef Association.

He said the safety council he chairs is seeking $30 million from federal and state governments and the $1 per-head beef-checkoff fund for its E. coli program.

"It's our intention to solve the problem and assure consumers at every level that this industry has done everything it possibly can to deliver a safe product to their plate," Schroeder said Thursday at the 10th annual Governor's Ag Conference.

Schroeder said the council will focus on five areas: research and science, crisis communication, public policy, consumer education and industry education.

The group wants to help "consumers understand the commitment that not only the industry has made, but the role consumers have as the last line of defense in preventing food-borne pathogens from becoming a problem," Schroeder said.

E. coli is a naturally occurring bacteria, and its elimination in raw products is virtually impossible. The only way to kill it is by cooking raw beef to at least 160 degrees.

Curbing E. coli is of particular concern in Nebraska, where the beef industry is still recuperating from a series of recalls because of the bacteria last summer.

A former Hudson Foods plant in Columbus was forced to recall 25 million pounds of meat — the largest recall in U.S. history.

A BeefAmerica plant in Norfolk recalled 443,000 pounds of ground beef that tested positive for E. coli and had been sent to a Virginia grocery store. South Korean officials sent back 40,000 pounds of meat supplied by IBP Inc. after claiming it tested positive for E. coli.

CHRIS VAN TYLE, SENIOR IN ANIMAL SCIENCES AND INDUSTRY AND AGRICULTURE EDUCATION, AND JOHN STUCKY, JUNIOR IN AGRICULTURAL TECHNOLOGY MANAGEMENT AND AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS, ARE CANDIDATES FOR STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT. IMPROVING COMMUNICATION BETWEEN STUDENTS AND STUDENT GOVERNING ASSOCIATION TOPS THEIR LIST OF GOALS.

JILL JARSULIC
Collegian

Candidates wish to improve communication

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

Hard-working. Committed. Fun.

Those are the qualities presidential candidate Chris Van Tyle and vice presidential candidate John Stucky said they want to bring to Student Governing Association.

Van Tyle, senior in animal sciences and industry and agricultural education, and Stucky, junior in agriculture technology management and agricultural economics, said they want to give back to K-State what it has given to them. Van Tyle said he would have regretted not running for student body president, regardless of the outcome.

Van Tyle said he and Stucky have four main goals they want to accomplish as student body president and vice president.

They said improving communication between students and SGA is at the top of their list.

"We see K-State as a community, and in order for a community to grow and to function better, there has to be good communication between the members and the leaders," Stucky said.

The candidates said they plan to improve communication through an updated SGA home page, more forums and frequent campus and living-organization visits.

"We want it to be where those groups want us to come there, not just us calling them up and saying, 'Can we come to your meeting?'" Van Tyle said, "but the groups saying, 'Hey, we'd love to have you. Come see what we're about.'"

Van Tyle said students are divided between colleges, campus organizations and living organizations. He said he and Stucky want to unite everyone through better communication.

The candidates second goal is to improve pedestrian safety. They said they will focus on crosswalk safety as a priority.

"Chris and I have visited with a lot of students on campus, and I don't think we've ever spoken to one yet who's really happy with the current crosswalk system, especially safety at night," Stucky said.

Stucky said he and Van Tyle want to put a flashing indicator at all large crosswalks on campus.

The third goal Van Tyle and Stucky said they want to accomplish is campus involvement.

Van Tyle said he would like to create a senior day in Aggieville with the Aggieville Business Association. He said this could include a carnival, which could bring students together and get them involved.

Stucky said he and Van Tyle also want to have a travel fair for international students at the beginning of the year.

He said they would bring in airline companies so international students could make Christmas and other travel plans in advance.

Van Tyle and Stucky said their last important issue is campus parking.

"We don't think that anyone has a perfect solution to the parking problem on campus, but we think that a partial solution focuses around the shuttle service," Stucky said.

Van Tyle said their plan is to find places off campus where students could park their cars, and the shuttle would pick them up.

Van Tyle said they will accomplish their goals by working with students, faculty, administration and the Manhattan community and listening to what they want.

"The final step is taking what we've heard back to the student government and sharing it with them, communicating and getting their feedback on it," Stucky said.

Van Tyle and Stucky said students should vote for them because they are easy to relate to, and they are a common voice.

"We're not super bold. We're not super flashy. We're simple, but we're efficient. We know what we want to do, and we know we can do that," Van Tyle said.

Sororities, fraternities face changes in bidding

LINDSEY FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

Wednesday was the final day of the Homecoming bidding process, when sororities were notified which fraternities accepted formal Homecoming bids for the 1998-99 school year.

The Panhellenic and Interfraternity councils created a new bidding process for Homecoming, allowing fraternities and sororities to alternate bidding. The system has a limited capacity of 310 members for each group of greek houses participating in Homecoming events.

"The process was very time-consuming, but fun," said Suzanne Jones, junior in psychology and vice president of Sigma Kappa.

Jones said she thinks the bidding process is fair, but the competition between greek houses doesn't necessarily promote good relations.

"Competition is good to a certain extent, but the Homecoming bidding process gets to be too much," she said. "It used to be that sororities would sing in the evenings, but now we take people to class and stay at their houses all day."

One problem several members of greek houses found with the bidding process was the 310-person cap on each greek Homecoming group.

Lori West, junior in marketing and president of Delta Delta Delta, said fraternities were pairing up with each other and realized they would have to choose a small sorority to stay at less than the 310-person cap.

But she said the 310-person cap has advantages.

"The bidding brought together different fraternities and sororities that maybe never would have been together," West said.

"It gives other people the chance to work together."

Aaron Clark, junior in marketing and international business and president of Sigma Phi Epsilon, said he thought the bidding process was a positive change.

"I think the Interfraternity Council did a good job implementing the number capacity, so everyone could get involved," Clark said.

Clark also said he thinks Homecoming segregates the university. He would like Homecoming to be geared more to the campus, rather than just greeks.

Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said she thinks the whole process needs to be modified.

"I think it needs a lot of fine tuning," she said. "The Panhellenic and Interfraternity councils will be working on it in the next few weeks."

Robel said the councils will re-examine the bidding process for areas that might have created hard feelings.

"I think we accomplished the goal of giving everyone who wanted to take part in Homecoming the chance to do so," Robel said.

Basketball teams overcome adversity to find success

Barring an upset win over Kansas today or a little leniency from one of the postseason tournament selection committees, Wildcat basketball will be done for the season by the time the sun sets tonight.

The women's team, which earned a spot in the NCAA Tournament last year, probably will not get back in with an 11-17 finish and the men, who started off 9-0 but have slowed to 17-10, are dangerously on the bubble.

However, K-State fans have plenty of reasons to be proud of their teams.

The women, led by senior guard Brit

Jacobson, played through conditions so rough Cat fans should barely wish the same on KU. The Cats entered the season with a young roster lacking depth. Then, forward Ewa Laskowska, one of only four 6-footers on the team, developed a case of homesickness and left the team to return to Independence, Kan.

K-State also battled through injuries. By the time the Big 12 Tournament rolled around, only seven Cats played regularly.

In K-State's overtime victory over Baylor on Tuesday, only the starting five played at least 15 minutes. Sophomore Angie Finkes and freshman Kim Woodlee played all 45.

Even when staying on the floor enough to impress NBA players, the women played hard and ran the court, showing the world that Wildcats don't quit.

The men never backed down this season, either.

The Cats started the season strong, but ran into problems in Big 12 road games, winning only once. However, K-State, picked to finish dead last in the conference, was one win away from posting a .500 regular-season conference finish.

Like the women, their road hasn't been too smooth.

On Feb. 14, the Cats lost point guard Duane Davis, who suffered an ankle injury.

Davis didn't play again until he logged four ineffective minutes against Colorado on Thursday.

Also, power forward Manny Dies hasn't played since Feb. 21, when he was arrested and charged with obstruction of justice and possession of an open container of alcohol, although he hasn't been convicted of anything.

Still, the Cats have played to a .667 clip without him.

Congratulations to both teams for playing through adversity the Wildcat way and making K-Staters proud.

We're already looking forward to your next games.

THE HOMECOMING THAT NEVER ENDS

Concurrent events annually serve as little more than ponderous waste of sidewalk chalk

VIEWPOINT

BRANDI HERTZ
Brandi is a junior in print journalism. You can send e-mail to Brandi at blh0377@ksu.edu.

HELL

hath no fury like a campus during Homecoming Bid Week and elections week. What kind of sadists decided to smooch these two faith-dissolving, sidewalk/tree-defacing events into the same span of time? I'm stuck in a nightmare — where's that Freddy Krueger when you need him?

It's not that I don't enjoy smashing into people's backsides every two steps because they've decided to read the latest sidewalk litany — it's kind of like playing a jacked-up version of Twister with complete strangers. But what kind of self-respecting Person-Who-has-a-Pat-Bosco-kind-of-dedication-to-K-State pimps themselves out to voters via fluorescent chalk?

I don't recall Bob Dole hunkering down on the streets of Russell, Kan., with a nice fat piece of chalk each time he ran for Senate.

Do they really want people to vote for them based on how many colors they used to squiggle curly things on their name, anyway?

Barbara Walters: "So, Mr. Random Person, who do you think you'll vote for to wep-wesent the Cowege of Arts and Sciences next year?"

Mr. Random Person: "Well, I'll tell you, Babs, I was going to vote for this one person who exceeded the saturation capacity of the sidewalk in front of Eisenhower Hall. Oh, the colors, I'll tell you what. It was like looking into a box of Lucky Charms, it was."

Barbara Walters: "Would you please answer my question?"

Mr. Random Person: "Oh, well, see, then it rained and the chalk was gone. Can't remember the name. Damn shame. No pot of gold at the end of that rainbow, eh Babs? Heh heh, get it? Pot of — hey, you want to go get a beer?"

Besides, with all that political boo-hoey taking up space, where are members of greek organizations going to write things such as "Clovvia and Tri-Sigma heart Sigma Chi"? C'mon, people! We have to share during these trying times.

Wasn't it Homecoming just a few weeks ago? And now we're already gearing up for next fall. I am, however, happy to report that last fall's jackets are in use for this season's Bid Week.

Quite vexing to the outsider, especially when I thought they were all burned in a special ceremony after a goat slaughter.

I applaud you, the greek community of K-State, for recycling. Maybe you can mark it down as one of your philanthropies for the year.

Somehow all traffic laws seem to change to fit the needs of the greek community during Bid Week — can you feel the magic in the air? During this special time, people are allowed to block already-congested campus roads if they have a car that says "Taxi" on it in white shoe polish.

"What a cool way to piss people off and get away with it," I thought. So I wrote "Taxi" all over my car, then parked it in the middle of Mid Campus Drive.

I don't know if there's some secret greek taxi-driver handshake or what, but I suffered several various fractures that day.

Next time, I guess I'll just fill the bed of a pickup truck with water and 52 writhing, screaming fraternity men.

As someone who has survived the double-edged sword of Bid Week and elections once said, "This, too, shall pass."

In the meantime, if you need me, I'll be standing in street corners, persuading people to write me in on their election ballots.

I'll also be doing the unprecedented March Rush to every single fraternity and sorority in a 100-mile radius.

Hope y'all saved jackets for me.

Candidate blueprint for K-State heavily accents communication

VIEWPOINT

CHRIS VAN TYLE
Chris and John are running for student body president and vice-president. This completes the weeklong look at the presidential candidates.

Dear students,

Well, it's that time of year again: time for student government elections. As candidates for student body president and vice president, we believe communication is very important. That's why we are writing you this letter. Our first article in the paper today explains our issues and goals for K-State. Now we'd like to personally share with you our vision for K-State in 1998-99 and what qualities we can bring to student government.

Generally speaking, K-State is a community of students living together, learning together and having fun together. Our vision for K-State in 1998-99 is to serve and support that community of students and their concerns. Overall, we want to create a campus without boundaries. If you have been reading the Collegian lately, you'll know there is a barrier between student government and the students. Communication is at a bare minimum. It's as if the Student Senate is a secret organization that meets in the K-State Student Union and makes bills for K-State students.

As presidential and vice presidential candidates, our goal is to break that barrier. We have many new ideas to give the students the power in student government. However, this issue cannot be resolved without communication and leadership.

So what leadership qualities can John Stucky and Chris Van Tyle bring to this new student government?

Somethin' old, somethin' new:

As a team, we complement each other well. Chris has served in Student Senate for one year. He brings experience, knowledge of how Senate works and a desire to serve the students. John is new to student government. He brings fresh ideas, creativity and a desire to serve the students.

Open-minded and well-rounded:

Through the years, we have been involved in a variety of activities and organizations on campus — from Men's Glee Club to Ag Ambassadors to Men Against Rape Society to being resident assistants in the halls and many other activities. These experiences help us relate to students from all walks of life. As student body president and vice president we will be open-minded students serving students.

Honesty and integrity:

We are not career politicians by any stretch of the imagination and thus won't be making flashy, long-winded campaign promises. We are simply a couple of honest, hard-working guys who play by the rules and would like the opportunity to serve the students. As candidates, we want to be accountable for our goals and be available to students and their concerns.

The intent of this letter is to help inform you, the students, of how we can serve you in 1998-99. We believe our experience, leadership qualities and desire to serve the students first make us A COMMON VOICE for K-State Students and THE LOGICAL CHOICE for student body president and vice president.

We'd appreciate your vote March 9-11.

Sincerely,

Chris Van Tyle, presidential candidate senior in animal science and industry and agricultural education

John Stucky, vice presidential candidate junior in agricultural technology management and agricultural economics

Studying feasibility of on-campus alumni center required moving slowly, covering all the angles

This is an exciting time for the KSU Alumni Association, our alumni and the students at K-State. We are looking forward to having an alumni center on campus.

When the Alumni Association board of directors voted to look at the possibility of building an alumni center on campus, we knew the process would involve a lot of research.

We wanted to gather as much input as possible from the association staff, our alumni and the university community.

We knew that although we are alumni and have ideas about what should be included in a center, we needed to take advantage of the insight from other schools.

The Building and Site Committee traveled extensively throughout the Midwest, in particular, to Big 12 schools. We learned alumni centers are invaluable to those schools and their students. We also learned which features are important and which to avoid.

GUEST VIEWPOINT

CURT FRASIER
Curt is a 1973 graduate from K-State and is the chairman of the alumni center project.

A consulting firm was then hired to conduct a feasibility study to see if alumni were interested in the project and the proposed site and to determine the level of private donations available for such a project. The feasibility study showed that alumni want a center on campus that has a traditional look and would be a comfortable "place to come home." Based on the results of this study, the board approved moving forward with the alumni center project at the September board meeting.

We wanted a K-State firm to lead this project, so we sent requests for design proposals to more than 1,900 K-State architecture graduates. We were excited when about 70 firms representing more than 100 K-State graduates expressed interest in the project.

Of these, 18 proposals were submitted representing 30 firms. After interviews, the Building and Site Committee personally viewed projects completed by the final firms.

The architecture firm Gossen Livingston Associates from Wichita was selected to design the process. We selected Gossen Livingston because we liked its approach to the design process. The principals in the firm are K-State graduates, as are many of their employees. We have received many compliments from alumni and other firms on our selection of Gossen Livingston.

Gossen Livingston has had meetings with many groups on campus, including the K-State Student Union, athletics groups, University Planning Committee, university administration, Parking and Safety, the KSU Foundation and others. They met with architecture students who had used the alumni center as a final project in a competition sponsored by Bayer Stone. The architects also conducted focus groups for architecture faculty.

Six focus groups were conducted by the architects across the state of Kansas, including one in Manhattan, to gather input from alumni, friends and students. From these focus groups the architects gained information that has been included in the design.

We don't pretend to have all the answers. We had to pull information from a lot of people and sources to get where we are now, and we continue to seek input. Our volunteers, including alumni and students, have provided many hours of their time to make this project a success.

I commend Alumni Association President Amy Button Renz, the Alumni Association staff and volunteers involved in the preliminary stages of the project. Their efforts will ensure this will be the best alumni center in the country.

We want to continue to gather input for the center and will have another public meeting for the university and Manhattan communities at 7 p.m. on March 19 on the third floor of the KSU Foundation Center. I hope anyone interested in this project will be able to attend.

Clarifications offered in defense of Sackett

Editor,

We have seen two letters stating how Sam Sackett is supposedly off his rocker. This letter is in support of his view and also serves as a response to Wesley Twombly's letter printed in Monday's Collegian. He made two key points that are worth clarifying. The first was that Christians don't think, because we base all our principles on one book and one being. The second is that God endorses slavery.

The first point: Christians DO think. In every situation, Jesus calls us to stop, think and ask ourselves, "Is what I am about to do consistent with the word of God and Jesus' teachings?" I believe too many people do not think when they act, and I include myself among them. We Christians believe the Bible is the complete law of love handed down from God, and that if everyone were to live by this law, this world would be a much more peaceful place to live. Because God's love is perfect, his law is perfect.

Now, Twombly's second point: I submit that God does not endorse slavery. Twombly apparently has made a mistake many people make when taking principles from the Bible. This is the assumption that one can take any small part of the Bible and make it dogma before considering how it relates to the rest of God's word. The Bible is not just a bunch of separate, unrelated letters, songs and writings. It is one complete book made up of many interrelated parts. Revelation 22:18-19 proves this point and shows God wants his word taken as a whole.

Another mistake he made that is quite common when studying any historic document is not taking into consideration the time frame in question. Back in Biblical times, from the start of the world through at least the latest book of the Bible, slavery was considered a way for a person without much skills and money to survive. This is consistent with people today in the same situation working for minimum wage to put food on their table.

Both then and now, the main point was and is survival.

Methodist bishop's faith strong despite losing 2 sons to AIDS

CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

Imagine you are a parent and have recently lost one of your children to AIDS.

Now imagine you've lost two.

The Rev. Bishop Fritz Mutti and his wife, Etta, have had to live with such a tragedy for the past seven years. Fritz Mutti is bishop of the Kansas Area United Methodist Church.

The Muttis told their story Thursday night in the Union Ballroom as part of a panel. The speech was devoted to the memory of their two sons who died of AIDS within months of each other in the early 1990s.

They chronicled the lives of two of their three sons: Fred, who was diagnosed with HIV in December 1988, and Tim, who was diagnosed with HIV in April 1989. Fritz Mutti said the two years his sons lived with AIDS was a roller coaster.

"You never know what's going to happen from day to day," he said.

Throughout the two years, the Muttis had to deal with issues including whether to keep Fred Mutti, the younger of the two sons, on life support by signing a living will.

As Tim and Fred Mutti drifted in and out of various illnesses, the Muttis said they didn't recall feeling anger — only pain.

"We never went through anger," Etta Mutti said. "We didn't curse God. God has always been with us."

Tim Mutti died in December 1990 after a series of illnesses including pancreatitis, and Fred Mutti died during summer 1991.

"We hope we've been instruments for helping other people get through this difficult time of their lives," Fritz Mutti said.

"We wanted to make this speech as personal as we can. This is real, and it happens to real people."

A panel discussion was conducted at the conclusion of the Mutti's story. The panel consisted of the Muttis; Reita Currie, health educator at Lafene Health Center; Karyn Wiseman, United Methodist Campus minister; Eunice Dorst, executive director of the Regional AIDS Project; Don Fallon, director of K-State religious activities; and Earl, an AIDS patient whose last name was not disclosed.

"People know the facts about AIDS, but they are still in denial," Currie said. "It can happen to you, and you need to make wise choices in your behavior."

Earl, who visits high schools around the area to educate teens about AIDS, said he wished everyone could become involved in the education process.

Men's group lashes out against rape, alcohol, says likelihood increases during spring break

BRENNAL TALLEY
Kansas State Collegian

Members of the Men Against Rape Society said they are ashamed they had to deliver a presentation on spring break, alcohol and rape Thursday night. They said they are ashamed that rapes happen.

Sponsored by the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, the group's presentation in Derby Food Center covered facts and statistics about rape, as well as precautions for spring break or any time of the year.

"Alcohol coupled with spring break brings the risk of rape higher," said Britton Turkett, junior in print journalism and recruitment coordinator for MARS.

MARS members showed a video of a "Kids in the Hall" skit portraying two lawyers debating a plea bargain for their clients, who are dating. The video helped define what MARS calls the "rape culture."

In the video, the man offers dinner, dancing and intercourse, while the woman offers a 17-week dating plan. The lawyers settle on two dates and 11 ounces of gin to be consumed by the woman.

This view, where women are objectified by men who are out to "get some," can lead men to view relationships as a game or quest, Turkett said.

Because of these kinds of misrepresentations of relationships and women, MARS wants to bring to light rape and sexual assault and dispel myths.

Nick Lander, freshman in statistics and programming coordinator for KSUARH, read facts to clarify some of the myths.

More than 95 percent of rapes are committed by males. Eighty-six percent of all college rapes are committed by acquaintances, and of those, nine out of 10 go unreported. Most college rapes occur during a student's first semester.

Because 50 percent of college rapes involve alcohol, extra caution should be taken while students are on spring break, especially in places such as Padre Island, where date-rape drugs such as rohypnol and gamma-hydroxybutyrate are legal in nearby Mexico, Bahr said.

"If either of you are under the influence of alcohol or drugs, just for safety's sake, say 'not tonight.' It will save a lot of pain," Bahr said.

BIG 12 HOOPS TOURNNEY Men

Baylor 66, Texas A&M 63

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Harry Miller calls 'em like he sees 'em.

"This might have been an ugly win," the Baylor coach said Thursday after his Bears beat 12th-seeded Texas A&M 66-63 in a sloppy first-round outing in the Big 12 Tournament.

Patrick Hunter sank two free throws with 26 seconds left for Baylor, which committed 16 turnovers in the second half while squandering a 15-point lead.

In the final 11 seconds, Rodrick Miller and Leon Morris each missed two free throws for the Bears (14-13). But Texas A&M (7-20) missed three three-point attempts in the final 24 seconds in what turned out to be Coach Tony Barone's last game.

Barone was told three weeks ago that he would be reassigned as soon as Texas A&M's season ended.

"I feel a lot of mixed emotions," said Barone, whose son Brian is a sophomore guard for the Bears. "Anger, fear, relief. I guess those are emotions that don't go well together. I'm angry that I won't be able to coach my son now. That has been taken away from me."

Barone's seven seasons produced a 76-120 record.

"I think we did some good things, but we really didn't get the job done. That leaves a void that bothers me, that really bothers me," he said.

Missouri 74, Iowa St. 55

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kelly Thames scored 22 points as a Missouri team struggling to keep its NCAA hopes alive rolled past Iowa State 74-55 Thursday in the first-round of the Big 12 Tournament.

The Tigers, who shot 67 percent to build a 15-point lead in the first half, advanced to the second round today against third-seeded Oklahoma. The Sooners had a first-round bye to await the Tigers (17-13).

Missouri, which has a 23-game road losing streak and lost all of its league games on the road this year, is counting on its four victories in five games with ranked teams to influence the NCAA tournament selection committee.

Missouri and Iowa State (12-18) had split their regular season games this year with each team winning on its own court.

The Tigers, who had many fans among the 13,800 as they played 120 miles from home in Columbia, came out shooting, making 16-of-24 shots in the first half, including five-of-eight three-pointers. Dibi Ray made all three of his three-point attempts in the half.

Iowa State, which brings the largest contingent of fans to the tournament each year, shot only 37 percent in the half.

Texas 86, Texas Tech 83

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Chris Mihm put back a missed shot with about 12 seconds left and made two free throws with 9.7 seconds to play as Texas defeated Texas Tech 86-83 Thursday in the first round of the Big 12 Conference Tournament.

Texas Tech's Cory Carr missed a three-point shot just before the buzzer as Texas (13-16) moved into the second round against second-seeded Oklahoma State. The Cowboys had a bye in the first round.

The Red Raiders (13-14) had trailed throughout the game, but rallied in the second half behind the three-point shooting of Rayford Young to make up for an off-night by the All-Big 12 Carr.

Kris Clack had 28 points to lead Texas. Clack had been doubtful for the game after dislocating his right shoulder in practice on Sunday but was 11-of-21 from the field.

Luke Axtell, battling back spasms, had 20 points. Mihm, who picked up his fourth foul with 19:37 to play in the second half and spent most of the half on the bench, had 11 points.

Carr had 20 points, but was just five-of-15 from the field. Young had 18 points, making four-of-six three-pointers, and Stan Bonewitz had 17.

Women

No. 6 Texas Tech 53, Oklahoma St. 49

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Alicia Thompson might have scored the toughest points of her career against Oklahoma State, and she needed every one of them.

Thompson scored a game-high 22 points to lead No. 6 Texas Tech over Oklahoma State 53-49 in the semifinals of the Big 12 Conference Tournament on Thursday.

"I think I was forcing a lot and taking a lot of the shots off-balance, and that hurt us," Thompson said. "I came out in the second half and tried to settle down and just get in better position."

The Lady Raiders had missed 12 straight three-pointers before Julie Lake hit their only three-point shot of the game with 1:40 left. The basket gave Texas Tech (24-4) a 48-43 lead.

"I think it probably won the game for us," Tech coach Marsha Sharpe said.

Kansas 70, No. 22 Iowa St. 65

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jennifer Jackson scored 20 points to lead Kansas to a 70-65 upset of No. 22 Iowa State in the semifinals of the Big 12 Conference Tournament on Thursday.

The Jayhawks advanced to Saturday's championship game against No. 6 Texas Tech.

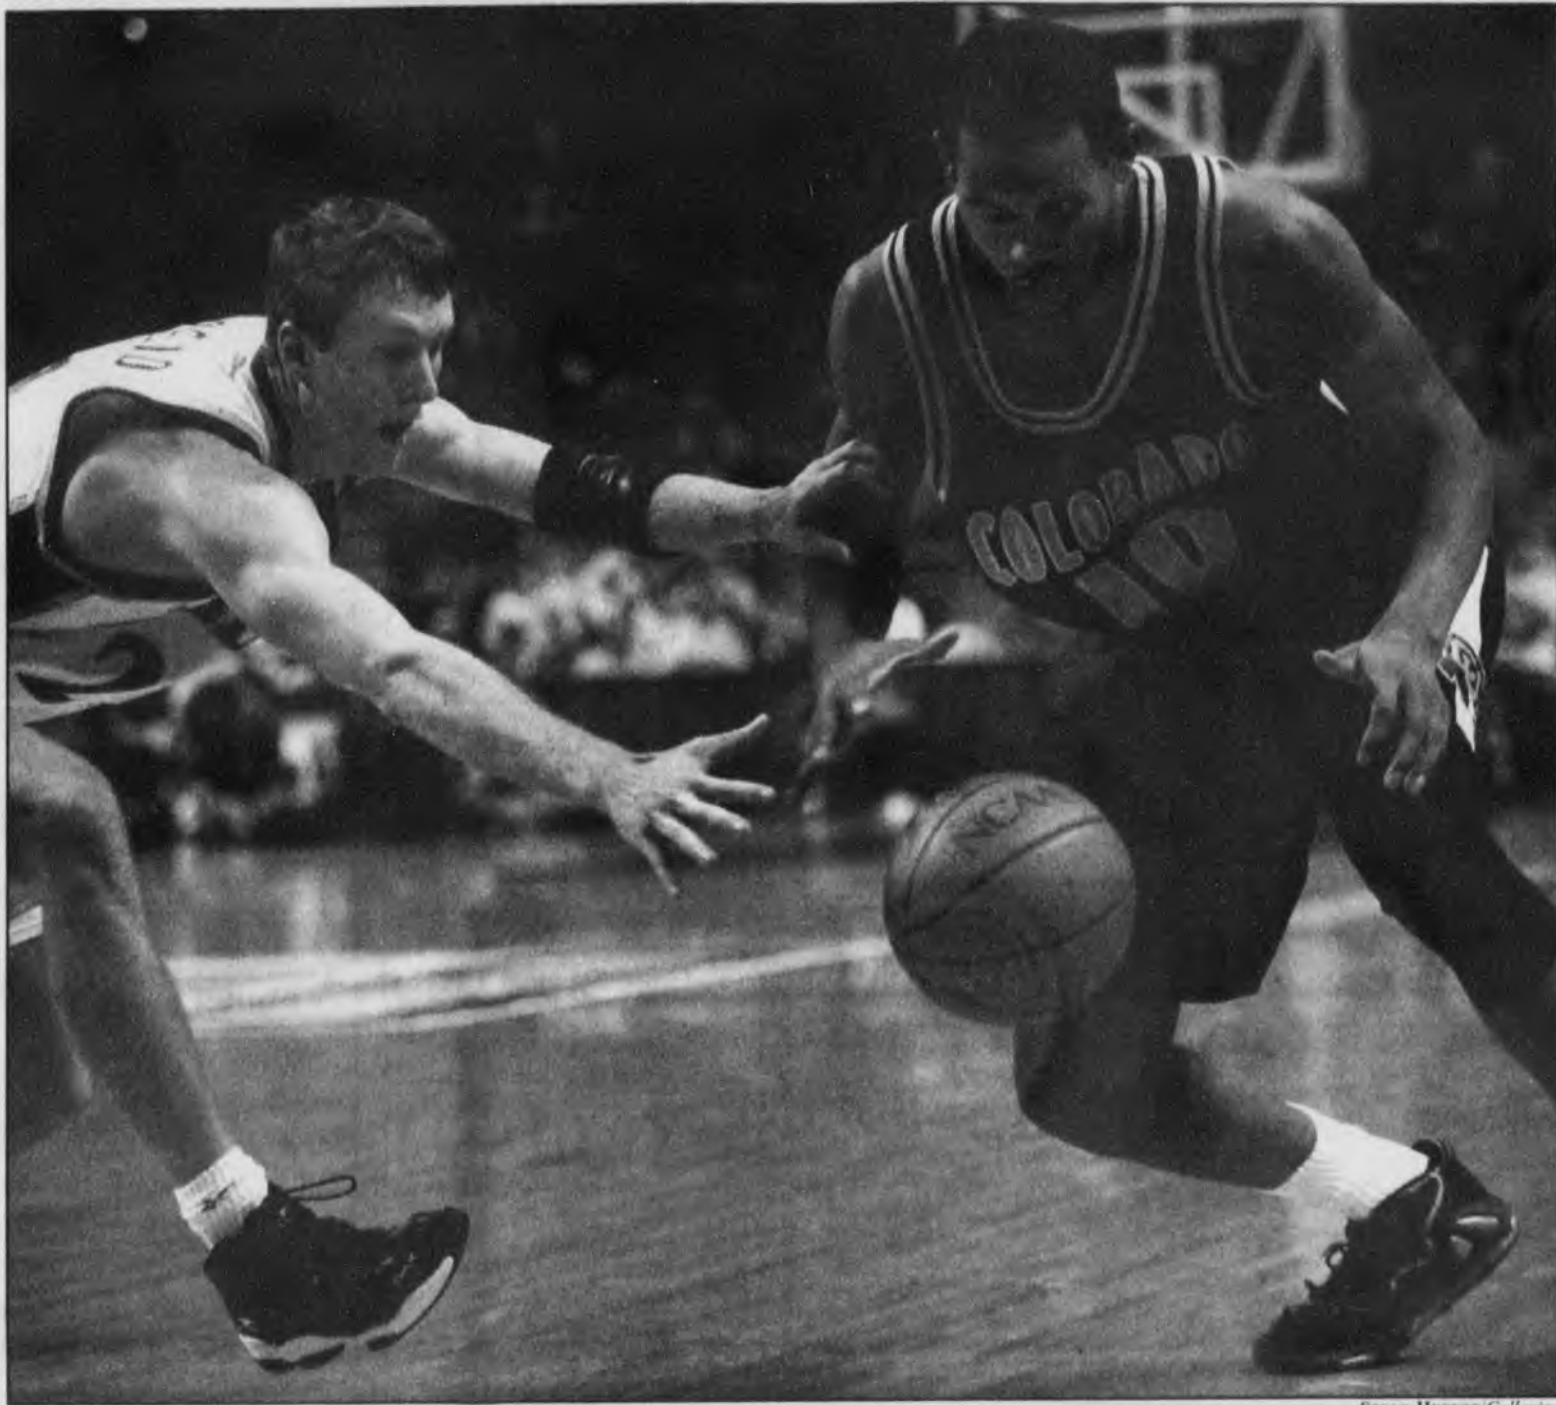

Iowa State (24-7) led 28-25 at halftime, but Jackson scored the first eight points of the second half for Kansas (21-7) and the Jayhawks never trailed again.

Iowa State got to 31-49 when Stacy Freese hit a three-pointer from the top of the key. But Lynn Pride scored five points to key a 14-6 Kansas run as the Jayhawks kept control.

Freese led the Cyclones with 20 points, including five three-pointers. Jayme Olson had 19 points, and Tangel Grims had 15.

Second half improvements save Wildcats' win over Buffs

JEREMY KELLEY

Kansas State Collegian

KANSAS CITY, MO. —

Throughout much of the first half of K-State's 75-61 win over Colorado, the Wildcats were floating in a sea of troubles: of missed jumpers, of turnovers and of lazy passes.

The Cats needed a lifesaver to grasp to clinch a second-round berth, and they found it in the second half. They found their shot and played defense.

In the first half, the Cats shot a measly 32 percent from the field en route to a three-point halftime deficit.

"In the first half, we weren't knocking down our shots," center Shawn Rhodes said. "Offensively, in the second half, we wanted to key in on knocking down our shots because we were missing easy shots."

The Cats missed 10 shots within eight feet of the basket in the first period.

With 8:45 left in the game, the Cats clutched a nine-point lead, their biggest of the game at that point. The Buffaloes cut the lead to four with 6:52 left. Instead of folding like a metal folding chair, though, K-State kept Colorado to just one field goal over the next 5 1/2 minutes.

"They made shots when they had to make shots," Colorado coach Ricardo Patton said. "They maintained their composure and poise and took us out of our game plan."

Besides hitting their shots, the Cats stepped up defensively and shut down the Buffaloes' interior game, keeping forwards Marlon Hughes and Ronnie DeGray and center Charlie Melvin to a combined 12 points for the game.

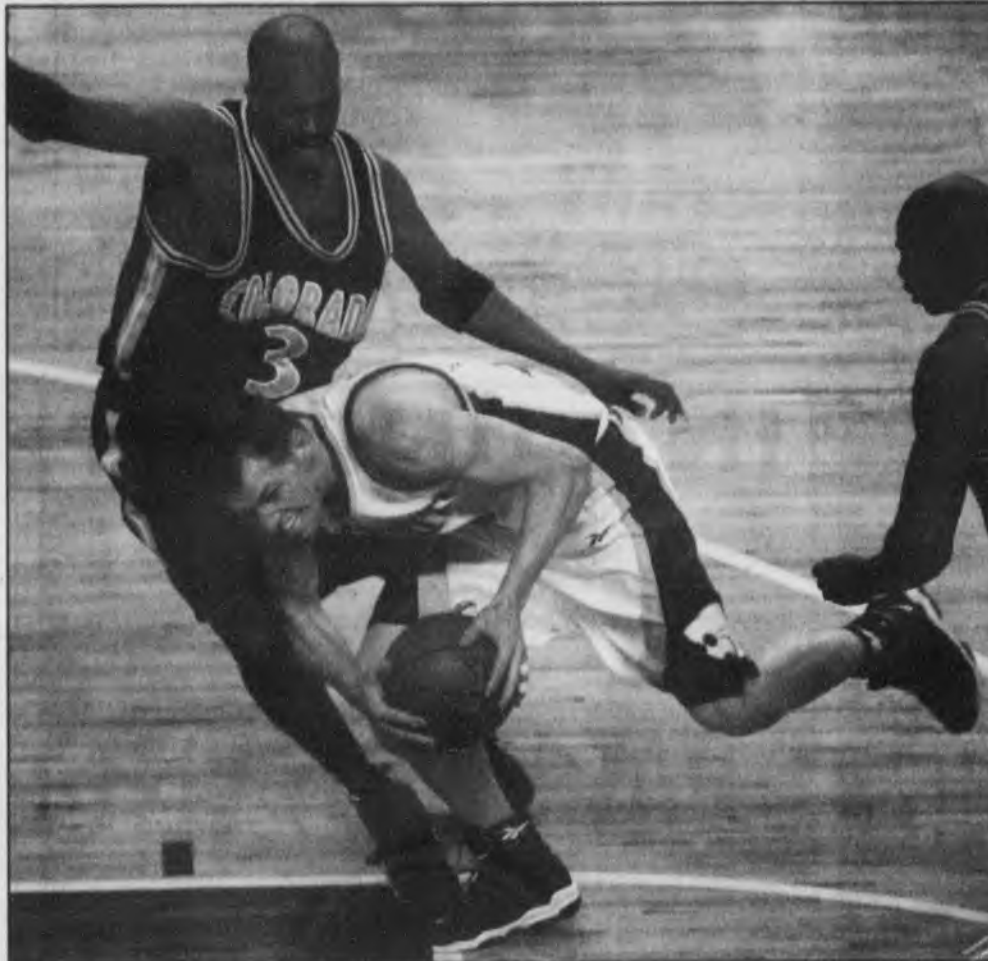

"We kept them off the offensive boards in the second half," head coach Tom Asbury said. "We played extremely hard, particularly in the second half."

Colorado guard Kenny Price, the Buffaloes' leading scorer, tallied 11 points by halftime, but in the second half the Cats tried to do a better job defensively on him.

"Price is going to get his," Asbury said. "What you have to do with him is tinker with him defensively."

K-State tinkered, and the Buffaloes tried to do a bit of the same, but the Cats handled the pressure and maintained their lead.

"This game was very indicative of a team who needs to get wins in the postseason," Asbury said. "There are no humpies in this league. We've got the pressure on us now. We need to get wins for the postseason."

Emotions, underdogs make this time of year special in college hoops

March is a special month of the year. We all know about March Madness, the NCAA Tournaments.

But this might be the most exciting week of the year. Realistically, only about 15 teams, if that many, have any chance at all to win the national championship. The rest of the 64 are there for the experience, to say they have played in the NCAA Tournament.

That's why this is a special time of the year. An elite few are good enough to be on the very best teams. The rest of the participants are lucky to be playing college basketball at all, although it's still an amazing achievement to play NCAA ball at all.

Of the 64 bids to the tourney, 30 are automatic bids, mostly gained through winning a postseason conference tournament. Most of the 34 teams that will gain at-large berths have no doubt about their status.

The special moments fall for those teams from smaller conferences, teams that have no chance of receiving a bid without winning their conference tournament. Conferences such as the Southland, Patriot and TAAC have no chance of getting other teams in.

Conference tournaments that afford players on teams such as these to achieve a lifelong goal of playing in the NCAA Tournament are special atmospheres and will give the players memories that will be with them the rest of their lives.

This is the ultimate in athletic competition. Players in these games are playing as hard as they can, hoping to achieve their goals and live their dreams, knowing that if they lose, it is all over for another year.

Even though they are no farther away than anyone else from the national championship, most of the time these teams just show up and lose their first-round games, playing in awe of their opponents whom they see nightly on "SportsCenter."

Sometimes, though, teams are able to pull off monumental upsets, like last year, when Tennessee-Chattanooga upset Georgia and Illinois to reach the Sweet 16, or when 15th-seeded Coppin State beat 2nd-seeded South Carolina in the first round. They finally get a share of the spotlight that so often avoids them, and the euphoria of doing the unthinkable.

These are the special moments of sports. These are moments that keep us coming back and let us forget about the Latrell Sprewells and Don Kings of the world, and how much money professional athletes are making. It allows us to appreciate the competition — allowing all the teams to battle it out on the court to see who's best.

A friend of mine played basketball at Coastal Carolina — yes, the same cupcake that was on K-State's schedule this year once reached the tournament — and he talked with a sparkle in his eye about the year they reached the NCAA Tournament.

The Chanticleers were unlucky enough to get Michigan in the first round and got killed, but he talked jubilantly about how happy he was to play them, against players like Chris Webber, Juwan Howard and Jalen Rose.

He is out of basketball now, but nobody can take away the fact that he realized a dream and played in the NCAA Tournament. He said that despite the loss, that day was one of the best in his life.

When I watch college basketball the next couple of weeks, I will keep in mind my friend and root for the underdogs and the realization of their dreams. When watching the conference tournaments, the emotions of the winners being able to realize their dreams and the losers being oh-so-close are the essence of sports.

It was difficult to see the players on the women's basketball team after their loss 46-50 to KU the other night. We all knew their season was over, and their dream of playing in the NCAA Tournament, which would have been the first time for many, would have to wait another year.

That extreme emotion was topped only by their jubilation after upsetting Baylor in overtime on Tuesday.

It's amazing how fast emotions can change for athletes this time of year. Ask my friend, though, and he wouldn't trade that up-and-down experience for anything in the world.

► 'PALMETTO' RANKS AS POOR COPY OF QUENTIN TARANTINO'S MASTERY.

CHRIS DEAN
Kansas State Collegian

Imagine what would happen if Quentin Tarantino directed "The Big Easy," and you have the basis behind "Palmetto."

However, Tarantino didn't do it, and the people who did should have been stopped.

In a one-horse Florida beach town, journalist Harry Barber (Woody Harrelson) is released from prison after serving two years for a crime he didn't commit and returns to the loving arms of his successful girlfriend, played by Gina Gershon (sultry vixen from "Showgirls" and "Cocktail").

When Rhea Malroux, a multi-millionaire's seductive new wife (Elisabeth Shue, the innocent girl next door from "The Saint" and "Cocktail"), comes to Barber with a plan to fake the kidnapping of her stepdaughter and extort $500,000 from her husband, he figures the justice department owes him a "Get Out of Jail Free" card and jumps at the easy money.

To further problems, Barber's all-too-helpful friend gives him a job as press liaison for the district attorney's office. His first job: Keep the press off the trail of the missing Malroux child.

In a series of twists and turns that are sometimes predictable and most of the time unexplainable, everyone sleeps with everyone else, everyone double-crosses everyone else, and everyone turns everyone else in to the cops.

By the end of the movie, the list of bad guys is so long, the entire movie could be a political commentary on prison overcrowding, while the only ones who are truly guilty are the writers.

"Palmetto" tries to be a suspenseful drama, a sexy mystery and a farcical comedy, but it is actually just proof that the combination cannot be done.

Throughout most of the movie, the actors seem to be ad-libbing, including scenes where the strutting Shue gets a heel caught between wooden planks and Harrelson, while trying to impress and seduce, runs head-first into a support beam.

The idea of this movie is an excellent whodunit, but in reality, the forces that be just couldn't make it work. Excellent scenery is wasted on cinematographers who seem to have an obsession with speedometers and the directors seem to have wanted just to see the movie finished, leaving in bad visual effects and actors stumbling over lines.

Rated R for language, violence and live humans boiling in acid, this movie is perfect for late-night HBO, but not for the cost of seeing it on the big screen.

Versatile Canadian musicians showcased in McCain concert

CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

A bit of Canada will arrive at K-State tonight.

Quartetto Gelato, a Canadian music group, is scheduled to perform at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium. Quartetto Gelato emerged in 1994, and the group is on its U.S. tour from Feb. 6 to March 15.

Its diverse performance pieces range from showpieces to tangos to gypsy fiddling. Richard Martin, director of McCain, said this is why Quartetto Gelato has remained so popular with audiences around the globe for the past four years.

"They engage audiences," he said.

"If it's a little off-the-wall, what's wrong with that?"

Martin said he enjoyed how the group puts a twist on its music, and that is important in getting the audience involved in the performance.

"Some people think chamber ensembles have to be deadly dull," he said.

"It's important to change the mixes just a little bit, and Quartetto Gelato does just that."

The quartet includes Peter De Sotio, who plays the violin and mandolin and sings tenor in the performance; Claudio Vena, who plays the viola and accordion and arranged four of the pieces in tonight's performance; Cynthia Steljes, who plays the oboe and English horn; and George Meanwell, who plays the cello, guitar and mandolin.

With the plethora of musical instruments and De Sotio's tenor voice, Martin said it's no wonder why the group has gained worldwide popularity.

"There is artistry behind the music. They have a flair for what they do," he said.

"They seem to have a good time while they're doing it, so that's also important."

Included in tonight's performance schedule is "Quartet in B-Flat Major" by Bach and "Entr'acte" by Jacques Ibert.

New session emphasizes movement, therapy to help women battle stress

SARA ZENGER
Kansas State Collegian

Women looking for a creative way to relieve stress and solve problems will soon have a new option.

University Counseling Services and the Department of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance are working together to offer "Moving Through Your Problems," a session of workshops designed to help women work out problems through movement and group therapy.

"We're quite excited about it," said Dorothy Farrand, psychologist at University Counseling Services. "This is the first collaboration between the dance department and the counseling center."

Karen Gingerich, psychology intern at University Counseling Services, said the workshops have two purposes.

"The overriding purpose is to help folks identify areas in their life that have been a problem. The second purpose is to help them express those areas through movement, writing and group therapy," Gingerich said.

The workshops will use journals, movement exercises and discussions about fairy tales to help women identify and solve problems.

They will be once a week and last for 1 1/2 hours.

"There will be an emphasis on improvisational movement, and we will also use traditional and nontraditional fairy stories. Half of the session will involve movement, and half will involve talking and connecting with each other," Farrand said.

Catherine Ostroe, senior in dance and coordinator of the workshops, said these activities are designed to help women take a fresh look at their problems.

"Sometimes there is a reluctance on our part to deal with problems. I think tackling them through indirect ways — fairy tales and movement — is a way to recognize problems through moving or doing. It's also a way to recognize solutions," Ostroe said.

Ostroe said the workshops are open to all women.

"We all deal with stress. This is not limited to any problem. Whatever issues you want to bring are welcome," Ostroe said.

Women who are willing to take risks and be creative with a new form of therapy will benefit from the workshops, Gingerich said.

"People who can identify definite problem areas to work on but feel stuck by just talking about it will benefit. They have to be willing to experiment and see if movement works for them," she said.

Women don't have to be dancers to participate.

"Anyone who can walk or run can dance," Ostroe said.

"We're not teaching women to be dancers, but we're teaching them how to express themselves."

Farrand said she is excited about the results these workshops could have on the women who participate.

"The women involved will get greater self-confidence, the ability to accept and appreciate their own bodies and movement style, and the ability to work with others in a group," she said.

Engineering teams win at competition

SHERYL WILLIAMS
Kansas State Collegian

Two engineering construction teams took first place at the Region IV Associated Schools of Construction competition in February in Kansas City, Mo.

Both teams — the commercial building team and the heavy/highway construction team — had to create engineering organizations before the competition. The teams had 24 hours for their organization to compile data and prepare for a presentation in response to an actual construction problem.

Jim Goddard, associate professor of architectural engineering and construction science, said the students were dealing with a great deal of pressure.

"They have to do the entire schedule, the budget, the plan of action and write a written report. They have to have references, those kinds of things in their reports," Goddard said.

Goddard coached the heavy/highway team, whose project was the Thousand Islands Bridge over the St. Lawrence Seaway in Ontario, Canada. He said his team's challenge was to come up with a solution to replacing the floor deck of the bridge and the substructure, while keeping the two-lane bridge open to traffic.

"The bridge is actually several bridges over the span, because it spans from island to island and then finally over the seaway itself, so it has a suspended span, a truss span, a concrete-arched span and a viaduct section, each one being slightly different," Goddard said.

Goddard said they had to keep both lanes of traffic open during the day and could only shut down one lane at night.

"The real key is that it is a difficult situation to work with, and it takes a lot of technical background to figure out what to do, because there are a lot of options, and some of them don't work," he said.

Mike Hafling, instructor of architectural engineering and construction science, coached the commercial team. His team was challenged with a $5.5 million school building project in Peculiar, Mo. The school was not fully designed and had budget and time constraints.

Hafling said that before the competition his team created its own letterhead, hard-hat stickers, mission statements, vision statements and corporate philosophies.

"They were impressive, very impressive," Hafling said.

He said with all of the paperwork and research necessary to make a presentation within a 24-hour turnaround time, some of the students only got about 30 minutes of sleep.

"I wish that everybody had the chance to go through the process to see what these guys have to put up with," Hafling said. "Their dedication is absolutely superb."

The teams had to compile a 20- to 30-page report and give a 25-minute presentation to a panel of judges, followed by 15 minutes of responding to the judges' questions.

"They have to be on their toes," Goddard said. "They get pretty technical with the questions."

Aaron Townsend, junior in architectural engineering and construction science, competed on the commercial team.

"More than anything, this competition was the best representation of what we do after we graduate from the beginning of getting the drawings to actually landing the job and describing how we'll manage the project," Townsend said.

Goddard said the teams had won three first-place titles and one second-place title in the previous four years the competition had been in existence.

"We're really proud of these guys," he said.

Prosecutors refuse to reopen Sheppard investigation

► CASE THAT INSPIRED 'THE FUGITIVE' CLOSED DESPITE NEW DNA TESTS.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — Prosecutors on Thursday refused to reopen an investigation into the slaying of Dr. Sam Sheppard's wife despite new DNA tests his defenders say finally will clear him of the 1954 killing.

Though she had not seen the test results released at a news conference earlier in the day, county prosecutor Stephanie Tubbs Jones said they would be inadmissible in court because they were run on contaminated, 44-year-old samples.

She also accused Terry Gilbert, lawyer for the couple's only son, Sam Reese Sheppard, of using the press to sway the Ohio Supreme Court.

"All I can say is shame on you, Terry Gilbert," she said.

Gilbert said the tests vindicate Sheppard and implicate Richard Eberling, a window washer at the Sheppard home, in the case that inspired the TV series and movie "The Fugitive." Sheppard, Gilbert said, "is out of it. He is not the murderer of Marilyn Sheppard. ... We now have conclusive evidence that Dr. Sheppard did not kill his wife."

A forensic scientist, working for free on behalf of the younger Sheppard, found that Sheppard's DNA was missing from bloodstains on the doctor's pants and three other places in the couple's suburban Cleveland home, bolstering Sheppard's claim that an intruder killed his wife.

One stain came from a wardrobe door less than two feet away from the bed where Marilyn Sheppard, four months pregnant with the couple's second child, was beaten to death.

Eberling's DNA could be present in all the stains, although it is not certain, said Dr. Mohammad Tahir, a forensics expert from Indianapolis.

Sheppard's body was exhumed in September so tissue samples could be examined by Tahir.

Gilbert said Tubbs Jones should reopen the criminal investigation — this time focusing on Eberling. Sheppard always said a bushy-haired intruder killed his wife and knocked him unconscious after a struggle.

Sam Reese Sheppard, 50, of Oakland, Calif., has been working for years to clear his father's name. He thinks Eberling committed the slaying.

Eberling, who provided DNA samples under court order, is in prison for the 1984 murder of an elderly widow and has denied killing Marilyn Sheppard. He refused interviews Thursday.

Sheppard was found guilty of murder and spent 10 years in prison, until the U.S. Supreme Court overturned his conviction. He was acquitted at a retrial in 1966 and died four years later at age 46.

His estate is suing Ohio, alleging wrongful imprisonment.

The estate could collect about $2 million if the doctor is found innocent, a tougher legal standard than a "not guilty" verdict.

Prosecutors have asked the Ohio Supreme Court to dismiss the suit. A ruling is expected this spring.

Tahir's tests showed that Eberling could not be ruled out as a match for bloodstains from Sheppard's pants, the wardrobe door, a wood chip from a basement stair and a stain on the back porch.

He said Eberling also could not be ruled out as the source of DNA found on two vaginal swabs taken during Marilyn Sheppard's autopsy.

But he could not say for certain that

Track athletes ready to qualify

JOEL WHITE
Kansas State Collegian

Ten K-State track athletes are in Ames, Iowa, today for one more opportunity to qualify for next week's NCAA Indoor Championships in Indianapolis, Ind.

Because the NCAA accepts 16 qualifiers unless there are more than 16 automatic qualifiers in each event, some of the Wildcats' provisional qualifiers are on the bubble.

Two Wildcats, sprinter Randy Melbourne and weight-thrasher Anna Whitham, will compete in the Iowa State Last Chance Qualifier today, trying to ensure a trip to Indianapolis. If successful, Melbourne and Whitham will each be the second Wildcat to qualify for the NCAA Championships in their respective events.

Melbourne is ranked 10th in the nation in the 400-meter dash with a provisional qualifying time of 46.8 seconds. Head coach Cliff Rovelto said although Melbourne's time should qualify for the NCAA Championships, there is a possibility of being knocked out of contention by a number of people in one of this week's Last Chance meets.

"There's no way of knowing, and that's one of the reasons that he's going this week," Rovelto said. "I'd say yes, but you never know."

K-State will be well represented in the NCAA 400-meter dash by Keith Black, an automatic qualifier, and Melbourne, if he stays in the nation's top 16.

Also on the bubble is Whitham, ranked 15th in the nation in the weight throw with a toss of 60-6 1/2.

"That could very well get in, but it's possible that a couple of people could pass her," Rovelto said.

Although the Last Chance Qualifier is made for athletes on the bubble of qualifying for the NCAA Championships, one Wildcat, Renetta Seiler, doesn't need one more chance to qualify.

Seiler will compete in the Last Chance Qualifier despite having several automatic qualifying tosses in the weight throw this season — the longest being 69 3/4.

"She's just going to keep throwing," Rovelto said.

Rovelto said some of the track team's automatic qualifiers will not be in Ames today because they do not need the extra meet for preparation. The Wildcats have six automatic qualifiers.

"It's an individual thing. Some people need it, and some people don't," Rovelto said. "You just have to look at what's best in the long run."

Cats survive 1st round of Big 12 Tournament

agreed. "We definitely felt, offensively, we were getting good shots in the first half," Rhodes said. "They just were not going in."

Even injured guard Duane Davis came off the bench to help. He lasted four minutes.

"The trainer said, 'Let's take a peek at him,'" Asbury said. "And the only way to know if he's ready is to let him go. He tweaked it a little. He didn't re-injure it more, but there's no way he'll play tomorrow."

The shooting trouble seemed to carry into the second half — again, for a while. Junior forward Ty Sims, playing the inside man under the basket, was the Buffaloes' favorite player to foul, and he answered the challenge by sinking 10-of-12 free throws. Sims led the Cats with 20 points and nine rebounds.

"I have to use my body a little more," Sims said. "I have more body than height. I can't turn and shoot like the guys who are 6-7, 6-8. It just gets put back in my face."

Price hit two threes to keep the Buffaloes in the game, but with 15 minutes to go, junior guard Ayome May hit two free throws to give the Cats the lead for good.

The Buffaloes were kept without a field goal for five minutes, hitting four free throws in that span of time. The Cats were on a roll, converting the shot or getting fouled on virtually every possession. K-State's largest lead was 14 points, the span by which the Cats won the game.

"K-State was real hungry," Price said. "They pounded the ball inside. They did a good job changing up defenses, and that kept us on our toes."

Today at noon, the Cats meet No. 3 Kansas for the third time this season. Although the No. 1-seeded Jayhawks are the team to fear in the Big 12, senior guard Aaron Swartzendruber said the Cats are ready for them.

"Every year it comes down to this," Swartzendruber said. "You know, they say you have to go through KU to win this tournament. We might as well get to it. We look forward to this next game. It really is the chance of a lifetime."

Manhattan, KSU create joint bicycle plan

instead of drive. Joel Wentworth, junior in chemical engineering, said he would ride his bicycle more if there were more bicycle racks on campus.

"I ride my bike to get to my classes faster," he said. "The racks near Willard Hall, where most of my classes are, most days are full. I then have to search all over campus to find a spot that is open."

Wentworth said placing new racks in high traffic areas should be a top priority.

"It does me no good if they put more racks in the center of campus," he said. "If I have to ride all the way to the Union, that wastes the time I was planning on saving by riding my bike."

There are about 200 stalls for bicyclists to secure their bicycles in the free-speech zone. Between classes, the area near the free-speech zone and the K-State Student Union is one of the busiest areas on campus for pedestrians and bicyclists.

Donato Lipari, junior in mechanical engineering, said the path that leads to the area north of Hale Library, which is supposed to be a dismount zone for bicycles, is where he sees the most potential for danger, but all areas are dangerous.

"There are many intersections where there could be an accident between pedestrians and cyclists," Lipari said. "Enforcement of a bicycle traffic rule, and a bike-only trail through the campus, not around it, would go a long way to protect both cyclists and pedestrians."

Chris Heeley, sophomore in interior architecture, said campus planners should consider students for whom a bicycle is the only way to get around campus and Manhattan.

"Whoever is in position to make some changes should consider real solutions, not just aesthetically pleasing ones," he said. "There are plenty of bike racks, but most are not near buildings in the heart of campus."

"There is a bike lane, but it doglegs through campus. We need a path or system that will simply take us from point A to point B, whether or not we are walking or riding our bikes."

Richard Lippincott, sophomore in interior architecture, said the creation of a path that is separate from automobiles and pedestrians should be considered.

"The bike lane that runs in front of Anderson Hall is a joke," he said. "On one side, you have people walking and on the other, you have cars zipping by."

"If someone steps out to cross the street or a car decides to turn at the last moment, then the cyclist is put in a sticky situation. Either you run into a crowd of people, or you get personal with the front end of a Ford," Lippincott said.

Student library privilege fee fails to receive approval in Student Senate

the effort needs to come from the students toward educating the Legislature about why we need more money for the library and encouraging our administration to provide more funding for the library," Morris-Hardeman said.

But Arts and Sciences Sen. Kimberly Peschka, who co-wrote the bill, said more state funding won't come from the conservative Kansas Legislature. All other revenue sources have been tried and exhausted, she said.

"I really don't see any other solution but a student fee," she said. "If you have some wonderful idea about how to generate this money now, tell me about it, tell Dean Hobrock about it, tell Jon Wefald about it."

More senators could have voted on the measure, but the approval of five Senate appointments from the Graduate School, recommended by the Graduate School Council, was voted down 18-20 at the beginning of the meeting. Since October, five Graduate School Senate seats have been open.

Carney said senators rejected the appointments because they wanted to decide the library fee issue before adding the Graduate School representatives.

"We had hoped to decide the library issue beforehand and then appoint them if they wanted to," he said. "At the time, when we decided to not appoint them and they stood up and left, that said to me that they weren't interested in serving on this body."

Education Sen. Mark Rogers said not allowing the Graduate School to be represented in the vote was hypocritical.

"Student Senate always opens their doors and says, 'We want you to be involved in student government.' But when students want to be involved, we shut the door and say, 'Get out. You can't be in Student Senate,'" Rogers said.

"No matter why the want to be involved, Senate said, 'You can't represent your college. You can't be involved,'" he said.

Education Sen. Jamie Wetig said keeping the graduate students out of Senate was politically inspired.

"It was a political movement to keep graduate students from voting," he said.

After the library issue failed, Senate unanimously approved the senators' appointment.

A rare March blizzard kept Manhattan residents bundled inside Sunday, shutting down many city streets and businesses. Those who were brave enough to venture outside were greeted by 40 mph winds and 6-foot snow drifts — all this just 2 weeks before spring break.

Storm shuts city down; crews continue cleanup

JON KURCHE
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan residents were warned to remain inside Sunday as the city and university dealt with a severe winter storm.

High winds and large accumulations of snow made things difficult to control, said Riley County Public Works assistant director Rod Meredith.

"It's a complete whiteout, we've got drifts that are six feet high," Meredith said. Riley County Public Works had all eight trucks and all seven motor carrier routes running to help with the cleanup.

A few drivers who ventured out during the storm found themselves in ditches. Meredith reported that as many as 18 vehicles had to be rescued, as well as one state plow and three county trucks. Four roads were scheduled to be closed through the night, including two asphalt roads — Riley County 388 and parts of 378, as well as a few gravel county roads, including Riley County 362 West and 897 North. Parts of Interstate 70 were also reported to be closed.

On campus, Kimball Avenue was closed between Denison Avenue and North Manhattan Avenue. The K-State Student Union was closed because of the weather. A few drivers had trouble on campus roads, said Jason Blackburn, dispatcher with the K-State Police.

"We've had a few that have been sliding around, but not too many," Blackburn said.

He reported that campus crews were working to clear the roads and sidewalks.

"We are doing our best. We'll have to wait and see," Blackburn said.

He said roads today were expected to be the same as they were Sunday, because of the continually blowing snow and the low temperatures.

The Weather Channel referred to the storm as "near blizzardlike," as winds reportedly gusted up to 40 mph during the day. This further hampered cleanup efforts.

"Because of the blizzard conditions, we can't even see. You can't tell where you're going," Meredith said. He said that partly for this reason, cleanup crews stopped working on rural roads early Sunday evening and merely concentrated on heavier-traffic areas.

"We're gonna run until midnight with the urban routes around here, but it's probably the rural routes we won't clear until 4 a.m."

Meredith said the storm was expected but not easy to prepare for.

"It's just a big storm, but we knew it was coming. We're trying to do all of our main arterial roads. It's not good," Meredith said.

Winter storm closes several roads throughout Midwest, claims 1 life

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kansans coped Sunday with a powerful winter storm that dropped 10 inches of snow in some spots, made travel treacherous and forced the shutdown of hundreds of miles of main highways.

Bitter north winds of 20 to 35 mph pushed the snow into drifts six feet high and higher in parts of northeast Kansas while cutting visibility to near zero.

Interstate 70 was shut down Sunday afternoon along a 60-mile stretch from Topeka west to Junction City, where some motorists waited in stranded vehicles for rescue, the Kansas Highway Patrol said.

Snow-packed pavement and near-blizzard conditions also forced the closing of U.S. Highway 75 between Topeka and the Nebraska border, and the highway wasn't expected to reopen until today, officials said. Parts of other main roads through north-central and northeastern Kansas were also closed.

At least one Kansas traffic death was blamed on the storm, which began lumbering eastward from the Colorado border late Saturday afternoon.

Expansion planned for president's home

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

At Thursday's meeting of the Campus Development Committee, it was announced that the President's Residence will be expanded this summer.

The campus landmark, built in 1922, will see the addition of a new two-car garage. The current garage will be converted into an informal living area. The project is estimated to cost between $130,000 and $150,000 and will be funded totally by private money.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said the house doesn't offer enough informal living space for when the president has overnight guests.

The house is arranged with public rooms on the first floor, such as a large living room and a small dining room with kitchen facilities, and the president's private living space on the second floor. Now, the informal living areas are a small combined kitchen, dining and living space that will be converted to just kitchen and dining space with the project proposal.

Funding for the project will come from a group of private individuals calling themselves the Friends of Wilson Court.

"The Friends of Wilson Court have indicated they would be willing to contribute private money to expand the house," Rawson said.

Rawson said he is unaware of who the Friends are, except that some of them are occasional visitors to Wilson Court.

Wilson Court is a state building, therefore the ### Group plants trees around Riley County landfill

JOE HURLA
Kansas State Collegian

About 40 people planted 5,600 young cottonwood trees at 8 a.m. Saturday in a field near the Riley County landfill.

The group, consisting of officers and initiates of Tau Beta Pi, K-State's engineering honor society, planted the trees to help curb the effects of possible leakage from the landfill into the city's water supply.

"The basic problem is that when there is a lot of rain, this whole area floods," said Larry Erickson, director of the Center for Hazardous Substance Research and coordinator of the event. "Since there is so much water, it can't all evaporate, so it seeps into the ground water, along with whatever chemicals it may pick up from the landfill.

"What these trees will do is, they will absorb the water and hold it in them until such time as they can evaporate it into the air."

With this problem facing them and a solution in mind, a group of K-State engineering students designed the project, which they hoped would not only solve the problem but also be cost-effective.

"We estimated the normal cost of each tree to be two dollars, installed. But we've done it much cheaper because all of these trees were found along Tuttle Creek," Erickson said.

Student labor also helped keep the cost of the project down. All of the students who helped with the project were volunteers.

Elizabeth Verderber, junior in chemical engineering and vice president of Tau Beta Pi, was in charge of organizing the labor for the event.

"We require all of our new initiates to participate in a service project, and most of them were here today," she said. "My biggest fear was whether or not people would be able to get up so early. I'm kind of surprised, but I think everyone made it."

After everyone was accounted for and a brief

The answers to those questions, which are printed on Page 8, should include a disclaimer that was omitted accidentally.

The disclaimer should read, "Because other factors are involved with all five issues, the answers to yes/no questions might not portray candidates' opinions completely."

Speech to address paranormal research, phenomena, UFOs on Tuesday in Union

Journalist and lecturer Michael H. Brown will present "Science, Prophecy and the Supernatural," at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Little Theatre.

The lecture will address Brown's research of the paranormal in the United States and abroad, as well as scientific investigations of Ouija boards, UFOs and miracles.

Sara Rocha, member of the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee that is sponsoring the lecture, said Brown's speech will be different from other lectures this year.

"People have a big interest in UFOs," she said. "Brown will be interesting because he will talk about things that are out of the ordinary."

The speech will also cover topics such as angels, haunted houses, possession, near-death experiences and claims of weeping statues of the Virgin Mary.

Brown said every walk of life is reporting some form of paranormal stimuli, and the public is interested.

His lecture will discuss how the events connect, how much information is credible and what paranormal events say about the future.

The lecture will focus on the bridge between science and the unknown as people face these questions at the end of the millennium.

The lecture is free to the public and will be followed by a question-and-answer session.

Whitewater figure James McDougal dies in federal medical prison Sunday at age 57

FORT WORTH, Texas — James McDougal, the flamboyant Arkansas savings and loan operator whose business dealing with President and Hillary Clinton spurred the Whitewater investigation, died Sunday in a federal medical prison. He was 57.

After years as the Clintons' staunchest defender, McDougal became a key cooperating witness for Whitewater prosecutors in 1996, and his death will significantly alter the complexion of the four-year-old criminal investigation.

The loss was immediately apparent as Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr huddled late Sunday afternoon with his prosecution team in Washington, D.C., as word of McDougal's death spread across country.

Though McDougal became a cooperating witness in 1996 and offered the prosecutor potentially damaging information about the Clintons, his former business partner offered kind words from the White House on Sunday.

"I am saddened to learn about Jim McDougal's death today," Clinton said Sunday. "I have good memories of the years we worked together in Arkansas, and I extend my condolences to his family."

McDougal suffered from a variety of ailments, including heart disease and blocked arteries. He died at John Peter Smith Hospital of cardiac arrest, the U.S. Justice Department said.

The medical examiner listed the time of death as 12:01 p.m.

McDougal was serving a three-year prison sentence for fraud when he was stricken.

Monty Python makes return appearance, might tour U.S., England in near future

ASPEN, Colo. — It was a full Monty Python, that is, if you counted Graham Chapman's ashes.

The legendary English comedy group that started smashing taboos three decades ago appeared on stage together Saturday night for the first time since 1981, announcing plans for a reunion tour and showing that nothing — even the death of a member — is sacred.

John Cleese, Eric Idle, Michael Palin, Terry Jones and Terry Gilliam appeared at the U.S. Comedy Arts Festival with an urn, ostensibly containing the remains of Chapman, who died of AIDS in 1989. What was billed as a tribute to Chapman turned into a performance when his pals knocked over the urn and scrambled over each other to sweep and vacuum up their friend.

Later, Palin chatted with the urn, chiding Chapman to keep quiet.

In between comedy bits, the group announced plans for a reunion tour next year to mark the 30th anniversary of "Monty Python's Flying Circus," the British Broadcasting Corp. show that offended many and became a worldwide hit.

Student turns negatives into positives

CLAUDETTE RILEY
Kansas State Collegian

A violent, traumatic experience in the life of a friend shortly after starting at K-State served as a wake-up call for a senior in social work and women's studies. She has now dedicated her life to serving others.

Lori Kieffer said she learned to stress the importance of turning negatives into positives by being there as her friend dealt with rape.

"It was hard for me because I went through the whole thing with her. It felt really natural to be there, and I was there with her a lot and learned how painful it was for her," she said. "It was very difficult for me to watch everything that happened to her, but this amazing person came out of it."

Kieffer said her wake-up call came when she realized how many women are victimized and have to endure the pain of rebuilding their lives.

The experience also made Kieffer realize she was not indestructible. Kieffer said she embraced the freedom of college after graduating from high school in Minneapolis, Kan., in 1995.

"I had a typical freshman year, too much partying," she said. "I was going out three nights a week."

Enrolled as a business major, Kieffer said she had an identity crisis about the direction of her life. She took an Introduction to Women's Studies class, 30 hours of training at the Crisis Center and then changed her major to social work.

"I was floating before I found my major. At first it was a decision, but once I got involved, I grew a passion for it. I knew this was right because it feels so good to help people," she said. "I feel so comfortable. I've never second-guessed this choice."

Kieffer's decision to be involved in social work coincided with her decision to become more active in her church. The ability to help others and see positives come from bad situations also helps bring Kieffer closer to God.

"My faith is now my strength, and I do the things I do for God," she said. "I really enjoy serving people, but I also know I serve the people for God."

Her involvement with St. Isidore's University Chapel has steadily increased. She attends classes as a sponsor with a friend converting to Catholicism and reads scripture during Mass.

For the second year, Kieffer is participating in Spring Break Alternative and will return to Father Carr's Place 2 B, a homeless shelter and teen center in Wisconsin.

During spring break last year, Kieffer and other volunteers lived in the shelter, cooked in the soup kitchen, cleaned and hung out with young people in the teen center.

"The shelter wasn't what I expected. I had an image of a warehouse with cots, but it was colorful and more than a place where people could come in from the cold," Kieffer said.

"Their soup kitchen was different than I thought. I don't know if we ever served soup, and it was a family environment."

Her focus is on helping women and sexual abuse victims, but she said she sees so much potential in children and wisdom in older people.

"I really enjoy meeting people and getting to know them and where they're coming from," she said.

"There are no easy answers. No one chooses to be homeless. Something got them to that point, and I want to help identify that and help."

Kieffer said she was looking for ways to get involved through K-State when she saw an advertisement for Alpha Phi Omega, a service fraternity.

As secretary for Alpha Phi Omega, Kieffer said she is committed to having a successful program on domestic violence and sexual abuse during National Service Week, the first week in November.

Kieffer said she wants to organize a self-defense workshop and help educate young people on ways to avoid being a target of abuse, domestic violence or kidnapping.

"I am really interested in educating students on campus and telling them how they can educate themselves," Kieffer said. "It's also a service week, so the week will provide students ways to get involved."

She's also involved in Social Work Organization. In addition to performing service activities, the members receive information about legislation, internships and field placement.

Kieffer said she has learned from others in her service fraternity and wants to be a positive influence on others.

"I like to set an example. If they can see the excitement in me, it might pique their interest," Kieffer said. "When they see that smile on my face, they might want to know what's going on."

Since her freshman year, Kieffer has worked 20 hours a week in the annual giving department in charge of the Telefund at the KSU Foundation.

Kieffer said the secret to handling her activities is finding balance in her life between service, faith, health, studying and a social life.

"I think balance is so, so important," Kieffer said. "I juggle by learning to say no and that it's OK to take time off and do nothing but watch TV or go talk with friends."

LORI KIEFFER, SENIOR IN SOCIAL WORK AND WOMEN'S STUDIES, SAID HER DECISION TO BE INVOLVED IN SOCIAL WORK COINCIDED WITH HER DECISION TO BECOME MORE INVOLVED IN HER CHURCH.

Library funding, K-State's relationship with city among topics at debate

► PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES DISCUSS PLATFORMS, TOPICS OF CONCERN AT DEBATE FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

Funding for Hale Library, K-State's athletic program and the university's relationship with the city of Manhattan were the subjects of debate Friday in the Union Courtyard.

Candidates for student body president and vice president fielded questions and commented on their opponents' platforms during the event, which was sponsored by Union Program Council.

A student fee to fund Hale Library was first on the list of questions. The proposed fee failed in Student Senate the night before the debate.

Bret Glendening, senior in agricultural economics and political science, and Trey Hock, graduate student in English, were the only candidates who supported the fee.

"Shayne (Castelano) and I have always supported the library, and Shayne and I both voted for the library fee last night," said Glendening, who is also an agriculture student senator.

The other candidates said they didn't think students should be locked into paying for the library without a definite long-term plan from the Kansas Legislature and KSU Foundation.

Tracey Mann, junior in political science and agricultural economics, and his running mate Andy Macklin, junior in mechanical engineering, supported the library fee in the Collegian, but voted against the bill in Senate on Thursday.

The two explained why they had changed their stance.

"Andy and I are not in favor of the library fee yet. We don't think all the other options have been thoroughly looked into," Mann said. "Funding Hale Library is a huge priority for Andy and me, but we don't think it's time for students to foot the bill yet."

Candidates also responded to questions about the effect of K-State's athletic program on academics.

Chris Van Tyle, senior in animal sciences and industry, said though athletics overshadow academics sometimes, they are not detrimental to academics.

John Stucky, junior in agricultural technical management and Van Tyle's running mate, said the two are complementary.

"They are perfect complements at a university like K-State. Athletics brings us attention in the media, but academics is the reason why we're here," Stucky said.

Hock said the athletic program isn't detrimental to K-State's academics, but it might steal the spotlight.

"Athletics is not going to get in the way of students doing well at the university," he said. "Detrimental is too strong of a word. Overshadow is much better."

Glendening said he doesn't think athletics affect academics, but privilege fee money that goes to athletics should go to the library.

"We have a serious problem in our library. We don't have a serious problem in our athletic department," Glendening said.

"Why are we paying a privilege fee to the athletic department when we can be giving that money to the library?"

Toward the end of the debate, audience members were allowed to ask questions.

One audience member asked if there should be limits to the amount of money candidates can spend in elections.

"I totally support having a limit on the T-shirt issue," said Greg Davis, senior in marketing and management information systems, referring to the omission of a clause in the election code that kept T-shirts from being an election expense.

Senate later reinstated the clause, and the T-shirts don't count toward candidates' spending limits.

"There should be a limit because the people with the most money can do the most advertising. I hope they change that ASAP," Davis said.

Glendening, Castelano get Collegian endorsement

The people willing to work the hardest to represent and voice the concerns of the students are Bret Glendening and Shayne Castelano.

This ticket exhibited a genuine dissatisfaction with the status quo and their platform of fresh ideas is inclusive for all students. Their realistic, no-nonsense answers were as refreshing as their pro-student approach to all campus issues.

An unwavering support for Hale Library funding and firm commitment to increase and maintain open communication between student groups was impressive.

Support of quality education and reduction of student loan debt exemplifies their vision to leave students better off in a year. The implementation of a citywide bus system would alleviate congested campus parking.

A common-sense plan of action backed up with their experience equals the best bet for students. This approachable team will be a strong advocate for students to the administration, Kansas Legislature and Manhattan community.

Greg Davis/Jim Boomer

While the Davis/Boomer ticket doesn't have a shortage of good ideas, accomplishing them in one year would be impossible. Their answers to increase campus involvement through the creation of numerous committees, while well-thought out, are not feasible.

Their leadership skills are unquestionable and ideas to empower college councils are impressive.

However, establishing more bureaucracy and governance by committee is not the answer.

Their campaign is polished but long-term campus initiatives leave little room for student input.

Trey Hock/Bill Kraai

This serious ticket exemplifies frustration and a feeling of powerlessness from those not active in the Student Governing Association.

This straight-shooting pair would definitely work for the benefit of students and choose their causes wisely.

They displayed a thoughtful understanding of campus issues but failed to offer realistic solutions to problems. Lack of leadership experience and a vague understanding of Student Senate would hamper achievement of their platform.

Their plan to campaign for student input all year and maintain funding for areas of academic excellence should be considered by other candidates.

Tracey Mann/Andy Macklin

The Mann/Macklin ticket has experience in three different living groups, a proactive stance and some achievable goals. However, their issues show little innovation and fail to address the needs of all students. Their passive wait-and-see stance on a student library fee, solutions for parking concerns and opinion on the alumni center failed to inspire confidence in their leadership.

Their ideas for improving the student-adviser relationship, book swap system and Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex parking permits are interesting but narrow.

Chris Van Tyle/John Stucky

While we chose not to endorse the Van Tyle/Stucky ticket, we are impressed with their integrity and accountability. Their commitment to improving campus safety is genuine but other platform issues needed definition and specifics.

A hard-working pair, the campus would benefit from their representation in SGA. However, they are not the best candidates for the student body president and student body vice president positions.

These opinions reflect the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board. Candidates were given the opportunity to participate in interviews with the editorial board, which allowed them the chance to explain their platforms and answer questions. All presidential tickets accepted.

WELCOME TO MY LIFE AS A BATFREAK

Money, black leather and the Batmobile are enough to get any girl worked up

Hello. My name is Lisa, and I am a Batfreak.

During the wee early morning hours of Student Senate last week after discussing the library fee and single transferable vote for the umpteenth-millionth time, I face an even worse crisis — writer's block. Now, everyone suffers from a case of writer's block and deals with it differently. The way I deal with it is by getting grouchy and grouchy.

So, I will go ahead and apologize to everyone I yelled at. To end this horrible story, my writer's block was cured at 9:15 Friday morning. I was cured by a friend who came in and begged me tremendously about what I was going to write.

After storming off to class, the light bulb in my head came on. I was going to write about what I receive the most e-mails about: the reason my e-mail address is Batman. So I guess we will say this column is dedicated to the fans. Thanks goes to my friend for his undying concern for my columns.

My e-mail address is a response to what has become a 10-year fascination/obsession with Batman. The fascination began the day I saw the only financially successful and critically acclaimed Batman movie starring Michael Keaton and Jack Nicholson. I still remember the day well. Picture Lisa sitting in the movie theater all by her lonesome with her buttered popcorn and Dr. Pepper when the Caped Crusader appeared. I just stared at the screen in awe and wonder and have not been the same since that wonderful night with my favorite superhero.

The reasons I like Batman are totally superficial. He is not faster than a speeding bullet or able to leap tall buildings in a single bound. But he has got the three things that would make any girl swoon — clothes, money and the car. What girl in her right mind does not like the look of a man in black leather driving a really fast car with more money in his utility belt than 10 Bill Gateses? That is what is called the complete package. Plus, he rides Gotham City of all the evils of society.

Since then, I have become the biggest Batfreak since the beginning of humanity. This obsession revolves around three Batpossessions that I consider priceless. In fact, I might have them buried with me.

I got possession No. 1 from a joint effort made by my sister and me. I made her eat countless boxes of Batman cereal so I could save enough proofs of purchase to get a Batman bank. I just wish it were big enough to keep all of Bruce Wayne's money.

Possession No. 2 is a gift from my parents. They were concerned that I would not be warm enough during the winter when I was about 17, so they bought the greatest comforter for my bed. Yes, you guessed it. It is a Batman comforter. That comforter has never failed me. I always sleep as snug as a bug and have wonderful dreams. Thanks, Mom and Dad.

The third, and my most favorite Batpossession, is also a gift. This one is from my grandma, and I have not been able to use it properly because my sister/roommate refuses to let me keep it in our apartment. But don't worry, I will be using it very soon. This great Batgift is a Batman night-light. The neatest part about this night-light is that it stands about 2 1/2 feet tall.

Sometimes when I go home, I go upstairs to my room, sit in the dark, plug in my huge light and just chill.

It is the next best thing to having an actual Batsignal like the one Commissioner Gordon uses to get help.

So, that is my story of the ultimate Batman obsession.

Having Batman as my e-mail address just seems like the perfect tribute to a superhero who has provided me with food, warmth and relaxation over the years.

I hope there is never another story like this.

The results are years of enjoyment for me, but my sister is still searching for that Batsupport Group to deal with Batfreaks.

Campus crosswalks need better lighting

Editor,
I am surprised the accident in which an individual was struck by a car was the first one I have heard about since coming to K-State last semester. The crosswalks along Denison Avenue are poorly lit, and it is difficult, at best, to see people walking across the street at night.

While this concerns me, it is not the only problem that exists. People walking across the streets around campus, even at crosswalks, need to be sure that the cars realize they are there. I have seen several people dart out into the street without even looking both ways to see if cars are coming. Pedestrians not only need to look both ways, but they also need to determine if the drivers acknowledge their intention to walk across the street.

The university needs to install brighter lights at these crosswalks. It is unfortunate this has to be a reactive instead of a proactive measure.

Failure of student fee for library upsetting

Editor,
As a graduate of K-State who voted to create, and subsequently paid, a student fee to fund the expansion of Hale Library, I was very disappointed to read that Student Senate recently rejected a plan to create a similar fee to help fund the library.

It long has been known that our library ranks at the bottom of the Big 12, which is simply shameful. I, along with many other students, voted to pay a fee for a library that we knew at the time would not be completed until after we were long gone. I have not seen the inside of the library since improvements were completed, but I am proud I had the foresight to ensure that future K-State students wouldn't have to suffer through the dismal experience of looking for books and periodicals in the dreaded stacks.

After earlier rejecting the student fee to expand the football stadium, this latest vote comes as a real slap in the face to those of us who made sacrifices for today's students. Don't forget that nothing is free, especially a college education.

Today's failures to plan will only be compounded by the years, and someone will eventually have to undo the damage caused by a short-sighted and selfish student body.

Columnist shows lack of understanding

Editor,
Based on Brandi Hertig's March 6 article denouncing the greek system and its activities, it is apparent that her disdain for fraternities and sororities goes much deeper than the perceived inconveniences caused by Homecoming Bid Week.

Realizing, of course, that the opinion section of the newspaper is the proper forum for stating one's personal feelings about various subjects, I wonder why Hertig singled out the greek system as the subject for her most recent rantings. What is so perfect about her approach to college life that qualifies her as the judge of everyone else on campus? Is she going to tell us next that the debate team annoys her as well?

Or that she's tired of that pesky band? How about Black Student Union? Is she also tired of hearing about its activities? Too visible for her perhaps? I'll bet she's especially put off by the football team, what with all the traffic jams on game days.

Maybe she didn't realize that one of the greatest things about college is the diversity created by all the different kinds of people and all the different ways of taking in the college experience. I'm sorry we can't all be cynical newspaper columnists, but the last time I checked, there was no shortage of those folks, either. What Hertig apparently hasn't learned is that hers is not the only way of life at K-State.

It takes all kinds, and her criticism of the greek system merely proves she has failed to pick up on one of the most important and valuable lessons anyone can bring away from college: acceptance and understanding of people who aren't just like yourself.

Reader questions graduate senators

Editor,
While the actions of Student Senate regarding the approval of five Graduate School senators at the most recent meeting might have been questionable, I believe the circumstances of the appointments should also be questioned.

Of the nine Senate seats apportioned to Graduate School representatives, four have been vacant since last year's elections in March, and one has been vacant since a senator resigned last semester. I find it very suspicious that all five seats happen to be filled on the day of the Senate's consideration of a library privilege fee.

I appreciate that they were motivated to make their voices known, but I question why they didn't seek out these seats sooner in the semester, which would have allowed them to participate in the full legislative process. Showing up only for the vote is very disrespectful — especially to the four student senators who have dedicated their limited time and worked hard all year long representing graduate students.

In addition, as a graduate student, I question how well I am being represented by these five appointees. The appointments are made by the Graduate Student Council, a body that is not directly elected by the graduate student body. All other college councils are elected. Members of the Graduate Student Council must come from University Activities Board-recognized graduate student groups. Because my department doesn't have one, we are not well represented by the Graduate Student Council.

If these new senators were concerned with serving and representing graduate students, why didn't they stay at the meeting? Because I am concerned with our state's lack of support for maintaining high-quality research at K-State, I personally remained to hear the debate about the library fee. It appeared to me that the appointment of the new senators was simply a political move by the Graduate Student Council to sway the vote.

Increased state funds for library unrealistic

Editor,
In reference to Lisa Dethloff's column March 3, in which she asks the Kansas Legislature to "please consider additional funding," maybe if Dethloff were to say "pretty please with sugar and a cherry on top," her dream of magical state funding might come true.

Unfortunately, the state is only going to front, through a redirection of funds, a third of the cost to maintain the bare minimum of subscriptions that the library needs to survive through 13.8-percent inflation. The three-legged stool is the last option available to the students of K-State, and turning our backs on the library that we already paid to build is as loony as the notion that the state government cares if we suffer.

The fee proposed Monday in the Privilege Fee Committee will only last two years to allow time to persuade the Legislature to provide the funds necessary to sustain our library as number 11 in the Big 12 (currently at 58-percent funding as compared to peer institutions). If number 11 out of 12 is the quality you want from the cornerstone of your education then vote against this, Lisa.

But in the real world where schools such as the University of Nebraska are charging 45 cents-per-credit-hour to stock their libraries, we must understand that the funding isn't coming from somewhere else. The Legislature has watched us suffer before, and they will be no more inclined to help us if we walk away from our library today.

In the end, we are all responsible for our own education, regardless of who is paying for it.

This fee is merely a temporary fix intended to buy the time necessary to find other sources of funding. The bill also demands that the state and the KSU Foundation, parts of the three-legged stool, provide matching funds or the fee is terminated.

Philosophically, we wouldn't be paying $9 million for K-State Student Union expansion or the $5 million we already spent on the library to build it. A building certainly isn't a privilege and our education is not a privilege, but the quality we desire from that education is now up to us.

Stand on your principle, Dethloff — it will leave our library as a resource for high school students, as our own students will be traveling to Lawrence to complete their studies. Vote for it and it's less than 10 bucks a semester for two years to keep our library stocked with the subscriptions that we need.

Jeremy Clagys
arts and sciences senator, co-author of Bill 97/98/122

Anderson bass pond stolen from history

Editor,
I am shocked and outraged that columnist Lisa Dethloff would partake in intellectual thievery, as was the case in Monday's column on party platforms. She introduced several ideas that would leave unsuspecting readers with the belief that she created them. Specifically, the idea of a bass pond to improve campus aesthetics is nothing short of plagiarism.

As any seasoned K-Stater should know, the bass pond was the genius of Ed Skoog, who served as student body president from 1993-94.

Dethloff, I know Ed Skoog. Ed Skoog is a friend of mine, you ma'am, are no Ed Skoog. If you're going to continue writing for this fine paper, elevate the level of your column to avoid such a blatant disregard for journalistic integrity.

Benching Dies defies due process of law

Editor,
There used to be a time when people were judged innocent until proven guilty in a court of law, not by public or peer scrutiny. I am not here to tell Tom Asbury that he should have played Manny Dies in any of the final games. But his actions seem to have shifted the presumption of innocence usually granted to anyone dealing with a criminal problem.

Sure, Dies is on probation. But even people on probation must go through the criminal justice system like anybody else.

Asbury's actions are not a good example to follow. Benching Dies does nothing to deal with the criminal charges being brought against him.

It seems to be working in favor of shifting the presumption of guilt to "guilty, until you have proven you're innocent."

Wildcats fail to pull off upset in Big 12 Tournament

The Hawks then went on their own 10-2 run. But their scoring efforts were disrupted when LaFrentz air-balled the first of two free throws because of a shoulder injury.

Hawks starter Billy Thomas sat the game out because of a groin pull. Kansas coach Roy Williams said his team was suffering.

"It's like a M.A.S.H. unit in the locker room," Williams said. "We're just having a tough time healing right now. It's not the best time of the year to be banged up."

Nevertheless, the Hawks continued scoring.

Cat junior point guard Chris Griffin came alive at the 9:40 mark and hit a three to spur the Cats' offense. At the half, the Cats were down by four, 32-28.

"We didn't shoot well, but I give them credit," Coach Tom Asbury said. "I thought we did what was necessary on the defensive end of the floor. We just struggled offensively."

At the beginning of the second half, the Cats' offensive luck continued. May, who was two-of-eight in the first half, launched a three-pointer to put the Cats down by one. Griffin connected on one of two free throws to tie the game.

"We were down at the time, and it's a good shot for me," Griffin said. "I was feeling good in the game."

A long jumper by senior guard Aaron Swartzendruber gave the Cats their first lead of the game. It was the only time Swartzendruber would score. He was one-of-10, with five rebounds and four assists for the game.

The lead switched hands six times in six minutes. Rhodes tied the game for the third time with a three at the 12:20 mark, but the Cats hit another three-minute scoring skid. By this time, the Hawks were up by nine.

The Cats kept the Hawks' scoring in check, never allowing more than a nine-point margin and closing that in the last minutes. A Dies layup with 2:18 remaining was the last Cat point scored. Both May and Rhodes missed three times from the perimeter in the last minute.

"I think we played really hard," May said. "It was just a lot of small things like fouls and turnovers."

The Cats were led in scoring by Griffin with 14 points. May added 13, and Dies had 11 points. The Cats' bench scored 30 of the team's total points.

Is quality, affordable health care at Lafene Health Center important to you?

SHAC
Student Health Advisory Committee

SHAC is an SGA committee made up primarily of students just like you who serve as a voice of the student body regarding health issues at K-State.

We are routinely called upon to evaluate important issues such as student insurance, the student health fee, and the Lafene Health Center budget, and then to present our recommendations to student government.

For that reason, it's important that we recruit committed, enthusiastic individuals who want to make a difference.

Applications are available at the Student Activities office in the Union or at Lafene. Application deadline is 5pm, March 13 at the Student Activities office in the Union.

SPORTS ROUNDUP

Sports Roundup is a daily dose of the latest scores, stats and news from the world of sports outside of K-State. Compiled from Associated Press reports.

NCAA Men's top-25 hoops

No. 4 North Carolina 83, No. 1 Duke 68
GREENSBORO, N.C. — No. 4 North Carolina won its 15th Atlantic Coast Conference tournament Sunday by beating No. 1 Duke 83-68, capping a three-day run in which they defeated all three teams they lost to during the regular season.

Antawn Jamison, playing with a painful groin injury, was the hero as he has been all season for the Tar Heels (30-3), scoring 22 points and grabbing a season-high 18 rebounds.

Shammond Williams, who scored 25 points in North Carolina's semifinal overtime victory against Maryland, added 19 points as the Tar Heels defended their ACC title.

Roshown McLeod led Duke (29-3) with 24 points and Chris Carrarell had 18, but the Blue Devils had another horrid shooting day — their third straight in the ACC post-season. Duke shot 33 percent and was only 11-of-32 on three-pointers.

The Tar Heels used a 13-0 second-half run to pull away and the win gave coach Bill Guthridge an ACC crown in his first season replacing Dean Smith and moves North Carolina's record against Duke in ACC finals to 6-2.

No. 17 Michigan 76, No. 9 Purdue 67

CHICAGO — Robert Traylor had 24 points and 13 rebounds to earn MVP honors as the Wolverines won the inaugural Big Ten Tournament.

Maceo Baston added 16 points for the Wolverines (24-8), who won their 13th conference title but first since 1986.

The Wolverines will take a six-game winning streak into the NCAA tournament.

Brad Miller had 23 points, 10 rebounds and eight assists for Purdue (26-7), which failed in its bid for a record 22nd Big Ten championship. Fellow senior Chad Austin, who had 41 points in Purdue's first two tournament games, scored only six on two-for-14 shooting.

After going 23-for-41 from three-point range in their first two games, the Wolverines were only five-for-15 Sunday. Instead, they won by pounding the ball inside to the 6-foot-8 Traylor, who simply couldn't be stopped when he caught the ball in the low post. He was 12-for-16 from the field, completing the tournament at 26-for-41. He also pulled down 38 rebounds in three games.

No. 3 Kansas 72, Oklahoma 58

KANSAS CITY, Mo.

Paul Pierce scored 26 points and took charge in the second half to lead a 23-6 run that gave the Jayhawks (34-3) their second straight Big 12 Tournament title. With shooting guard Billy Thomas out for the third straight game with a groin injury, Ryan Robertson was shifted from his normal point guard position to off-guard and he had 10 points, going two-of-four from three-point range. T.J. Pugh, a 6-foot-8 defensive specialist averaging 5.9 points a game, scored 12 points and had six rebounds, while center Raef LaFrentz finished with nine points and nine rebounds.

Corey Brewer led Oklahoma with 15 points, while Evan Wiley had 12 points and 11 rebounds.

No. 7 Kentucky 86, No. 15 South Carolina 56

ATLANTA — The Wildcats won the Southeastern Conference Tournament for the sixth time in seven years with their third straight double-figure victory.

Tournament MVP Wayne Turner scored 18 points and Allen Edwards, who missed the semifinal while attending his mother's funeral, returned to add 15 for Kentucky (29-4).

Kentucky won its three tournament games by an average of 22 points, the biggest blowout coming against Eastern Division runner-up South Carolina (23-7).

Kentucky guard Jeff Sheppard didn't play in the championship game because of a sprained ankle.

Turner was seven-of-17 from the field, including a couple of three-pointers, and had four assists, while Edwards, who missed the final regular-season game, rejoined the team for Friday's quarterfinal game, then left again for his mother's funeral Saturday, had five assists and three steals.

BJ McKie, who had a tournament-high 37 points against Mississippi in the semifinals, scored 12 against Kentucky — all on three-pointers — and Melvin Watson, coming off a 27-point performance, had eight.

THE CATS FAILED TO MAKE THE NCAA TOURNEY, BUT THEY'RE IN POSTSEASON PLAY, TAKING ON NORTH CAROLINA STATE ON WEDNESDAY NIGHT IN THE NATIONAL INVITATIONAL TOURNAMENT

K-STATE'S MANNY DIES, CENTER, HAS HIS SHOT BLOCKED BY KANSAS' T.J. PUGH, LEFT, AND PAUL PIERCE, RIGHT, DURING THE FIRST HALF OF FRIDAY'S SECOND-ROUND GAME DURING THE BIG 12 TOURNAMENT IN KANSAS CITY, MO. KANSAS DEFEATED THE WILDCATS 68-61.

The preseason No. 12 pick in the Big 12 had one goal in mind for this season — to gain respect. The Wildcats (17-11, 7-9 in the Big 12) gained respect and wins, enough for an National Invitational Tournament invitation.

"This is not a second-class tournament," Coach Tom Asbury said Sunday after learning the Cats would play Atlantic Coast Conference team North Carolina State (15-13, 5-11 in the ACC) on Wednesday in Raleigh, N.C. "This is a great opportunity for our guys and a reward for working hard throughout the season gaining respect."

Asbury learned of the invitation from Athletics Director Max Urlick about five minutes before a 10 p.m. press teleconference Sunday. He had time to make calls to two assistant coaches to start a phone chain to inform the players.

"I know they'll be very excited," Asbury said. "I know they were anticipating postseason. We had felt hopeful to go to the Dance, but we were prepared for this."

The Cats were on the NCAA Tournament bubble up to the season's end, when dropping three of the last four games knocked them off. A win over No. 3 Kansas on Friday at the Big 12 Tournament would have put the Cats back in the running, but Asbury said the team was looking forward to the challenge of any postseason team.

"Two out of three teams in the country have put away their stuff and are finished now," Asbury said. "We're just glad we're not one of them."

Thirty-two other teams will participate in the NIT, Missouri being the only other Big 12 school to receive an invitation. As far as who would be on the horizon should the Cats defeat the Wolfpack, Asbury said he didn't know any particulars yet.

One particular about the Wolfpack came out nationally Feb. 21, when the team defeated then-No. 1 North Carolina in Dean Smith Center. The Wolfpack was the eighth seed in the ACC Tournament, defeating first-round opponent Florida State but losing to second-seeded North Carolina 73-46.

"That's probably as tough a conference as you'll find," Asbury said of the ACC. "I don't see it as any tougher than a game at Allen Fieldhouse or Hearnes Center. I think our guys are looking forward to the challenge."

Because of the 2A high school basketball tournament this weekend in Bramlage Coliseum, the Cats knew they could not be host to a first-round game. Asbury said he'd expected to play closer to the region, but the NIT has 32 teams to jigsaw into a tournament. The NIT also is responsible for the team's travel arrangements, so Asbury was unsure when the team would leave for North Carolina.

"We'll leave Tuesday morning at the latest," he said. "We need to get a good practice in, so we'll probably practice here Monday and get out after that."

Sophomore point guard Duane Davis might see some playing time in the game. Asbury said he watched the Big 12 Tournament game tape of the Colorado matchup where Davis reinjured his ankle and said the injury wasn't something that would normally phase him.

"I think it's kind of the same situation as last week," Asbury said. "We'll strap him up and let him go on it. We'll just put him in there and see how he does."

However, Asbury said Davis' extended absence puts him at an extreme disadvantage physically and mentally.

"Another element now is that he's been gone a month," he said. "We'd love to have him, but we're not going to count on it."

Senior guard Aaron Swartzendruber is the only player to experience postseason play twice in his career — Marcus McCollough was not at K-State when the Cats made the NCAA Tournament in 1996. Asbury said he was especially excited for his two seniors.

"For Aaron, it's his second opportunity to play in the postseason," he said. "Marcus hasn't had that chance. It's wonderful for the seniors."

Wildcats choke on chicken bones

SUN DEE MILLS
Kansas State Collegian

There was a lost bird flying around Kemper Arena during the Wildcats' 68-61 loss to No. 3 Kansas on Friday. And as the game began, the Cats probably felt like that bird — trapped.

The Jayhawks jumped out to an 8-0 lead, with Paul Pierce and Raef LaFrentz connecting on every shot in the first four possessions.

"Those guys are tough to stop, especially with great one-on-one players like Paul and Raef," junior center Shawn Rhodes said.

The Cats did not score a point until Rhodes was fouled by Jayhawk point guard Ryan Robertson. As Rhodes hit both free throws, junior forward Manny Dies came off the bench, ending his suspension at three games.

Kansas expected this, Hawk T.J. Pugh said.

"We thought he was going to play," Pugh said. "It never crossed our minds otherwise."

Dies came out with motivation on his mind. He took a ball Rhodes stole straight to the basket, only to be fouled by Pugh. After Dies' appearance, the Cats went on a 5-0 run, keeping the Hawks without a field goal for four minutes.

"It gave us a lift when he came off the bench," junior guard Ayome May said. "It wasn't a distraction at all."

Tennis team ready for No. 14 BYU

SAM FELSENFELD
Kansas State Collegian

Sure, Manhattan had its share of bad weather this weekend, with enough snow falling to give Kansas its fair share for the entire winter.

Wildcat baseball games were canceled, the K-State Student Union was shut down and restaurants closed early.

But here's how to tell the weather was really bad: The K-State tennis team's indoor match was called off Sunday due to weather reasons.

The Cats were ready to take on Iowa State, but the Cyclones couldn't make it past Topeka and had to forfeit the match. The match, which would have been K-State's first at home in Big 12 Conference play this season, also could have served as a much-needed tuneup for the Cats' opponent today, Brigham Young University.

The Cats still practiced Sunday, but K-State hasn't played since March 1, when they lost 8-1 at No. 4 Texas, and BYU won't be an easy opponent.

"They're clearly one of the best teams in the country," K-State coach Steve Bietau said.

The Cats and Cougars square off at 10 a.m. today in Ahearn Field House. BYU enters the match ranked 14th in the nation, but Bietau said the rankings are a little off right now, and the Cougars could be as tough as Texas.

"Texas might be a little high and BYU might be a little low," he said.

The Cougars' top three singles players are all ranked in the top 50 in the nation. Although BYU's No. 4 through No. 6 players aren't playing as well as the top three, Bietau said they're above average for their positions in the lineup.

BYU has beaten No. 11 William and Mary, came close to knocking off top-10 Georgia and beat Texas A&M, which topped the Cats 5-4 on Feb. 28, 9-0.

"It's a chance to go in and compete with one of the best teams in the country," Bietau said.

He said he schedules tough opponents to help K-State step up its play. The Cats are only three matches into Big 12 competition and could benefit early from facing the tough competition.

"We hope that it will make a difference," Bietau said. "When that will happen remains to be seen."

Swartzendruber says see-ya to Kansas for final time in Big 12 Tourney

No one can say he didn't try. After all, that's what he's best known for. Trying hard.

This was supposed to be his year. As the lone senior, Wildcat guard Aaron Swartzendruber was back in his true position as shooting guard. With the addition of point guard Duane Davis, Swartzendruber could relax. He was now the two to sophomore Duane Davis' one, the field goal to Davis' assist. Things were rolling along just fine. Four times this season, Swartzendruber shot 80 percent or better from the perimeter. At home vs. Nebraska, he had a career game with 10 rebounds, nine assists and five steals. A 40-percent field goal and three-point shooter, his season has been nothing to sneeze at.

"I don't know if Aaron will get any recognition for all-Big 12," Coach Tom Asbury said before the Big 12 Tournament got under way. "But he's had a great year for us."

Swartzendruber has had to fight for minutes, for shots and for the ball since joining the K-State basketball team in 1994. This season, Asbury said he beat out guard Ayome May for a starting position. He's earned his reputation as a scrapper on the court. He doesn't give up.

But statistics aside, there was one battle Swartzendruber hadn't won in his four years at K-State. He hadn't beaten Kansas.

He went to the NCAA Tournament with Asbury's first team in 1996. This season's team accomplished so much more than was expected after last season. Anything seemed possible.

In Lawrence on Jan. 17, Swartzendruber's game was less than stellar. One three-point shot was the extent of his offensive contribution. He grabbed eight rebounds and scrapped for three stolen balls, but he only recorded one assist and turned over the ball eight times. Even so, the Cats almost won. Almost.

No doubt Swartzendruber wanted to vindicate himself when the Hawks came here. On Valentine's Day, Swartzendruber had 10 points and was perfect from the free-throw line. He cut his turnovers to one, but it wasn't good enough.

The Cats fell hard to the Hawks that day. Landing in the Big 12 bracket that would face Kansas in the second round might intimidate most teams. But not the intrastate rivals. Anything can happen in a heated rivalry, and the Hawks had many key players injured.

However, Davis was not an option. In an attempt to play in the first Big 12 Tournament game Thursday, the ankle Davis hurt in the second KU game turned again vs. Colorado. Davis would not play. Swartzendruber had to wear a new hat.

"His minutes have gone up. The pressure on him has gone up," Asbury said. "He's probably trying too hard."

But he was anxious to try again. This was it — the last chance he would have to be involved in a KU/K-State game. And his last chance to win.

When he got his hands on the ball at the game's beginning, it slipped out and KU all-American Raef LaFrentz took it to the hoop for Kansas' 8-0 run. Then Manny Dies appeared, moving from street-clothed suspension to sixth man. Things looked like they could turn around.

But not for Swartzendruber. He grappled for rebounds. He shot the ball inside to posts who banged it in, but he was landing nothing himself.

Treys from downtown, jumpers in the key, it didn't matter. Nothing would fall. Balls bounced off the glass, banged off the rim. But Swartzendruber had hope — that bench that did not exist last season stepped to keep the Cats in the game. At halftime, anything could still happen.

And at the 17:59 mark in the second half, when Swartzendruber's sixth shot, a lengthy jump shot, swished cleanly through the net, he no doubt heaved a huge sigh of relief. But seven, eight, nine and 10 didn't connect.

When LaFrentz put Swartzendruber on the line for a one-and-one, he didn't connect on the front end of it, his second chance slipping away as the ball betrayed him again.

But in Swartzendruber's 36 minutes, he fought like a man driven. As the last seconds dwindled away, he knelt, frustrated, at half-court. Anyone watching him felt like an intruder.

It was gone. That last chance was gone.

► UNION PROGRAM COUNCIL GIVES K-STATE STUDENTS OPPORTUNITY TO SEE FILM IN FORUM HALL WEEKS BEFORE NATIONAL RELEASE.

TODD PACEY
Kansas State Collegian

Many people like to claim they have seen something first or knew about something before everyone else. Network Event Theater is helping K-State students be able to make this claim.

Through Union Program Council, NET will be broadcasting "Wild Things" at 8 p.m. Tuesday in Forum Hall. K-State is one of only 25 schools receiving the broadcast of the advanced screening.

"Wild Things," which will be released nationally on March 20, stars Matt Dillon, Kevin Bacon, Neve Campbell and Denise Richards. Bacon is also the film's executive producer.

"Wild Things," which is rated R, takes place at a high school in Florida where Matt Dillon plays a guidance counselor. A student played by Denise Richards is infatuated with Dillon and accuses him of rape. Richards' character gets support from Neve Campbell, who plays a woman claiming she was also raped by the guidance counselor. Kevin Bacon plays a detective in the case, and Bill Murray plays the lawyer defending Dillon.

Interviews with cast members from "Wild Things" will follow the film broadcast. Students will be given the opportunity to address questions to the stars of the film via satellite from Forum Hall. Those scheduled to appear for the interview are Matt Dillon, Kevin Bacon and Denise Richards.

The screening is free, and students who want to attend need to stop by the UPC Office on the third floor of the K-State Student Union to pick up their passes.

"We did this last semester with 'I Know What You Did Last Summer,' and we had to turn people away because there weren't enough seats," Paul Donovan, program adviser for UPC, said.

Donovan expects a similar turnout for "Wild Things." He also said UPC is working together with NET to bring more movie premieres to K-State in April.

Examinations may alleviate future problems

DIANA LEE
Kansas State Collegian

The thought of getting her first female examination strikes fear into the heart of nearly any woman. However, there are medical practitioners who make it a point to ease the first-time patient's apprehension and emphasize the importance of taking care of oneself.

"We try to do as much as possible to help them relax and let them know that exams are part of good, basic health care. We try to emphasize that having a Pap smear doesn't insinuate sexual activity or sleeping around," said Reita Currie, Lafene Women's Clinic health educator.

Care is taken to protect the patient's privacy, said Eileen Swanson, director of Lafene Women's Clinic.

"We try to make it as private as possible. Any student who works for us signs an oath of confidentiality and will be let go if it is broken," she said.

More so than in a hospital setting, there is an emphasis on creating a comfortable environment.

"All of the rooms we use for speaking with or examining patients are very private and not as cold and unfriendly as what one might expect," Swanson said.

Swanson said a woman who is 18 years of age or older and sexually active should have a pelvic exam to rule out cancer and have the rest of her body examined, including a breast exam. Women who are sexually active should have an examination once a year, checking the same aspects of their health.

The apprehension that comes with the first exam can be eased by knowing what to expect.

"The patient will visit with a person who is easy to talk with. Those who need a lot of explanation get it. She will also talk with someone after the exam, so she has a chance to ask more questions," Swanson said.

"This gives us a chance to explain what will happen, gather her medical history and answer any questions that she might have before or after the procedure," she said.

During the examination, the woman is given a Pap smear, which tests cells for cancer, and is asked if she wishes to be tested for sexually transmitted diseases.

"We give a lot of explanation. When we ask about testing for STDs, we let them know that they can lead to infertility. Nothing is done without informed consent," Swanson said.

In addition, this examination is a time for women to check on other aspects of their health and well-being.

"This is also a time to be checked for diabetes, anemia, cholesterol or anything else there might be a family history of," Swanson said.

Breast examinations are emphasized as well.

"We teach women how to do breast self-examinations during this exam, since it is an area of concern for many women," Swanson said.

For the first-timer, the examination might appear to be something that will take decades to complete, but it is actually a fairly quick process.

"It takes about half an hour for the first exam, but that is not all exam time. There is a lot of education that goes with that," Swanson said.

The clinic stresses the importance of being examined, because many problems can go undetected.

"It is important to test for cervical cancer and, for those who are sexually active, STDs. Some of them, such as gonorrhea, actually go undetected in 80 to 90 percent of women because they have no symptoms," Swanson said.

UPC to offer break trips to Las Vegas at reduced rates

► Feeling lucky?

Students can still sign up for the UPC spring break trip. The cost is $270, which includes airfare and five nights of lodging at Circus Circus Hotel and Casino. The last day to sign up is Tuesday.

JOHN FRANSON
Kansas State Collegian

Saving money might not be the first thing one associates with Las Vegas. But this spring break, students can enjoy "sin city" without spending a sinful amount of money.

The Union Program Council Travel Committee is offering 20 trips to Las Vegas at a reduced rate. The $270 price includes round-trip airfare, transportation to and from the airport, and five nights at Circus Circus Hotel and Casino.

"It's really cheap. You're not going to find a much cheaper price," Paul Donovan, UPC program adviser, said.

Jennifer Smoll, UPC Travel Committee chair, said the trip would normally cost about $360. UPC is absorbing $50 dollars per plane ticket, and the group rate saves an additional $40 per person.

"It took a lot of work, but we got a really good deal," she said.

UPC planned the Las Vegas trip because of its success with past trips to the city, Donovan said.

"It's a pretty fun town with lots of things to do for all kinds of people, and so we decided we'd try it again," he said.

UPC's spring break trips usually have a good turnout, Donovan said. So far only four people have signed up for this trip, though, including Donovan and Smoll.

"We've had a lot of interest, but a lot of people also had concerns that they don't know if they're going to have enough money left to do this,"

he said.

Reserving the tickets was a gamble, Donovan said. UPC paid a $50 deposit for each ticket for a total of $1,000, and it does not get the deposits back for unsold tickets.

"Vegas is costing UPC $1,000 whether anybody goes or not," he said.

The trip will probably take place even if only a few people sign up, Donovan said.

UPC has not planned structured activities for the trip, aside from a possible meeting at the Hard Rock Cafe.

"We provide the plane tickets and the hotel rooms, but after that, people can do whatever they want," Donovan said.

Smoll said participants will have many entertainment options besides gambling.

"You think of Las Vegas as gambling, but there's also, with all the fancy hotels and stuff, there's a lot of amusement parks and museums and a lot of Broadway shows and concerts and factory outlet malls," she said.

However, participants must be at least 18 years old to go on the trip.

The rooms at Circus Circus will be nice-sized, Smoll said, and the hotel is close to the attractions.

"It's a fun hotel. It's on the strip, and there's a lot for them to do," she said. "It's all going to be within a few minutes' walking distance."

Those interested in the trip can sign up in the UPC office in the K-State Student Union. The deadline is Tuesday.

Housemothers' Club contributes funds to University Gardens

LINDSEY FORTMEYER
Kansas State Collegian

For the K-State Housemothers' Club, making contributions to K-State is a top priority. One of the ways members make contributions to K-State is by donating money to the University Gardens.

"They already gave $500, but they are adding another $1,000 to help us buy a bench. It's important to have resting places for folks to come in and sit down," said Thomas Warner, professor and head of the Department of Horticulture, Forestry and Recreation Resources.

In the past four years, the Housemothers' Club and University Gardens have discussed project plans as the construction continues.

"The University Gardens project is a resource for learning about ornamental plants but also a way to relax and enjoy the beautiful landscape," Warner said.

Every year the club gives additional donations to the University Gardens.

"We wanted to do something to show K-State that the housemothers want to be part of them," said Helen Fields, housemother of Alpha Delta Pi and courtesy chair of the Housemothers' Club. "I think it's called giving back."

But helping with the gardens is not the only way the Housemothers' Club helps K-State.

To raise money for projects, the women sell $1 tickets for a drawing to win door prizes at each meeting. The money collected from the clubs' yearly membership dues of $10 also helps pay for club activities and donations.

"Last year, instead of giving Christmas gifts to each other, we donated our money to the Washington Dog Training for the Blind in Washington, Kansas," Fields said. "Their association came to talk to us at one of our programs."

The group meets once a month to develop better relations among housemothers and the houses in which they work. There are 29 women in the club and 10 honorary members.

"Honorary members are members who have been housemothers in the past and want to continue," said Pauline Houtz, housemother of Alpha Xi Delta and president of the Housemothers' Club. "Some housemothers travel from places in Kansas as far as Salina, Republic and Waterville, just to stay in touch and come to our parties."

The club's first meeting of the 1997-98 school year was at Cottonwood Falls, Kan., and allowed the women to get acquainted and talk about important greek issues at K-State.

"The first retreat was a good way to get together for the new housemothers because there is a turnover — maybe six or seven new housemothers a year," Houtz said.

At the beginning of every month, the club meets at a new location. The women have met at the Fairchild Inn for brunch, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art and the Manhattan Country Club.

"To celebrate the Christmas season, I had a pianist entertain at the Country Club," Houtz said. "We sang Christmas songs and took pictures with Santa."

But activities aren't the only reason club members get together. Several days a week, the women meet to exchange ideas and communicate with other housemothers.

"Getting together is a great way for us to network and create better relations between our houses," Houtz said.

Auction offers trips for students

JOHN STOUS
Kansas State Collegian

A two-night, three-day stay at the Crown Plaza in Las Vegas, worth $370, is just one of the items up for bid at the third-annual Hospitality Auction.

Meals and lodging at fine hotels and restaurants in the region will go to the highest bidder at 6 p.m. Tuesday. The auction is sponsored by K-State's Hospitality Management Society and will be in Justin Hall's Hoffman Lounge.

Amy Remmert, auction chair and senior in hotel and restaurant management, said the event saves money on trips to cities such as Kansas City, Kan., Kansas City, Mo., Dallas and Chicago.

"These packages generally sell for less than they are actually worth," she said. "If somebody is planning on staying in one of these cities, they would save money by purchasing one of these packages at our auction."

The auction is a fund-raising event for HMS to support its activities. It is open to K-State students, faculty and the public.

HMS is a student group with more than 50 members who are hotel and restaurant management majors. They attend various national events and trade shows and run the Mayor's Holiday Tree.

There are about 55 packages available on this year's auction block. Other cities that have hotels and attractions offered include Manhattan, Wichita, Hutchinson, Kan., St. Louis and Houston.

Hotel and restaurant packages have all been donated and were arranged by HMS.

Pat Pesci, director of the hotel and restaurant management program at K-State, said the businesses are glad to help HMS and similar groups at other universities.

"This is good PR. It gets their names out in their non-marketing area," he said. "It is also a win-win situation for them in the respect that it is our graduates who will go on to work these businesses."

Pesci also said the auction is a good hands-on lab opportunity for the students.

"This is a great way for students to show leadership and organization by putting on a major event," he said.

Remmert is optimistic about the number of people expected to attend and the amount of money the auction will raise for HMS. The auction has raised more than $2,000 for HMS in previous years.

"Hopefully we can get more people to the auction this year," she said. "Last year was a good turnout when we had about 60 to 70 people there, but we would like to get close to 100 to 150 people bidding this year."

Armed veteran starts standoff in Waco; residents evacuated from 6-block area

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WACO, Texas — A veteran armed with explosives and a rifle crashed his car through a gate at a Veterans' Administration office and began a standoff with authorities Sunday, forcing the evacuation of hundreds of residents.

The 50-year-old man, whose name was not released, broke into the Veterans Affairs Regional Center around 6:45 a.m., Waco Police Department spokeswoman Marcia Bourque said. The man was not holding hostages.

"The person is armed with explosives," she said. "This person made demands, and we are evacuating the area."

A caller to Fort Worth TV station KXAS identified himself as the armed person and said he had a grudge.

"When the trouble started, my files got lost. My appeals got lost in the madness of the VA bureaucracy," the caller, who identified himself as Jason Lee, told the station.

"I, Jason Lee, do hereby defend this, my vested interest in the form of this building, to the death or until such time as Congress and or the U.S. Senate pass a law protecting our fallen, disabled and homeless veterans by depositing $1 million in the state name of 'SOS,' Save Our Soldiers," he said.

Police did not confirm whether the caller was the armed man.

Officers evacuated residents in a six-block area around the building and police were negotiating with the suspect, spokesman Larry Murphy said.

Federal and local law officers surrounded the building, and command posts were established at a nearby church and convention center.

The suspect's vehicle was parked alongside the brick, two-story building. The office, opened in December, administers VA medical services in central Texas.

Evacuees from the residential area were taken to the Waco Convention Center where a command center was set up. No injuries were reported.

Albright says Serbian conflict could spread in Balkan states

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — On a swing through Europe, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright warned Sunday that the conflict in Serbia's Kosovo province could spread elsewhere in the Balkans. She exchanged ideas with German and French leaders on how to stop the fighting before it spreads.

Among proposals she discussed on the eve of an international conference in London on the embattled province were extension of a U.N. peacekeeping force in Macedonia, bordering Serbia, and expansion of a West European force based in next-door Albania.

In Bonn, after a meeting with Albright, German Foreign Minister Klaus Kinkel expressed alarm about the conflict and asserted that the world "cannot afford another awful conflagration in Europe."

Albright flew to Paris after a brief stay in Bonn and met in the French capital with Foreign Minister Hubert Vedrine.

He said urgent measures are necessary to bring calm to Kosovo, but offered no specifics and said his meeting with Albright produced no conclusions.

The secretary of state's day began in Rome and ended in London after the intermediate stops.

Others expected at today's meeting in the British capital were Kinkel, Vedrine and diplomatic leaders from Britain, Italy and Russia.

On Thursday, the Clinton administration blamed Serbia for the unrest and withdrew several modest concessions offered to Belgrade just last month as a reward for positive steps it had taken in support of the Bosnian peace process.

In a similar vein, an administration official traveling with Albright said European participants in the London meeting would discuss cutting back assistance programs to Serbia and other measures.

Donna Martin, 45, of Clay Center was killed Saturday evening when her 15-year-old son lost control of their car on Kansas Highway 15 about 30 miles south of Clay Center and hit an oncoming car, the patrol said.

In Missouri, winter storm watches and warnings were in effect through Sunday night for northern and western sections. Six to 12 inches of snow were expected across northern Missouri by today.

Numerous highways across north-west Missouri, including Interstates 29 and 35, were snow- or slush-covered Sunday, with travel down to one lane in spots. In southwest and central Missouri, heavy rain swelled rivers, prompting flood warnings.

As the storm and wind worsened Sunday afternoon in northern Kansas, the Geary County Commission declared a state of emergency on the advice of public safety officials. The declaration urged county residents to remain within the limits of Junction City.

Some highways began reopening in southwest Kansas by Sunday afternoon, but drifts toughened the task for road plows, and highway officials urged motorists to think twice before going out.

"It goes from dry to slushy to snow-packed, and in some areas you're not going to see 10 feet ahead of you because of the drifting snow," a dispatcher in the patrol's Garden City office said.

"We're discouraging travel."

Trips between southwestern Kansas communities that would normally take an hour stretched to two or three hours. Stranded motorists fled to roadside motels.

"It was a bad, serious, life-threatening storm last night," said Bob Dale, general manager of KULY radio in Ulysses, Kan., who urged listeners Sunday to stay off the roads.

lessen in the art of tree-planting was given, they went to work. They had planned to finish around 3:30 p.m., but the last tree went into the ground around 11 a.m.

"It sure didn't seem like 5,600 trees," said Jason Hartman, junior in chemical engineering. "Once we got going, it all went really fast."

Gary Naughton, the consulting forester for the operation, said he thought the planting went well.

"I've been involved with a lot of tree plantings, but this is probably the smoothest I've seen," Naughton said.

Verderber said the ease with which the event was executed can be attributed to the participants' attitude.

"Everyone really liked the idea that we were actually helping in the community. It's hard to find ways to do that sometimes," Verderber said.

Although there are no immediate plans to use the area as anything other than a natural water pump, group members said they would eventually like to see it used for recreation, such as a park or arboretum.

Most importantly, they said they want to make sure it does what it was designated to do by protecting the ground water from hazardous toxins in the landfill.

"This is a problem that's right here in our backyard and directly affects us," Verderber said. "I don't just want it solved because it is a good thing to do, I want to fix it because it concerns my safety and the safety of everyone around me."

project — even though privately funded — will need approval by the Kansas Board of Regents and the Kansas Legislature. The project is being handled by the Office of Facilities Planning, which is working on drawings for the project.

The original house was made possible by a bequest of $20,000 in 1912 by Mehtable C.C. Wilson but was not built until 1922 at a cost of $29,391. It was designed in an English country house manner by Cecil Baker, who was head of the Department of Architecture, Planning and Design at the time.

SGA ELECTIONS

MONDAY, MARCH 9, 1998

Voters' Guide

March 9 - 11

NATHAN BROTHERS/Collegian

SGA ELECTIONS BEGIN TODAY

TIM RICHARDSON
Kansas State Collegian

Student Governing Association elections begin today for student body president, student senators and other student positions for the 1998-99 term.

Voting in the election, which runs through Wednesday, might be the only way some students participate in student government.

Gayle Spencer, coordinator of the Office of Student Activities and Services, said there is little reason for a large deviation in voter turnout from the 13 percent of the student population that voted last year.

"In the United States, I don't think people perceive that their vote makes a difference," she said. "They don't really care."

Spencer said the election typically has about 2,500 student voters, but steps might be taken to increase the number in the future.

The elections might soon be computerized using the university's KATS computer system, giving students the opportunity to vote without ever entering the voting booth. This year, the voting system includes one computerized change from last year's general election — use of the Wildcat ID card and a card scanner to verify student status.

Kathleen Copple, OSAS graduate assistant, said demographic information will also be collected at the election to obtain voting statistics. Information and issues can then be focused on specific groups that have a low turnout rate.

A significant difference between this election and previous elections is that candidates are not as high-profile. Copple said many candidates have been active in campus issues, but are not as well-known.

"Our candidates are sort of coming out of the woodwork, although they have been involved on campus," she said.

Chris Hansen, former student body president, said increased promotion of e-mail and Internet addresses could increase feedback.

He said that throughout his campaign, which involved more than 100 speeches, he received only three comments from people he did not know previously.

"If people realized the opportunity we have to change the campus, they might be involved in student government," he said.

Hansen, who served the 1996-97 term as president, said being president is much different than it appears during the campaign.

The most surprising aspect of his presidency was his work with the Kansas Board of Regents, he said. Hansen said about half of his job was related to the board in some way.

"They're making decisions that affect us in a very direct manner," he said.

Hansen said SGA might have a disadvantage keeping up with the administration on policy issues, in part because administrators are more highly educated. He said issues must be thoroughly studied and prepared before being presented to a group.

"It gets really muddy in a hurry, and you really have to do your homework," he said. "It's really difficult."

Hansen said he expects action to be taken during the coming year about advising and the way students choose classes. He said students' time is more valuable than ever, and class decisions are becoming more important. Other, unforeseen issues will also rise into the picture.

"The year goes by so fast, and you have a multitude of things come up that you don't expect," he said.

Copple said there might be a tendency for students who are not well-informed about SGA to have a negative perception because they are not aware of the work SGA does.

Spencer said SGA members have a genuine interest in the well-being of the university.

"If you looked into it, you would see that students who participate in this process really care about their constituents and the student body," she said.

Spencer said students should use their chance to make their voices heard, especially since the Wildcat ID card makes voting faster than in previous years.

"It's their chance for representation," she said. "These students are looked at by the administration, and it's important that they pick people who can best represent them."

Copple said the most important issues Student Senate will handle will be privilege fees and allocations of the fee. She said SGA also has the responsibility to be role models for the campus.

With many new faces on the list of candidates, Copple also said the student body can anticipate fresh ideas and approaches.

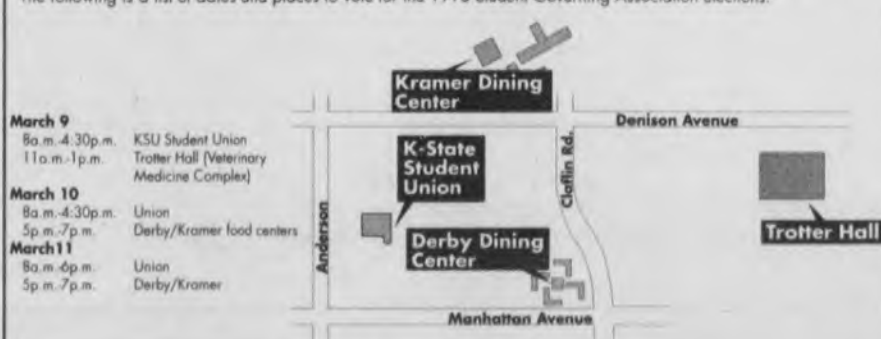

Those fresh ideas would be even better with more student involvement, Hansen said.

"What a tremendous thing we would have at K-State if just 10 percent more people got involved on campus," he said.

Voting takes place today through Wednesday in the K-State Student Union, Kramer Food Center, Derby Food Center and Trotter Hall.

Voter apathy an annual tradition, effectively silences student majority

ANGELA KISTNER
Kansas State Collegian

Starting today, thousands of students will walk within a few feet of a polling place for this year's Student Governing Association elections.

But a majority of those students will not vote.

Voter apathy is not just a problem at the national level; it's also a historic problem at K-State.

An average of 17 percent of the student body votes in elections. Last year, only 13 percent of K-State students voted in the general election.

Chris Hansen, senior in nuclear engineering and former student body president, said voter turnout is low because there hasn't been a crisis.

He said when students are greatly affected by what's going on, voter turnout is high.

"If you look at the voter turnout back in the '70s when everyone was getting drafted, the student government was really important because it was an actual voice," Hansen said.

"But when we're talking about fee increases of a buck, that's not enough to get people really motivated to go out and vote."

"They don't see the impact on them." Dean of Student Life and 1970-71 Student Body President Pat Bosco said low voter turnout doesn't mean student government is not responsive, and student leaders shouldn't feel bad about voter turnout.

"There's only so much that they can do," he said.

Last semester, more students turned out for the KSU Stadium expansion referendum than in last year's general election.

Hansen said the reason for the higher turnout was because the issue affected students' pocketbooks, which motivated students to vote. He said students need to realize general student elections affect their pocketbooks as well.

"We're talking about not just $25, but the whole $250-plus per semester that you're paying for student privilege fees that are directly controlled by the people you elect," Hansen said. "Why wouldn't you vote? This is $500 of your money per year."

Bosco said low voter turnout might indicate students don't have much to be concerned about.

"It might be a reflection that things are OK," he said. "So why bother?"

Student Senate Chair Jeff Dougan said K-State's voter turnout isn't low when compared with other universities.

"But if you look at it as far as a common-sense perspective, it's quite low," he said.

Gayle Spencer, coordinator of the Office of Student Activities and Services, said there are probably two reasons students don't vote.

"One might be people don't know elections are actually happening. I don't know if we did a very good job of announcing the positions that were available," Spencer said.

"There were vacancies in our filing, so that tells me that we may not get the word out."

"And I would guess that like with regular United States elections, that people don't perceive that their vote makes a difference," she said.

Spencer said SGA is looking at computerizing elections, which she said she hoped would make it easier for students to vote. But she said this won't happen for a while.

Bosco said student government has tried a variety of different polling strategies over the years, including multiple booths and polling stations, and there hasn't been a difference in voter turnout.

"If students want to vote, they'll find the one location on the one day and will cast their ballot," Bosco said.

"If there is an issue, they will respond."

Dougan said the reason for low voter turnout is students have other things on their mind.

"Students are more concerned about going to class," he said. "They're more concerned about how to get that paper done by next Friday rather than who's running for this office within student government."

"It's really just the nature of the game. You see a national trend among 18- to 25-year-olds of being less involved politically."

Dougan said increasing voter turnout is something SGA struggles with every year.

He said the Election Committee, Collegian and the candidates themselves have tried to increase the turnout through publicity, active coverage and visits to campus and living organizations.

"But I don't think we've found an answer," he said.

ELECTIONS COMMITTEE<sup>what it does</sup>

Committee begins process early in year, makes most of supporting role

NATE JENKINS
Kansas State Collegian

When the election polls open today, it will be the result of some hard work put in by this year's Elections Committee.

Committee members are selected by the committee chair, who is appointed by the Student Senate Chair. They do everything from ordering the ballots to making sure no one tries to stuff the ballot boxes on election days.

"We start doing stuff in the fall to get ready," said Kathleen Copple, a graduate assistant for the Office of Student Activities and Services, who helps the committee. "It gets labor-intensive in about January."

Committee Chair Ryan Kerschen said the committee's main job right now is to get word out about the election.

"The main thing now is publicizing the election and getting some signs up," Kerschen said. "We're also trying to get people scheduled to work the polls."

Last week, Copple typed the ballots. She said she's thankful committee members don't have to count the ballots by hand once they are turned in. Instead, students vote by filling out ballots that resemble an exam bubble sheet, and the votes are tallied with a computer.

Copple also said the committee is a bit rushed this year because election days fall on a different date. Elections are two weeks before spring break, falling one week earlier this year than last.

"It seems like all of a sudden, time runs out," Copple said, "plus this year elections are basically a week earlier."

The committee's duties aren't quite finished once elections are finished, though.

To prepare next year's committee and make improvements, it's Kerschen's job to prepare a post-election summary that tells SGA what went well and what could be done better.

Kerschen said to ensure everything goes well during the election, it's important to have a good mix of people on the committee.

"I usually start with people in SGA and then work out from there," he said.

"The best way to do it is have a mix of student government and non-student government people who are motivated. A lot of it is just grunt work."

Copple agreed, saying it is the job of the candidates, not the Elections Committee, to get people out and voting.

"The candidates are the ones that get people to vote," Copple said. "It's really their job to get people interested in what is going on."

PATRICK CARNEY, SENIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCE, DEBATES LEGISLATION BEFORE STUDENT SENATE. SENATE MEETS THURSDAYS IN THE BIG 12 ROOM.

CLIF PALMBERG
Collegian

Student Senate must discover method to evoke interest from its constituents

Every Thursday, nearly 60 students meet for hours on end in the K-State Student Union to create and debate policy that affects every K-State student.

And nearly every Friday, the Collegian publishes an article about what happened the night before in Student Senate.

But almost no one cares. Tell students that senators are their elected representatives, entrusted with the ability to allocate more than $9 million in student fee money each year.

They still won't care. In reality, a majority of K-State students probably skip most Collegian articles about student government.

In fact, they probably skipped this section, as well.

Why? They just don't care.

Say what you will to defend K-State's democratic process, but no matter how many signs are posted, sidewalks are chalked and articles are written, most students' preconceived notions about Student Governing Association won't change. More than likely, less than 20 percent of students will take the time to vote in this week's elections.

No one can explain the phenomenon. Some say campus apathy and low voter turnout mean student leaders are doing their jobs, so most students don't feel their voices need to be heard on campus issues.

Others fault the Collegian for its sometimes harsh editorial coverage of student-government leaders.

Both are wrong.

In the end, there isn't a concrete explanation for why the percentage of students who vote in SGA elections is less than the number of fans at many men's basketball games. That, considering the team's performance, is a staggering statistic.

Though the low voting percentage can't be explained, it can be equated to other situations at K-State where interest in activities is just as low.

Attend most Landon Lectures, and you won't see a packed house, though the lecture series brings in some of the most prominent public figures of our time.

Instead, sometimes as many as one-third or half of the seats in McCain Auditorium are empty.

The same apathy holds true for most campus events, unless there's some sort of free prize, food or beer involved. It seems a majority of today's students forget that life after college doesn't — or shouldn't — revolve around those sorts of incentives. Many aren't apt to participate in something that doesn't benefit them directly and immediately without any sort of work or sacrifice.

But what about education? Students don't realize the indirect benefits of a Landon Lecture, art exhibit or special event. And they don't see the educational benefit of a Student Governing Association.

Student government is an educational experience, but not just for those students who campaign and are elected to office. It provides a lesson for every one in government and how it affects every citizen. In a university setting, that government affects all students who pay hundreds of dollars in fees every semester and gives the authority over those fees to their fellow students.

It's also an important lesson in how to get involved.

On this campus, students define campus involvement as membership in a socially oriented living organization that performs community service as an afterthought. Or they proudly claim non-involvement, thinking it gives them the right to complain the loudest when things don't go their way.

But involvement, in the ever-present "real world," means making your voice heard and taking advantage of the democratic process to make a better university for everyone.

They make mistakes like all of us, but the majority of student government leaders, whatever their actions, believe they are doing the best they can to help K-State students.

If students agree, they should go to the polls to show their support for a system they believe works.

If they disagree, they should vote to enact change.

Complacency won't solve anything. Vote.

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

We feel the most important issue that needs to be attacked is the communication gap that currently exists between the student body and student government.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent the student body than your opponents?

We view the offices as leadership positions rather than political positions.

We both have years of experience in leadership, and both possess the communication skills needed for the position.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body.

We propose a two-way communication plan. We want to get information out through a biweekly editorial in the Collegian and get feedback through a "Wildcat Outreach Program."

BOOMER

Davis, Boomer want communication with students

Student body presidential candidate Greg Davis and his running mate, Jim Boomer, want to begin another campaign if they are elected — one of communication with the student body.

Davis and Boomer said they want to create avenues for student participation by forming new committees outside SGA and taking more initiative in talking with people.

"We've gone too long with two separate entities on this campus — the SGA and the student body," said Davis, senior in marketing and management information systems. "As an example, look at the SGA home page. It hasn't been updated in almost two years."

The candidates' plan includes seven new 20-member student committees.

One issue Davis and Boomer can't avoid is the funding of Hale Library. The candidates said they would support a student fee for the library only if the KSU Foundation and the Kansas Legislature made a firm commitment to the library.

"We don't feel students should accept a plan until the state and the KSU Foundation commit to helping the library," Davis said.

Davis said his administration would try to get more students involved in a variety of ways.

"We want the spirit of people interacting outside the academic realm and to coordinate activities and have fun together. It's not all about government. It's about people stepping outside their comfort zone and getting involved," he said.

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The cost of education is paramount. K-State is a superb university. Now we want to reduce costs as well as increase K-State's quality of education.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent the student body than your opponents?

We have represented students for a combined 4 1/2 years on communication and financial committees. Now we want to address those issues — issues that matter.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body.

Past administrations avoided media. We recognize the media as a link between government and the students. We will be open and honest with the campus media.

CASTELANO
SENIOR IN

Glendening, Castelano tout themselves as diverse

Student body presidential candidate Bret Glendening and his running mate, Shayne Castelano, tout themselves as diverse candidates with a concern for issues that matter to students.

Glendening said one of his main concerns is the way student government represents students.

"It's time for a president and vice president to represent students to the administration and not the administration to the students," he said.

The pair's platform includes support for a Hale Library privilege fee, a plan to help students retire higher education debt faster and a city-campus bus system.

Castelano said the operating-fund increase for Hale Library and money from the KSU Foundation is helpful, but not sufficient.

That money should be supplemented with an 85-cent, per-credit-hour student fee, he said.

Glendening said a higher education debt-reduction plan would allow businesses that hire Kansas Board of Regents university graduates to receive a tax deduction if they help repay part of their new employees' student loans.

"You have to ask yourself, 'What can we actually do about the cost of tuition?' When it comes down to it, we can't do anything about it," he said. "But Shayne and I do believe that if you can't approach it from how much it costs in the beginning, then maybe you can approach it from, once you graduate, how much you have to pay back."

TREY HOCK & BILL KRAAI

HOCK
GRADUATE STUDENT

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The most important issue that faces the students right now is the quality of their academic resources. Student Senate should motion to allow students a vote on a library fee.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have been attending K-State for six years. I know how this university works and care about the students. I want to bring new ideas and a fresh outlook to SGA.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body.

The campaign does not stop when the elections are over. As president, I will go and speak to a number of student organizations each semester and continue finding out what the students want.

KRAAI
SENIOR IN GRAPHIC

Hock, Kraai want to take active approach if elected

Running mates Trey Hock and Bill Kraai said their three-part platform is student-oriented and focuses on creating an approachable student government, taking an active approach to student concerns and building a strong university, both academically and athletically.

For the past four years, Hock said SGA has been used as a tool by other authorities in the university besides students to get things done. Hock wants to change this focus and give power back to students.

"We want to work with the administration, but we don't want to do that if it means working against the students," he said.

Hock said the campaign shouldn't end when the election is over, but continue throughout the year.

"It shouldn't be just one month out of the school year," he said. "We should be much more active by going out to the campus organizations and living groups."

Hock said issues such as a lack of student parking have been around since he was a freshman and probably won't be solved until the Legislature or the administration decide it is needed or when the students vote for a fee increase.

"I would be lying if I said I could solve this problem," Hock said. "I think we are addressing some big issues that sound vague but are a lot more specific than people think."

TRACEY MANN & ANDY MACKLIN

JUNIOR IN

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The most important issue facing students next year will be advising. We will work with students, faculty and administration to enhance advising throughout the university.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent the student body than your opponents?

We can utilize our student government experiences, as well as personal experiences we have gained from living in residence halls, off-campus and greek housing.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body.

We want to receive more Collegian coverage of our actions, revisit organizations, regularly update the SGA home page and send newsletters to all college councils.

MACKLIN

Mann, Macklin use achievable goals in campaign

Basing their campaign on achievable goals, Tracey Mann and Andy Macklin said they hope to make a "K-Statement" with their administration if elected student body president and vice president.

The candidates said their first priority if elected would be to work toward creating a better advising program at K-State. Mann said the system is not broken, but it needs to be more consistent throughout the university.

Second, Mann and Macklin said they want to institute a book-swap program similar to the one in place at Michigan State University. The program would run on the university or Student Senate home page, allowing students to buy and sell books on the Internet.

"It will cut out the middle man," Macklin said. "Students will be able to buy books without the retail mark-up of the area bookstores."

The third issue on Mann and Macklin's platform is the creation of a parking permit for the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. The permit would only be valid at the Rec Complex and would cost less than the permit required for regular campus parking.

Students without campus parking permits can now park in a limited number of metered spaces provided at the Rec Complex or run the risk of getting a ticket.

"A Rec pass really makes a lot of sense," Mann said. "With a limited number of metered parking, students without parking passes are penalized for their healthy actions."

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Any issue that affects day-to-day life at K-State is important. Our campaign focuses on increased communication between SGA and students, improving crosswalks, addressing parking concerns and increasing involvement on campus.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

SGA experience and advanced leadership skills. Our current jobs as resident assistants require communication, time management, people skills, involvement, problem solving and diversity awareness.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body.

This is a major focus for us. We want to develop a new and updated Web site for SGA issues. We will visit college and campus organizations throughout the year.

Van Tyle, Stucky see K-State as growing community

Hard-working. Committed. Fun. Those are the qualities presidential candidate Chris Van Tyle and vice presidential candidate John Stucky said they want to bring to Student Governing Association.

Van Tyle, senior in animal science and industry, and Stucky, junior in agriculture technology management, said they want to give back to K-State what it has given to them. Van Tyle said he would have regretted not running for student body president, regardless of the outcome.

They said improving communication between students and SGA is at the top of their list.

"We see K-State as a community, and in order for a community to grow and to function better, there has to be good communication between the members and the leaders," Stucky said.

The candidates said they plan to improve communication through an updated SGA home page, more public forums and frequent campus and living-organization visits.

Van Tyle said he and Stucky hope those organizations would want them to visit and discuss campus issues if they win the election.

"We want it to be where those groups want us to come there, not just us calling them up and saying, 'Can we come to your meeting?'" Van Tyle said, "but the groups saying, 'Hey, we'd love to have you. Come see what we're about.'"

60 student senators to distribute $9 million in student fees

SENATORS BALANCE MULTIPLE RESPONSIBILITIES IN ONE-YEAR OF OFFICE.

KELLEE MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

Students elected to Student Senate this week will join the largest decision-making body on campus, comparable to the legislative branch of state and national governments.

"It's one representative body that speaks as the student voice to issues that affect the students," Jon Kulaga, assistant dean of student life, said.

Senate is housed under the Student Governing Association, which serves as the chief student opinion voice on campus, Senate Chair Jeff Dougan said.

Sixty members compose Senate, representing each of their respective colleges, as well as two faculty representatives. All 62 members vote and have equal duties within the body.

Handling fiscal issues makes up two-thirds of Senate's responsibilities, Dougan said.

They collect about $9 million in student fees each year, which is distributed to student facilities such as the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and Lafene Health Center, Dougan said.

"We are a very important part of the campus. Nine million dollars is a lot of money to collect and pass out," he said.

The other one-third of Senate's responsibilities includes working with policy issues and looking at governmental issues in Manhattan and on the state level.

"We are the chief student voice in fiscal, governmental and academic issues," Dougan said. "We are elected to be the student voice."

Senate is completely student-run. They do have administrative support, but the students have final authority, Dougan said.

"I think the power is used well and in the betterment of the students," said Bill Muir, faculty representative to Senate.

Senate has seven standing committees, including Privilege Fee Committee, Academic Affairs and University Relations Committee and Governmental Relations Committee.

The committees are chaired by a student appointed by the Senate chair. They are composed of at-large members appointed by the committee chair and the 25 student interns selected by the intern coordinator.

"The blend of senators, at-large members and interns makes the committees a unique sort of potpourri," Muir said.

Dougan said students are drawn to Senate because it is an opportunity to become more involved on campus.

"Senate's ultimate draw is the opportunity to help others and serve others," Dougan said.

The number of student senators is population-based, and candidates are elected on a collegewide basis. To be eligible to run for Senate, students must have a 2.0 grade point average and be enrolled in at least 12 credit hours.

STUDENT SENATE agriculture

GABE ECKERT JUNIOR IN AGRICULTURAL JOURNALISM

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Maintaining high-quality student services while keeping privilege fees as low as possible.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have served for two years as a senator and am currently the allocations chairman. I understand the issues and have a commitment to serve.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I will continue to seek advice and input from everyone in the College of Agriculture and strive to keep others informed on campus issues.

LES KUHLMAN FRESHMAN IN AGRONOMY

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Parking. Since there are no books in Hale Library, we should build a parking garage inside of it, with revenues going to the athletics defense fund.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

Do you know what they say about the brothers of guys with big feet? Neither do I, but I hear they have big feet too.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

In my opinion, we should blow up TCI cable and put on 40 channels of riveting non-stop Student Governing Association action.

JOSHUA RENGSTORF SENIOR IN FEED SCIENCE AND MANAGEMENT

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The most important issue facing K-State is the increasing cost of education. Student Senate must find ways to keep services viable, without increasing privilege fees.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have served this past year as a student senate parliamentarian, but I'm just a regular student wanting to work for the students.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I will listen to the students whenever they have an opinion and ask students in my college for advice on complicated issues.

JAKE WORCESTER SOPHOMORE IN AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

We need to slow the rise of privilege fees. It's time to look to creative options, such as user-fees for certain areas.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I'm ready to stand up for student concerns. It's time to bring student needs to the forefront and do something about them.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

Being involved in my college is the best way to communicate with students. I want to hear your concerns. Call or e-mail me.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have more than 11 years of combined experience in student government in high school, 4-H and at K-State-Salina campus.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I think that the open door policy of the student body president needs to be extended into Student Senate, and the student body should be told of this.

DUSTIN DURBIN FRESHMAN IN PUBLIC RELATIONS

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Privilege fees. Seemingly contradictory, I am for increasing services and keeping costs down. It is possible to make good for students without charging them every time.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

Already, I have experienced courses in many disciplines within our college, and I have a feel for being a student in those different departments.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

The Collegian seems to be the unifying communication element on campus; I would look to the Collegian for issues/concerns and to keep students informed.

ALAN GEIST JUNIOR IN HISTORY

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Parking. Any able-bodied person living within 4 to 5 blocks of campus does not need a parking permit.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I look at myself as an average Joe. I vote for what is best for me, which is probably what is best for most people.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

An "open door" policy. I want to be able to give students an opportunity to tell me their views at any time. I want to see more surveys of student positions on issues.

AMIE KERSHNER SOPHOMORE IN PUBLIC RELATIONS

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

I feel that the most important issue is the relationships between different campus organizations.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have had one year as a student intern at K-State. I also served on the SGA Communication Committee. I have a genuine interest in improving K-State.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I feel that the key to communication is the newspaper. By working with the Collegian, we could help everyone become more informed.

APRYL MATHES SOPHOMORE IN ADVERTISING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

I think students need to be better informed on issues and perhaps rely on more sources than solely the Collegian.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

After a couple of years, I've got the hang of how things work and see how to go about addressing issues.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I'm pretty approachable and always up for one-on-one communication, or we could do a group thing.

JUSTIN NICHOLS JUNIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

I believe the most pressing issue is for the student body to reclaim the Student Senate and that the accountability of the Senate should be addressed.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I feel that I am qualified because of my interaction with students. Living in the residence halls has provided me with an extensive background on student concerns.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

Increasing communication begins with being available to the student body. That is why I have an open door policy to all students.

KIMBERLY PESCHKA SOPHOMORE IN POLITICAL SCIENCE AND MARKETING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Hale Library is the foundation of academics at K-State. If a student fee is created, it truly would contribute to the success of all students.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I believe my previous experience, enthusiasm for K-State and dedication to students are the strongest qualities I would bring to this position.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I feel it is important to talk to people in my classes and to visit groups within the College of Arts and Sciences.

DUSTIN PETRIK FRESHMAN IN MICROBIOLOGY

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Privilege fees should be used only as a last resort for funding. I challenge all groups to cut costs and seek other sources of funding.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I believe that all students are "qualified" to represent their college and would like to see more students take interest in the issues on campus.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I would like SGA to begin holding weekly forums in the Union where concerned students could discuss issues with student senators and other elected officials.

SCOTT REED JUNIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCE AND GERMAN

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

I feel the most important issue facing students is the increasing infringement of government on their lives. I also want to lower student fees.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I am more qualified than my opponents because

I have more experience in Student Senate than some of them, and I also applied to run.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I will make myself available to my constituents through e-mail, telephone, telegraph, tell-a-friend, Telefund, semaphore, sign language, epistles, missives, bulls and personal meetings.

T.J. SCHREINER SENIOR IN MEDICAL TECHNOLOGY

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Hale library and campus parking need to be taken care of. However, carefully! We need as much student input as possible.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I'm not afraid to stop people and ask how they feel on an issue. I also like to answer questions. Plus, I'm 6 feet 5 inches (easy to see).

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

Just to stop people and ask questions. My classes lead me from Ackert to McCain so I'm easy to find around the whole campus.

PHILIP STEIN FRESHMAN IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The communication gap between the student body and the student government must be bridged for effective representation to take place and to remove student apathy.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

Through my experiences in the residence halls, the greek system and student government I can well-represent people from all areas of K-State life.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I will help make it more widely known that all Senate and committee meetings are open to the public and that student input is welcome.

DANEDRI THOMPSON JUNIOR IN ELECTRONIC JOURNALISM

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

One important issue facing students is student apathy. In order for Senate to spend university funds in a manner that most effectively benefits all students.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I am unique, creative, enthusiastic and interested and involved in many things. I like working at problems from many different angles and finding solutions.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I will make it a point to meet a lot of students and talk about a lot of different issues with them.

STUDENT SENATE business administration

DAN ALLEN JUNIOR IN ACCOUNTING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

This university is facing a funding crisis. We need a leader who will address library funding, health center funding, instructors' salary freezes and hiring freezes.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I not only have the advantage of clearly understanding the major issues on campus, but I realize there are no easy fixes.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

Students have the right to know what their government is doing. Students should be consulted during all steps of the government process.

TEANIKIA BRITTON JUNIOR IN BUSINESS MANAGEMENT

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The rising cost of tuition. We need to find alternative ways to pay for school via grants and scholarships.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have been in the business school for four years and am familiar with faculty and student needs.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

Will utilize my position as a community assistant to know what students want from me.

JEREMY CALDWELL JUNIOR IN ACCOUNTING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

It is important to keep students informed about the renovations to the K-State Student Union and to represent the students' interests concerning the event.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

As a third-year student in the College of Business,

I understand the concerns of the school of business and will represent accordingly.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I hope to improve communication between SGA and the student body by making myself available to answer questions and provide information about issues.

AMBER GEORG FRESHMAN IN ACCOUNTING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

I think the most important issue is library funding. I'm not dead set against a user fee but would like to pursue all other funding avenues first.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

During the past year I have been serving on SGA Tribunal Board to gain an aspect on this side of SGA. I also bring four years of student council experience with me from high school.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I would support meetings where anybody could come and voice concerns. I would be available by phone and e-mail to the student body.

SARA HAYHURST JUNIOR IN ACCOUNTING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

There are several complex issues facing K-State in the upcoming year: Privilege fees, especially for Hale, academic advising, fall break, etc.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

A great representative is informed and dedicated to their constituents and issues. I have the experience, knowledge and dedication to deal with and represent my college and its concerns.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

To increase communication between students and SGA, I would create Web pages for easy accessibility that will lead to a forum for student concerns.

KEN LEIKER FRESHMAN IN BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION—PRE-PROFESSIONAL

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The increasing cost of tuition should be restricted, as well as more funds appropriated to more and better scholarships.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I bring to K-State a desire to not only communicate the students' interests, but also an attitude of hard work and equal opportunities.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

The Internet and mail services should be expanded to allow for every option and opinion to be expressed efficiently regarding students' concerns and issues.

JEREMY D. LUTZ JUNIOR IN FINANCE

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

There are many issues facing K-State students, all of which are important. Each student possesses unique opinions and I would value each one.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

My dedication, hard work, debate experience and ability to listen are necessary in addressing issues facing students.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I encourage attendance at both council and Senate meetings, recommend suggestion boxes, support one-on-one interaction and e-mail. You may start today by voting!

DANIELLE McDOWELL JUNIOR IN ACCOUNTING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Keeping student fees reasonable is the issue, and this can be done by carefully choosing which programs are important enough for student fees to cover.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

Since I am new to student government, I can offer new ideas and perspectives on important issues.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

Encourage students to attend meetings and voice their opinions, as well as making myself available for students' questions and concerns.

NICK MUETING JUNIOR IN OPERATIONS MANAGEMENT

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The most important issue facing K-State students is maintaining student fees at a reasonable level by finding innovative solutions to university problems.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I feel teamwork is more important for the students, and I believe that my work ethic and enthusiasm would make me a great part of their team.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I would increase communication by being someone who students could approach and trust to listen to their concerns.

JENNY PERKINS FRESHMAN IN MARKETING AND ACCOUNTING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Student fees have increased for several years, and it's time for them to stop. If elected, I won't vote to increase fees unless students support the increase.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I've served as SGA secretary, intern and on Communications Committee, and I am active within the College of Business. I have the experience, and I'll make your concerns be known.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

An informative presentation to students by Senate to discuss issues. This would be shown on channel 19, allowing students to voice concerns.

CODY SUDMEIER FRESHMAN IN FINANCE

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The future success of K-State greatly depends on funding for Hale Library. It's one of the only cases that I'll support raising tuition or fees.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I've gained leadership experience through offices held in community service and honorary clubs. I've gained diversity by living in residence halls and in a fraternity.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I'll make SGA's Web site and senator e-mail addresses more accessible. I'll also meet with representatives from various College of Business clubs.

KENNY YEUNG FRESHMAN IN ACCOUNTING AND FINANCE

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Student fees should be the last option for funding Hale. I would like to extensively look into other possible revenues for funding.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

Not a politician! I don't see the office as a résumé builder, but as a learning experience. My only agenda: represent CBA through sound decision-making.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

Start a program that would put senators and students of the same college together to discuss issues. This could take place in orientation and/or honors classes.

STUDENT SENATE<sup>education</sup>

WENDY WENZEL JUNIOR IN ELEMENTARY EDUCATION

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

I think the most important issue is the library fee. I feel that a library fee is needed but only if it is added in the right area.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have served three semesters on the University

Activities Board, and I have experience working with student groups and organizations to get what the students want.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I think that student senators should sit in on more departmental clubs and organization meetings.

BRIAN WETTA FRESHMAN IN ELEMENTARY EDUCATION

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The funding of Hale Library journal subscriptions is a major concern that needs special attention and action taken through responsible funding options.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I think that Kelly Furnas is put in a compromising situation by dating Jill Story. Let's put an end to that. I need a few more words.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I will continue to encourage students to become familiar with their senators and to maintain contact with them so their personal opinions may be voiced.

STUDENT SENATE<sup>engineering</sup>

CRYSTAL CAMPBELL FRESHMAN IN CHEMICAL ENGINEERING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Although not our responsibility, temporary library fees set up in proportion to the contribution made by the state Legislature could save Hale and K-State's reputation.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have time and a fresh perspective to devote to Student Senate. I'm friendly, honest and open-minded. I will do the right (not easy) thing.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I will inform each of my constituents (verbally and/or e-mail) of the decisions facing Senate and seek their opinions on tough issues.

ANDY CURTIS SOPHOMORE IN MECHANICAL ENGINEERING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

No response.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I would not use more qualified, but I am willing to listen with an open mind to all sides of an issue.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

No response.

CARLTON A. GETZ JUNIOR IN ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEERING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

There is no most important issue; claiming one often means ignoring the importance of others. Each must be considered individually, according to merit.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

My experience with Senate gives me the background to represent the college. However, students should know the candidates and vote accordingly.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

Elected representation is no substitute for direct participation. While working hard to understand opinions, I encourage students to visit Senate and speak during open period.

ELIZABETH GREGORY SOPHOMORE IN BIOLOGICAL AND AGRICULTURAL ENGINEERING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The most important issue is funding and whose job it is to fund K-State. We as students need to keep pressuring the Legislature to do their job.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have numerous years of experience in many leadership roles. I am willing to put my feelings aside and vote the way my constituents want.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

There are several things that can be done to improve communication. Better coverage by the Collegian and committee meeting times and places printed in the Collegian.

JOHN MOBERG SENIOR IN ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEERING AND MATHEMATICS

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Offering the best quality facilities and resources while providing an affordable educational opportunity.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

A dual major in two different colleges affords me the opportunity to meet many different people from a wider variety of backgrounds than otherwise possible.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

By not just listening to my peers' opinions, but by asking for them.

SARAH MORRIS JUNIOR IN CIVIL ENGINEERING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The most important issue is student fees. Each fee needs to be critically reviewed and justified before any changes are made.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I enjoy being in Senate and participating in guiding the policies of K-State. I have experience in Senate and like representing students.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I would encourage students to attend Senate and committee meetings to express their opinions on issues.

CORY POWELL FRESHMAN IN INDUSTRIAL ENGINEERING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

I feel that the funding for improvements for Hale Library is an extremely important issue. It is necessary to obtain funding from the state.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

My qualifications range from being involved in numerous leadership and governing organizations to my affability and strong desire to be involved in student government.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I wholeheartedly support the creation of a campus safety committee, a committee for women's issues as well as the Wildcat Outreach Program.

JOE SCHNEIDER JUNIOR IN ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEERING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Tuition and privilege fees. We need to re-evaluate our expenses to keep student fees low.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I feel I have the ability to be a strong voice to represent my college. I also have the confidence it takes to be a good leader and representative of my college.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I would recommend the use of surveys conducted across campus at various times of the year concerning big issues so that the students' opinions are heard before Senate votes on the issues.

JASON M. SHEARER FRESHMAN IN MECHANICAL AND ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

I think the most important issue is knowing what our tuition and student privilege fees are going toward and how they are allocated.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I believe that I am more qualified because I have great communication skills and know much of the faculty in my college.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I wish to make the Communications Committee more active in letting the student body know what we are doing as their representatives.

JOHN WELCH FRESHMAN IN MECHANICAL ENGINEERING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

To inform students of the issues their senators are facing so they can voice concerns and be involved in the decisions of our university.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

On SGA Communications Committee, I've learned about Senate operations along with Engineering Student Council and engineering clubs. If elected, I'll bring your interests to SGA.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

A voice-automated phone service where students could call and learn more about legislation. Then they could contact their senator with their point of view.

STUDENT SENATE<sup>human ecology</sup>

KRISTIN BLOSS JUNIOR IN APPAREL AND TEXTILE MARKETING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

All issues affect students differently, therefore I feel that at one time or another all issues take precedence.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

My one year has led me to understand the actual workings of SGA and has helped me to grow as a person.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I would do my job ... make myself available, listen, take in, represent and give feedback.

MARY BOSCO FRESHMAN IN NUTRITION/EXERCISE SCIENCE

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Course evaluation is an important issue because it will benefit every student on campus. I think constant evaluation of teachers and courses is vital for academic success.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

All of the candidates are qualified, but I personally have served as a Student Senate intern this past year. As an intern, I am an active member.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I want to be accessible. As a representative of the students of human ecology, I want to serve as the voice of the students.

JESSICA RAILE SOPHOMORE IN HUMAN ECOLOGY AND MASS COMMUNICATIONS

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Advising is a strong concern among human ecology students. K-State should implement an advising program that creates an overall standard for each adviser within the college.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

My work as Faculty Senate Representative, Student Senator and on Council has provided me with the necessary skills to represent constituents.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I would like to make students more aware of the accessibility of SGA and create better links between Student Senate and human ecology.

BOARD OF STUDENT PUBLICATIONS

1-year term

DAN CATALDI

SENIOR IN BIOCHEMISTRY, PRE-MEDICINE AND PSYCHOLOGY

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The most important issue for the board is clearly redefining itself. It is time for an overhaul of the bylaws and makeup of the board.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have spent time in the newsroom working for the Collegian. Therefore, I am able to understand the day-to-day realities of a publication.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

The key to increased communication is increased exposure. The board needs to let people know it exists. The Collegian is an excellent resource for this.

BRANDON KONDA

SENIOR IN HISTORY AND POLITICAL SCIENCE

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The most important thing is restructuring the board's bylaws. There needs to be some streamlining to help reduce any conflicts of interest that might exist.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have experience both at Dodge City Community College and here at K-State, including serving on Privilege Fee Committee this year.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

The best way is simply to talk to students and ask for their input

APRYL MATHES

SOPHOMORE IN ADVERTISING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

I think students need to be better informed on issues and perhaps rely on more sources than solely the Collegian.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

After a couple of years, I've got the hang of how things work and see how to go about addressing issues.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

I'm pretty approachable and always up for one-on-one communication, or we could do a group thing.

Publications board responsible for corporate financial health

ANGELA KISTNER

Kansas State Collegian

The Board of Student Publications, which oversees Student Publications Inc., has made headlines in the past month.

But students who plan to vote in student elections may not know what the board is and what it does, though they will elect its members this week.

Board Secretary Ashley Schmidt said the board controls overall aspects of the Collegian, Royal Purple yearbook and campus phone book.

"We serve as the governing body for Student Publications. We don't control day-to-day operations of what goes on," she said.

Board Chairman Todd Simon, also director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, said the board is not like other boards at K-State.

"The students who are elected to this board of directors become the biggest part of the policy-making body that actually runs an independent corporation," Simon said. "The biggest responsibility of the board is to oversee financial operations of the corporation."

Students who are elected to the board will have to attend two different types of meetings, Simon said.

He said regular business meetings deal with financial matters, working with proposing a budget, contracting issues, student salaries and permanently employed staff salaries. He said these meetings occur at least once a month.

Simon said the selection meetings for Collegian editors, Royal Purple editors and advertising managers are a different type of meeting.

"If things go right, you have plenty of applications, and it takes a long time to interview everyone," he said.

The board has two standing committees — finance and personnel. Every board member has to belong to one of the two, Simon said.

Simon said he is also going to propose a bylaws and policy committee, in an effort to make changes to the board's organization.

"Anyone who is running can anticipate a fairly busy year in reviewing all bylaws and policies," he said.

Schmidt said the time commitment varies.

"A regular member of the board's time commitment is about an hour a week, but someone in charge of finance committee has a huge commitment," she said.

Schmidt said there are certain characteristics voters should look for in a candidate for the board.

"Someone that's familiar with the publications and how they run. Someone who wants to be involved in the overall management, but is not interested in controlling things like content and day-to-day matters," she said. "You need to be open to new ideas, but know the limits to your power."

2-year term

CARLTON GETZ

JUNIOR IN ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEERING

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Clarifying the board's managerial role, gaining additional student input and continuing to improve financial management.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have worked in the past year to reduce Student Publications' reliance on student fees while ensuring operations remained unaffected. I intend to continue these efforts.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body?

Students should take time to write publications. Board members need to continue efforts to incorporate student opinions.

RUNNING ON EMPTY fine arts council

Council brings performances, exhibits to campus

AMY EBERT

Kansas State Collegian

Fine Arts Council allocates more than $295,000 of privilege fee money each year to the promotion of cultural events on campus.

Its current members are looking for students to serve on the council. No one filed for the two open positions.

The 17-member council consists of nine students and eight faculty members from the fine arts units at K-State. Five of the students are elected at-large by the student body.

Judith Zivanovic, associate dean of arts and sciences and member of the council, said she thinks there are a number of students who are qualified to fill the open positions.

"I think there are a number of students interested in the cultural aspects of campus, but they must be unaware of what we do as the Fine Arts Council," Zivanovic said.

Students interested in running for one of the positions can pursue a write-in campaign during elections, or could be elected without even wanting a position. Gayle Spencer, coordinator of Student Activities and Services, said many people have been elected to a position with just one or two votes.

"Literally, there have been people who have written in their own names, and then had a couple friends write-in their name as well, and they have been elected," Spencer said.

The primary mission of the council is to bring fine arts to the campus through performances, exhibits and other student activities.

Groups such as the KSU Potter's Guild and the Flint Hills Poetry Society benefit from the funding. Also supported by the funding are departments such as the art, speech and music departments.

K-State students receive a discount for tickets to events at McCain Auditorium because of the funding received by the Fine Arts Council.

"Almost anything you see from a poetry reading to an art exhibit to a lecture on music, it's probably funded by the Fine Arts Council money in some way," said Wendy Strevey-Tien, senior in secondary education and council chair.

Zivanovic said the council has an important role to fill in student life at K-State with its support of fine arts.

"To be a really well-rounded student, you need to have a well-rounded campus with academics and a cultural life that contributes to the student's academics," she said.

RUNNING ON EMPTY union governing board

Board regulates Union policies, student services

WYNN DALTON

Kansas State Collegian

The Union Governing Board approves all policies governing the K-State Student Union.

Apryl Mathes, UGB member, said the board is important because it offers a balanced view on issues concerning students and the Union.

"We have the director. We have students. We have ex-officio members to have a balanced view of what goes on in the Union because the Union is considered the hub of student life. It helps to have a lot of input on issues that are going to affect the students when it comes to the Union."

Ten students, three faculty and one appointee of the KSU Alumni Association serve as voting members and meet at 4:30 p.m. every other Monday. No students filed for election to the board this year.

UGB President Patrick Carney said the board has a strong responsibility to make the Union a successful activity center for students.

"The Union is the center of student activity for our university. It houses and helps to organize at least 100 to 150 student organizations a semester. It houses our Student Governing Association and our Union Programming Council, and so many other different functions that basically impact every student and every faculty member and every staff member on the K-State campus."

Union Director Bernard Pitts said UGB focuses on service to students.

"The board assures students that the policies are student-friendly and maximize student opportunities," Pitts said. "It is a vehicle for campus input that could change or impact student services available here in the Union."

UGB is supported by the Union staff members who assist the UGB by advising on matters concerning program development, program budget and volunteer student personnel. UGB is also supported by the K-State Student Union Corporation Board of Directors who meet once a year in May to approve the final budget.

Carney said he is disappointed that no one has registered to run for these vacancies and said he hopes students will come forward to be a part of this active voice.

"We are right in the midst of starting the construction phase for the Union for its renovation. Right now more than any other time, we need to maintain a very strong student advocacy on the board. One that is tempered with what students want while keeping in mind what is needed for the Union to be successful," Carney said.

Pitts said UGB is a great opportunity for students who wish to serve their community.

"It provides students who wish to provide service to the campus, a leadership position that may enhance future careers," Pitts said.

Councils allocate money to college organizations

MIKE BURGESS

Kansas State Collegian

College councils have a wide range of responsibilities, including allocating funds for their college and organizing student activities.

Ryan Lauder milk, senior in pre-optometry and Spanish and president of Arts and Sciences Council, said Student Senate governs campuswide, but college councils are smaller governing bodies for each respective college.

He said the duties of the college councils differ from college to college, but all councils do business specific to their individual colleges.

"Student Senate allocates money campus-wide, but we allocate money to Arts and Sciences groups," he said.

Larry Erpelding, associate director for agriculture academic programs and Agriculture Council adviser, said councils are a chance for students to have input into what their college does.

"In a nutshell, the college councils give the students a voice in student governments and college-related activities," he said.

Cherie Hodgson, faculty adviser for Business Council, said the council's responsibilities include Open House and SGA fund allocation.

"Business Council members represent students of the College of Business. It is the way for students to have an opportunity to have a voice in how SGA funds are allocated," Hodgson said. "Their two major responsibilities are to distribute the funds allotted by SGA and are totally responsible for coordinating the All-University Open House for the College of Business."

Virginia Moxley, associate dean for academic affairs and adviser for Human Ecology Council, said the Human Ecology Council's role is to allocate funds from student government and oversee college events such as open house, KSU Foundation Telefund and the leadership banquet.

She said some of the members represent the council in other committees as well.

"One member sits on the Academic Affairs Committee, and they review every course and curriculum change," Moxley said. "These things have a huge impact on the student experience."

Lauder milk said Arts and Sciences Council officers serve on the Dean's Advisory Council, composed of deans and students from the different colleges.

Other councils have similar appointments.

"The officers of the council serve as the voice of the college. It would be in students' best interest to keep their council representatives informed of the views and opinions they want brought to the deans' attention," he said.

CAMPUS ISSUES what's at stake?

STUDENT FEE?

Though most campus leaders agree that a funding shortage at Hale Library is a problem that needs immediate attention, there are many views about how the matter should be solved.

The Kansas Legislature and KSU Foundation will most likely contribute at least $300,000 per year to fund periodical, book and electronic resource increases at the library, which ranks 11th in the Big 12 Conference.

Should students pay a privilege fee to fund another one-third of the plan?

REPRESENTATION

K-State's Student Senate allocates a certain number of senate seats to each college, proportional to enrollment figures. But college representation isn't the only alternative.

At some universities, student government is based on living organizations, not college enrollment, or a combination of both. Students who live in residence halls, fraternities or sororities and off-campus housing are given a certain number of seats.

Would this system allow K-State students' interests to be better represented by Senate?

MALL ATMOSPHERE?

The K-State Student Union will begin a massive, student-funded renovation this year. But along with new paint and fixtures, the Union will be offering new choices to students as well.

Some are already in place. The Sbarro restaurant, Commerce Bank and Starbucks are just a few examples of commercial operations that now have branches in the Union. Vending carts were also recently added. Burger King and others are soon to come.

But is this type of commercialization going too far, turning students away from the hub of campus because of a mall-like atmosphere?

PAY FOR WHAT YOU GET?

Nearly every time a privilege-fee increase is proposed, student senators propose alternative funding sources, including the possibility of a more user fee-based campus fee structure.

Last semester, senators suggested a $5 per-visit charge to Lafene Health Center. Administrators quickly voiced their opposition to such a plan.

But should students be forced to pay for services they don't use? Would a user fee-based privilege fee system, where students only pay for services they utilize, be a better way to collect student money?

BICYCLE FACILITIES

They're everywhere — sidewalks, paths, racks, streets and more. Bicyclists and their vehicles are common sights on K-State's campus.

With a shortage of parking spaces, should student government encourage the use of bicycles over cars and work to expand bicycle facilities on campus?

Would more bike paths and racks help pedestrians, motorists and bicyclists themselves?

CANDIDATE	Do you support a student fee to fund Hale Library?		Do you support Student Senate membership limits or quotas for greeks and non-greeks?		Do you support further commercialization of the K-State Student Union?		Do you support a user-fee based privilege fee system?		Do you support expansion of bicycle facilities on campus?

Campus remains open despite record city snowfall

KELLEE MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

A record-setting snowstorm of 15 inches, the second-worst snowstorm in Manhattan's history, did not mean K-State would not have classes.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said it was the university's decision to have classes Monday. He said his office contacted the Riley County Police Department Sunday night and looked at the weather reports to determine if classes would be canceled.

"We made a judgment," Rawson said. "We looked at the weather and considered the safety of the students."

Gina Bingham, public service administrator, said employees were told by K-State administration that if they did not show up for work they would have to take a vacation day, sick day or leave without pay.

This statement contradicts the statement made Monday by Gov. Bill Graves, who declared Monday a free day for nonessential state employees.

"K-State should be the same way," Bingham said.

Rawson said the governor's announcement at 7:15 a.m. on Monday would have affected unclassified K-State employees such as maintenance workers, but it came too late.

What do we think?
The Collegian editorial board gives its opinion on Page 4.

Classified employees such as administrators, however, were required to report to work Monday by the Kansas Board of Regents, Bingham said. "I don't know how the board of regents can override the governor's statement," Bingham said.

Rawson said the regents had no effect on the decision to hold classes.

The University of Kansas' chancellor also declared classes in session despite Graves' decision.

Even with classes in session, several tests were canceled Monday.

All chemistry tests scheduled for Monday night, including Chemistry I, Chemistry II and General Chemistry, were canceled because of the number of calls received from students stranded in their home towns, Earline Dikeman, director of chemistry laboratories, said.

"It was a difficult decision, but I had received so many calls Sunday night as well as about 100 Monday from students who couldn't make it back in time.

"We would have had to given a make-up exam anyway," Dikeman said.

These tests were rescheduled for next Monday night.

Rawson said K-State-Salina was closed Monday because of six- and seven-foot drifts.

The Manhattan and Ogden school districts were also closed Monday.

Rawson said crews began clearing sidewalks Saturday evening and will probably continue through tonight.

"I think the crews did a very good job, as good as they could," Rawson said.

The city's traffic emergency declaration was lifted Monday after being declared this weekend, and the snow and emergency route ordinance is no longer in effect for Manhattan.

Riley County Police Department said several roads around Manhattan were closed this weekend, but road conditions have improved.

There were no significant injuries reported because of cars sliding off the roads. The Associated Press reported two deaths related to the snow-covered roads.

MAJOR STEPS FORWARD

MAJ. STEVE DORFMAN IS THE RECIPIENT OF THE COL. LEO A. CODD AWARD. DORFMAN WAS RECENTLY PINNED BY HIS WIFE, VICKI, AND HIS DAUGHTER SEASON AS HE ADVANCED FROM CAPTAIN TO MAJOR.

Commandant of cadets honored as best instructor

KELLY DICKSON
Kansas State Collegian

The name Col. Leo A. Codd might not mean anything to the average citizen, but Maj. Steve Dorfman is the recipient of the award that bears his name.

Codd was an ROTC graduate and a lifelong supporter of ROTC. The National Defense Industrial Association, where Codd worked for 40 years, sponsors the award.

Col. Stan Weir nominated Dorfman for the award, which is for the Outstanding Air Force Reserve Officers' Training Corps Instructor of the Year.

"You don't nominate just to nominate, you nominate someone who is worthy of getting the award. You always try and recognize your good people. Luckily enough we won this time," Weir said.

Competition comes from the 144 universities with ROTC units plus headquarters, Dorfman said.

Nominations are first sent to the different regions.

"Our region has 33 detachments in it. Our region commander sends in his nominations. Then his nominations go to headquarters," Weir said.

The award is given in the Air Force, Army and Navy. It can also include Marine officers. There are five criteria by which the recipients are selected: job performance, special training projects, significant self-improvement, additional duties and civic activities.

"I would say that the job performance category is significant along with the special training project area because it is an instructor award," Dorfman said.

In the special training projects category, Dorfman stands out because he is in charge of 216 cadets for six weeks this summer at field camp.

"My job is to make sure the staff is trained and they know what they are doing. And to make sure that the kids are safe and trained right. We are responsible for the pre-planning, pre-organizing and actual implantation of the camp," Dorfman said.

Dorfman is the commandant of cadets for AFROTC at K-State and has been recognized for his skills before. He was the Northwest Region Commandant of Cadets of the Year for 1997 and was awarded the Meritorious Service Medal, Air Force Commendation Medal and other awards.

"This is probably the most significant award for an APAS, Assistant Professor of Aerospace Studies, at least the top award I have heard of. It is the top Air Force ROTC instructor award," Weir said.

"It will be one of those things that will be mentioned here and there.

"It won't guarantee anything, but winning a national award like this makes you stand out among your peers. It will be something that might make a difference at the next promotions board along with other things that show you have a progression of succeeding at the job and have been recognized."

Student injured in auto accident to go home today

JOHN HENDERSON
Kansas State Collegian

A K-State student who was hit by a car while crossing Denison Avenue will be released from Mercy Health Center today, her roommate said.

Mindy Hines, freshman in musical theater, will return home to Topeka with a broken right leg and stitches along her scalp, said Anastasia Watson, freshman undecided and Hines' roommate.

"She's doing really well," Watson said. "She's had really high spirits through it all."

Hines said in a phone call from her hospital room that she didn't remember anything about the accident.

"The first thing I knew, I was in the hospital," she said. "All that is gone. I remember saying, 'I couldn't have been in an accident. I don't have a car.'"

Watson was working in the lobby of Goodnow Hall at 10:44 p.m. Wednesday when Hines was hit. She said she didn't see it happen, but Hines told her later that she was hit on the right side and knocked headfirst into the car's windshield, which cracked.

Hines' lower right leg broke in three places, and she now has a metal rod implanted to help the bone heal. Hines had been walking home to Goodnow from a theater rehearsal at McCain Auditorium and crossed Denison at the crosswalk near Platt Street. She said she was more than halfway across the street when she was hit.

Hines said that the day after the accident, her room was flooded with calls made by people who had narrowly avoided accidents at that particular crosswalk.

"I hadn't realized it was that bad a spot," she said.

Hines said the crosswalk was poorly lit, so she didn't blame the driver for what happened.

"I know that I could do something like that," she said. "Stuff like this does happen."

Hines said surgeons at Mercy waited until Sunday morning to operate on her calf, because the muscles were contracting so tightly around the breaks that the bones would have healed poorly.

"It worked wonderfully," she said. "I didn't have to have

The consensus on the planning behind the alumni center at Thursday's meeting of the Campus Development Committee seems to be "Mistakes were made, but it's time to move on."

Richard Hayter, committee chair, said the site selection process did not include the committee because of a timing problem, mainly because the site was chosen last summer before the committee had been revitalized and he was installed as chair.

"Unfortunately, for a period of time, the committee was inactive," Hayter said. "I don't think there was a conscious decision to avoid the committee. I agree the process wasn't perfect, but I don't think we should attempt to delay the project because of the process."

Hayter repeatedly told committee members the project should be viewed in light of the new master planning document, "People, Principles and Process," and evaluated within its guidelines.

The alumni center project became the main topic of discussion at the meeting since principal architect Bill Livingston, of Wichita-based Gossen Livingston Associates, presented the project for the first time to the committee. Gossen Livingston is the KSU Alumni Association's architecture firm for the $6 million, 40,000-square-foot center that is planned for the southwest corner of campus near Memorial Stadium.

The Campus Development Committee, consisting of faculty, staff and students, advises the administration on campus facility planning and construction issues. The committee is also developing a long-range master planning document for K-State, which was to be approved Thursday but was tabled until

3rd court date set for basketball player; lawyer should file motions by March 20

Manny Dies appeared in court Monday morning, where his attorney said he would be filing a number of motions on behalf of his client.

The nature of those motions is unknown, but the motions should be filed with Riley County District Court before March 20, when Dies is scheduled to appear in court again.

Dies is charged with transporting an open container of alcohol and obstructing legal process.

Antonio Rodriguez, Dies' passenger, pleaded guilty to possession of marijuana Feb. 27, according to an agreement that he would not be charged with transporting an open container of alcohol.

Dies was arrested the morning of Feb. 22 on the alcohol and obstruction charges in addition to charges of possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia. Marijuana charges were never filed against Dies.

Dies, a K-State power forward, was suspended from games against Texas A&M, Missouri and Colorado. He played in Friday's game against KU in Kansas City, Mo., where the Cats lost 68-61.

Travel program gives Wildcats wings, arranges for students to study abroad

K-State's International Program helps student groups or individuals arrange trips abroad.

The program has two different travel programs. The first is a study-abroad program, in which students travel to a foreign country for a semester or a year as an exchange student. Students can also go on group studies, which is a shorter program of two or three weeks, led by a teacher at K-State.

"We help the students and teachers with arrangements such as airline tickets and transportation for when they get there," said Jerri Romano, outgoing coordinator of the group study abroad program. "We want students to experience travel and learn about the world before they have a real-life job."

Romano said they have helped people organize trips to Paris and London.

"The trip to Paris and London was very popular," she said. "There were 22 people we accounted for on that trip."

The nine-day trip to Paris and London was led by Torry Dickinson, assistant professor of women's studies.

"The International Program helped us with many of the arrangements through EF Educational Tours," she said. "A lot of preparations were made, and it took about 14 months for them to set up the tour."

Romano said the Office of International Programs also arranged a trip for students and teachers to go to Africa.

"Jerri and others handled our flight arrangements and worked with travel agents to get the best rates, prices and connections for us," said Ted Cable, professor of horticulture, forestry and recreation. "They took care of all of our visa requirement and collected our passports for our safe travel."

Romano said trips abroad with the program let students travel at a lower cost.

"The students can go see the world for less expensive rates," Romano said. "There are group and student rates, which make the trips less expensive."

The International Program, in Fairchild Hall, will be offering trips to Eastern Europe, Switzerland and Italy, Costa Rica, Scotland and London, and Spain. They hope to arrange trips to China and Australia in the future.

Massachusetts Supreme Court asked to reinstate au pair's murder charge

BOSTON — Prosecutors asked the state's highest court Monday to reinstate Louise Woodward's murder conviction and send the English au pair back to prison, arguing that the judge at her trial had no right to throw out the jury's verdict.

"The only one who could say what the truth was, was the jury," prosecutor Sabita Singh told the Supreme Judicial Court. "The judge had no reason to touch the verdict."

The defense, however, contended that medical evidence showed Woodward did not kill the 8-month-old boy — an argument that got a skeptical response from the court.

"You're asking us, who are not trained in this area, to say that your evidence is so clear that it simply shuts the case down?" Justice Charles Fried asked defense attorney Andrew Good.

"That's correct, your honor," he said.

Woodward, now 20, was accused of shaking and slamming Matthew Eappen to death. The defense contended he succumbed to injuries sustained weeks earlier.

A jury disagreed and in October convicted Woodward of second-degree murder. One week later, Judge Hiller Zobel reduced the conviction to involuntary manslaughter and set her free, sentencing her to the 279 days she had served already since her arrest.

If her murder conviction is reinstated, Woodward will have to serve at least 15 years in prison. Prosecutors said that if the manslaughter conviction is allowed to stand, she should at least be re-sentenced more harshly. Manslaughter carries up to 20 years in prison.

It could be months before the court decides.

Woodward was ordered to remain in Massachusetts while the case is appealed, and was seated with her parents during the appeals hearing.

WORLDREPORT

Ethnic Albanians cry for NATO support, demand protection from Serbian police

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — Seventy-five thousand ethnic Albanians poured into Kosovo's streets Monday to demand foreign help against a Serb police crackdown, and diplomats meeting in London took action: They called for an arms embargo against Yugoslavia and ordered it to pull riot police out of the turbulent southern province.

In a rainswept construction yard in the Kosovo town of Srbica, the bodies of dozens of ethnic Albanians slain by Serb police were lined up in two rows, heads and limbs protruding from a single long white sheet. A tractor lumbered in, dumping another corpse.

Angry Albanians demanded that foreign experts examine the bodies of the scores killed in last week's crackdown, which they said included children and the elderly — some burned beyond recognition.

In the provincial capital of Pristina, ethnic Albanians waved banners with messages pleading for help. "Europe, where are you?" one sign, written in English, demanded. "NATO, wake up!" another said.

Whether the diplomats' support for a U.N. Security Council resolution imposing a comprehensive arms embargo would be enough to satisfy them wasn't clear. Some were hoping for military intervention.

The diplomats — from the United States, Britain, France, Germany, Italy and Russia — said President Slobodan Milosevic will face further sanctions unless special police units are withdrawn from Kosovo within 10 days.

Students given resources to aid in job-oriented decision process

► K-STATE SERVICES OFFER TIPS FOR STUDENTS IN NEGOTIATING SALARIES, WAYS TO APPLY SKILLS.

SARA ZENGER
Kansas State Collegian

Most students are so concerned about landing their first jobs they don't consider what to do when they receive offers from more than one company.

Career and Employment Services has several resources students in this situation can use in their decision-making process.

"There's more to getting a job than having a degree," said Tracey Fraser, director of Career and Employment Services. "By negotiating salaries and looking for an environment where you can apply your skills, students can get the most out of the job-searching experience."

Fraser said it is critical for students to be prepared for the negotiating process.

"When negotiating, the prospective employer needs to be educated as to what the fair market value is based on your skills and industry," Fraser said.

Career and Employment Services has several resources students can use to help determine a reasonable salary range.

The Salary Survey uses the cost-of-living index to determine the variation in living expenses across the United States. This resource provides quarterly information that can help prospective employees compare salaries among different cities.

Career and Employment Services also provides salary data from the previous K-State graduating class. Fraser said students can use this information to determine a potential salary range.

"The salary information from the previous class can give students a pretty good sense of where they might fall," Fraser said.

The Salary Calculator is an Internet resource that can help students compare salary offers nationally and internationally. Students can enter a salary amount for one city, and the site will calculate the amount it would take to have the same standard of living in another city. Career and Employment Services provides this resource as a link on its home page.

Even though salary is important to consider, there's more to a job than making money.

Jenny Palmer, senior in human ecology and mass communications, said although she expected a decent salary, it wasn't the deciding factor in her job search.

"I knew I wanted to stay within the Midwest. I was also looking for a good training program. My biggest criteria was that I was able to do what I wanted to do," Palmer said.

Fraser said students should consider the environment of the company and other personal issues when making career decisions.

She said students should communicate with a potential employer as much as possible in order to get a feel for the company.

"I always encourage students to think about the process as a two-way street," Fraser said. "I think it's important job seekers remember that although an employer offers you a position, it isn't necessarily the best fit for you in terms of work environment or personal issues."

Dustin Petz, senior in agribusiness, said he considered several characteristics of a job and company before accepting an offer.

"My main criteria were challenges and opportunities with the job, the overall attitude and feeling of the company, a sense of the business as a whole, salary, the way the facilities are managed and maintained, training programs, and benefits and perks. I also considered if they just meet my goals as a whole," Petz said.

Petz said it's important for job hunters to assess their values and goals in life and to learn as much about the company as possible before making the final decision.

"Make sure you know what you want, and write out lists of things you like and don't like," Petz said.

"Be sure you come to the interview prepared with a list of questions. Find out why they do things the way they do,"

Multimedia performance to promote Asian-American Awareness month

BRENNALLEY
Kansas State Collegian

By promoting Asian-American awareness, members of the Asian-American Student Union said they hope to break stereotypes.

Students will have the opportunity to see multimedia performer Dan Kwong act in "Smash Hits and Pop Flies" on Friday. The show is a combination of three of his one-man acts and part of Asian-American Awareness Month.

The Chinese-Japanese-American performer uses video and music to demonstrate the role of Asian-Americans in the industry, said Lisa Yi, adviser to the Asian-American Student Union.

Yi said Kwong's performances start seriously and add humor covering issues such as racism, sexism and ageism.

He also deals with how sexuality, inhibitions and stereotypes are felt, especially by the Asian-American male.

Sook Siyajuck, president of the Asian-American Student Union and junior in management, said the performance should reflect how Kwong's parents raised him in comparison with other American families.

"His skits deal with being Asian-American and the obstacles that were going on as he grew up," Siyajuck said.

Yi said this year's theme, "Rising Sun: Shedding Light on Asian-American Culture," is encompassing because Asians come from different countries.

"Most people forget that Russians are Asian," she said. She also said the sun is a strong motif in most Asian cultures.

Also included in the week's events is "Taste of Asia," a gathering for tasting Asian food at 5 p.m. March 18 at the International Student Center.

"What is a bigger draw of people than food?" Yi said.

"There will be students of different Asian descents like Thailand, Korea and China."

Siyajuck said there will be explanations of what kinds of spices are in a variety of dishes.

There will be a representation from as many Asian countries as there are attending K-State including India, Laos, Malaysia and Vietnam.

The student organization winds up the week with a free showing of "The Joy Luck Club," which features several Asian cast members, at 7 p.m. March 17 in the Union Little Theatre.

Voters displace president in Colombian election

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOGOTA, Colombia — Dispirited by a mounting guerrilla threat and allegations of vote-buying, voters chose ex-guerrillas and anti-corruption candidates in elections Sunday for a new Congress — the institution widely considered the nation's most dishonest.

However, President Ernesto Samper's scandal-ridden Liberal Party, its entrenched political machinery giving it a big edge, was expected to maintain its majority in both houses of the national legislature, according to official results and exit polls. The party now controls nearly 60 percent of the seats in each chamber.

Opposition candidates were nevertheless among top finishers in the nationwide Senate race and in several key House races.

With 82 percent of the vote counted, the top finisher for the 102-seat Senate was Ingrid Betancourt, a Liberal dissident and Samper critic whose "fresh air" campaign distributed surgical masks to voters.

She was followed by incumbent Fabio Valencia, head of the main opposition Conservatives and a fierce Samper foe, and newcomer Carlos Moreno, an independent populist who reached into his own pockets to pave Bogota's streets.

Results for the 161 seats in the House remained sketchy and national election officials did not provide a breakdown of how the significant parties fared in either chamber.

Winning the most votes among 18 candidates who will represent Bogota in the House was Antonio Navarro Wolff, an ex-guerrilla voted mayor of the year for 1997 by business leaders for ridding the southern city of Pasto of municipal corruption.

But many lawmakers closely associated with drug corruption won election, including Carlos Alonso Lucio, who finished 10th in the voting for Senate. A vehement opponent of extradition while a House lawmaker, Lucio has made periodic visits to jailed Cali cartel drug bosses.

The following were omitted or published incorrectly in the Voters' Guide. Below are the correct biographies.

BRIAN WETTA

BRIAN IS A FRESHMAN IN SECONDARY EDUCATION RUNNING FOR STUDENT SENATE

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

The funding of Hale Library journal subscriptions is a significant concern that needs special attention and action taken through responsible funding options.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

Participating in SGA as a senator and intern shows my dedication to students and my hard work, making me an experienced and qualified individual.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body.

I will continue to encourage students to become familiar with their senators and to maintain contact with them so their personal opinions may be voiced.

MELANIE J. TULL

MELANIE IS A JUNIOR IN PUBLIC RELATIONS RUNNING FOR UNION GOVERNING BOARD

1. What do you think is the most important issue facing K-State students in the coming year and what should be done about it?

Communication between students and the Union during the Union renovation is an important issue. Students need to be made aware of changes they'll be facing.

2. What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I'm an approachable person. I have energy and drive, and I'm interested in the issues students deal with on an annual basis.

3. Describe what you will do to increase communication between Student Governing Association and the student body.

Create opportunities for students to voice their opinions and concerns about the renovation and UGB policies.

KSU should have closed classes because of snow

President Jon Wefald's unwillingness to call off classes at K-State because of weather is legendary.

This time his stubbornness went too far. In the name of education, he has kept classes in session and students have braved chilly winds and thick snow to attend courses with mandatory attendance. But, this storm was different.

This weekend there were rain, sleet, high winds and then snow. A lot of snow. By Sunday afternoon, a severe winter storm dumped as much as 15 inches of snow in northeast Kansas.

Manhattan experienced the largest 24-hour snowfall ever recorded in the month of March.

Beyond the usual bad-weather grumbling and inconveniences, safety was a legitimate concern for students, staff and faculty required to be on campus Monday.

Gov. Bill Graves declared a state of disaster emergency and gave state employees the day off. The Manhattan school district canceled classes, and students with children were left with few options. Both K-State-Salina and Washburn University were concerned enough to cancel classes.

The Manhattan Post Office didn't deliver mail. Travel in to and out of Manhattan was nearly impossible, as Interstate 70 was shut down Sunday from Topeka west to Junction City. There were stranded vehicles along highways and city streets. Many businesses in town never opened or closed early.

The quick and furious nature of this severe winter storm hit Manhattan hard and left emergency service personnel, road crews and the National Guard scrambling to help those stranded.

Monday morning, students faced digging out of driveways and maneuvering on ice-packed streets. Students close enough to walk had to deal with bitter winds, snow-drifted sidewalks and professors who canceled classes.

K-State students can handle bad weather, and there's no reason to cancel classes each time it snows. This is not about a day off from classes, Wefald. It's about putting the personal safety of students on the line for one day of classes.

Senate mistaken about Hale plan

I am writing to respond to comments that several student senators made about the lack of central administration and library administration support for Hale Library. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

Since fall 1986, the central administration has made the library its No. 1 priority. Monies consistently have been reallocated from all colleges across K-State. For example, more than $1.3 million in base money has been permanently reallocated to the library since 1986. In addition, before the construction of the new library, there has been a one-time reallocation of $1.97 million in the past decade.

Moreover, since the library has been built and opened, $7.35 million of one-time money has been reallocated to the library. This decision was made by the administration to allocate monies to fund state-of-the-art communication connections and equipment.

This is a 10-year total of $10.64 million base and one-time reallocations. In short, no other cost center at K-State has received this kind of funding since 1987.

This brings me to the present. The library funding task force was created last fall to evaluate the library's situation and design strategies for the future. This task force issued its report in October 1997 and recommended a three-legged strategy for funding the library. Two of these three strategies squarely put the ball in the administration's court.

The first leg of the new financing plan for the library involved the state. The Kansas Board of Regents approved the university's request to forward to the governor for his consideration a dedicated other operating expenses appropriation for the libraries. President Jon Wefald specifically contacted Rep. Kent Glascock and asked him to intercede on our behalf with the governor.

This effort was successful, and the governor included the 0.5-percent OOE dedicated to libraries in his budget submitted to the Legislature.

Last week, the House Appropriations K-State Subcommittee and the Senate Ways and Means K-State Subcommittee both recommended the OOE increase of 2.5 percent with 0.5 percent dedicated to libraries. With this 0.5-percent appropriation, the university will dedicate an additional 0.5 percent of its OOE allocation, making a permanent annual allocation from the state and the administration of $327,876.

The second leg of the library financing strategy involved the KSU Foundation. At the urging of the university administration, the Foundation designed an innovative plan for both a short- and long-term strategy, an annual contribution of $300,000 for the library until the long-term strategy of a $10 million endowment is achieved.

The third leg of the strategy for library financing involved $300,000 from a student fee to match the other two permanent commitments.

For several student senators to speak against the creation of the fee based on the lack of university administration commitment is totally and completely incorrect.

The request for the student fee was serious. Of all the student fees either requested or implemented in the past several years the fee to support our library was the most critical.

Obviously, Student Senate operates on the democratic principle of government, and the majority rules. But to assert the university administration has turned a blind eye to the library is simply not true.

In light of these facts, I hope the Student Senate would be willing to re-evaluate its position.

Voting and fees

Responsibility for these privileges should have students running to polls.

When was the last time an election here mattered? Student Governing Association elections have long been exercises in futility. Rarely do voters find candidates distinctive enough from the flock to say, "Hey, they're the better candidate." Generally it boils down to, "I know candidate X, I don't know candidate Y," and thus another ballot is filled.

Whether a privilege fee is created doesn't end my world. A buck-fifty per credit hour is a drop in the bucket come enrollment, anyhow, and if it makes our library more efficient, then here's two bucks, keep the change.

Pity nobody ever asked me.

Is there anything more central to a university than a library? Oh, certainly: the stadium. And the question of stadium expansion was at least brought to the students and decided by an alarmingly small number of voters.

Hale Library is something each and every one of us should get some utility out of at some point in our collegiate careers, and a large percentage of the student population will spend a better part of their lives in there. Either we need to give them enough reading material to make their research effective or we need to give them reading material to sleep on.

And how many students made the decision that this just wasn't cost effective for the 20,000 students of K-State? Twenty-six.
